Mrs. John Pierce-Hope has arrived with her family from Commtá, Brazil, and will again reside in Asuncion for a time. Her married daughter, Mrs. McEwen, came with her, but has gone on to visit her sister, Mrs. F. Middleton, of Ricario. Mr. Middleton's friends will be pleased to hear that his health has improved very much since leaving Paraguay.

PARANA

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

October 7.

French Minister's Visit.

The French Minister in Argentina, Mr. Jullemier, and his suite, accompanied by the Governor of Santa Fé, Dr. Menchaca, arrived this afternoon at 4 p.m. in Paraná in a special steamer from Santa Fé. He was received on his arrival at the port, by the Governor of Entre Rios, Dr. Miguel Laurencena and his ministers, by the French Vice-Consul, Mr. Butaro, the French Society with their president, Mr. Metairie, by the Manager of the London and River Plate Bank branch in Paraná, Mr. Mackinnon and the manager of the Banco Frances del Rio de la Plata, Mr. Garmendia, and by the managers of the cereal houses in Parana, Messrs. Guillen, Solomonoff and Magasanik. After the usual presentation, the Minister and his suite went to reciprocate the attention of the Governor at the Government House. After a short visit he left the Governor and visited the schools. He visited the Normal school, and the Centenario, as well as the monument of Urquiza. After a short promenade in the town he joined the steamer and at 6.30 p.m. returned with his suite to Santa Fé, well impressed with his visit to Parana.

TE AGUILA ES EL MEJOR

Mainly for Women

Conducted by "Egeria"

THE YOUNG-OLD WOMAN

Sometimes one comes across a woman, who will exclaim, "I'm 35 years old; what does it matter who knows it. I don't mind everybody knowing my age!" Probably the lady is 35, and she looks it; also probably ten years later she will proclaim her age in exactly the same words as she did ten years earlier, and the figures will still be at 35!

The cynical man never asks, "How old is the lady?" when enquiring a woman's age. He says, "How old does the lady say she is?" Then he makes a mental deduction, and arrives at nearly the truth. Someone has said, "To-day there are no old women." That someone speaks truly. I have met an old lady—old in years, she is 82, and she has a mind of a woman of 30. By this I do not mean that she has not gathered wisdom or knowledge with her years; but she is as full of vitality and the joys of living as if she had not passed the 40 limit. But the poor body will not respond, unfortunately, and it is a sad sight to see and hear her; to hear her talk, and to see her half blind; to realise that her intellect is keen and bright; and that her body will not lend itself to the desires of the mind. But the one desire of the woman of to-day is to appear youthful, or to retain youth until the holding of it becomes absolutely impossible. In the Victorian era, a matron of 40 summers would don a cap to show that she had left youth's ways behind; she would wear a bonnet with strings tied in a square bow under her chin, and a sober mantle would cover the figure—whether matronly or still retaining the lines of youth. And when what was termed the "middle-age spread" was becoming too apparent, she would take care of draughts, sit in the easiest chair with the inevitable knitting, and always expect a grandchild to be ready to pick up the spectacles which had the invariable trick of falling as soon as they were encased in their leather. But all these insignia of approaching old age had their advantages, too. They proclaimed that with their uptaking, the shackles, as well as the advantages of youth had fallen. The "cap and shawl" lady being no longer an object of desire, might treat the "superior" sex with contempt, realising they had nothing to fear from the pursuit, as "the" sex had nothing to gain. They might, as so many did, take a male lodger without losing their character; they might go here, there, and everywhere, without giving material for the scandal-cats to worry.

But no woman of to-day dare grow old. She must be bright, gay, and attractive. She must pay the price of the Age and her age. She must avoid caps, shawls, and chimney corners as she would the plague. She must buy a lorgnette, and eschew the spectacle case. She dances, plays tennis, is a good sport, and the joys of the table are not for the woman over 40—for alas! the shadow of that "middle-age spread" hangs like a spectre in the air, ready to pounce, when in a moment she ceases to keep watch and ward over her diet. Reminiscences, too, are fatal to the woman in the youth of old age; and when reference is made to the comet, for instance, to see which she curtailed her sleep by many hours, the young old woman will say with a simper, "Oh, yes, I've heard of it, of course; but it was before my time." And the reason why may be found in the picture of the Mother-Queen of England. Queen Victoria stood for the dear old ladies of Britain. Queen Alexandra stands for the young-old woman of to-day. And the more pleasant picture is certainly the latter, as youth is always more attractive than age. But those who would be youthful must be satisfied to go without the compensations offered by age.

"SOMEWHERE TO GO"

Always the cry of the foreigner to Buenos Aires is "There is nowhere to go." And until the newcomer "explores" the environs of the Ciudad it seems indeed that, except for a "paseo" at Palermo or making one of the idlers on the various "plazas," there is no place for recreation conveniently near to Buenos Aires to spend a pleasant, if not a profitable, day. As time passes, however, discoveries are made. There is the Tigre with all the diversions its surroundings offer; but, nearer still, there is Santa Catalina, where there is every facility for the picnic party.

Our party set out on Sunday to find the "monte," of which a glowing description had been given by a friend; but, not having secured the necessary details, we did not exactly know how to arrive at the delectable spot in the quickest way. Studying a time-table we saw there was the "Monte Grande" a couple of stations beyond Temperley; so we shaped our course for that place, as being the sole "Monte" mentioned in our railway guide—on that route. We arrived at "Monte Grande" and looked about us for the "Garden of Eden" of our friend's description. We saw a neat "plaza" in front of the station, and an inviting café opposite (the day was hot); also we saw a row of vehicles waiting for customers like ourselves, and one of our party decided to interview the "cochero." He, however, dolefully shook his head and explained that there were no "montes" at "Monte Grande," which was not fair of the namers of the place to delude the stranger who was looking for recreation in a Republic which is about as "monte-less" as any country in the world. There were numerous "parques particulares"; but not having passport for such luxuries, we turned away from the uncomfortable jehu and proceeded to "explore" the diminutive "plaza" before us; and our favourite amateur was just casting about to focus a beauty spot for reproductions, when the "cochero" approached, and after much explanation we "boarded" the vehicle and set forth with many expectations.

To Santa Catalina was a pleasant drive enough, and on arrival at the entrance gates we were directed to the Colegio de Agricultura to obtain the necessary "permit" for a vehicle to enter the precincts of the sainted lady. That obtained, the rest was pure enjoyment. Up the Avenida Las Rosas, where the pink blossoms were colouring the green trellises, up other Avenidas named after eminent men who were more or less connected with the College, were little trips of delight for overhead the trees made the most glorious of green canopies; and the scent of wood-violets, roses and wild thyme was a rest for the olfactory nerves after the smoke and stir of the never ceasing traffic and work of the Argentine Capital. We saw several picnic parties, for whom provision has been made. Passing from the Avenida Las Rosas, one enters a natural picnic ground, where tables and seats of tree saplings furnish comfort enough for an al fresco meal. A picturesque tree forms a foreground and a background—one for the purposes of our artist, the other for the "posing" of our party. Picking violets was not an unmixed happiness, for the stinging nettle resented the intrusion of the flower-hunters, and in the warmth of an early summer day there were many active "bichos."

We had plenty of opportunity for "Nature" studies, were we inclined that way; but on this occasion we were neglecting the studies and just

"GREATER LOVE HATH NO MAN"

The love of man for woman has furnished many a theme, but perhaps its best known quality is its capacity for change. It has many phases, many degrees, depths, heights; and it varies according to many circumstances; but the love of man for his dog is something different. May be it is a better love, it lasts longer, it is more faithful, it is many things which his love for woman is not. May be it is the fault of the woman; or the virtues of the dog. In Buenos Aires a few months ago there dwelt a man who owned a dog, he owned nothing else, he had a capacity for work, but nobody seemed anxious to profit by the capacity, and a man must live. The man and his dog travelled about together seeking, always seeking that employment which meant the means of living. But unlike the beloved vagabond, things didn't "turn up" in favor of the pair. Eventually applications for loans had to be made, much against the man's will, but of one thing he never thought, that of parting with his "fidus achates," until one of those who was aware of his difficulties remarked on the fine qualities of his canine companion. The man forgot his miseries in the pleasure of extolling his four footed friend; but when he was asked how much he would take for him; he suddenly grew alarmed, sad, apprehensive. "No, I won't take anything, I can't part from my dog," he answered. But needs must when the devil drives. An offer was made, and with much grief on the man's part, was accepted; and the only tie to Argentina being broken, the man enlisted and went to the front. The last mail brought to the purchaser, a letter from the man, asking about his dog, telling of a strange dream in which he saw his beloved torn in pieces and which was nearly true; and he begged a favour of the present owner, that he would have a photo taken of his dog, and sent to him, so that he might at least have a souvenir of his lost treasure. Can one wonder at the faithfulness of the dogs of history, when one knows of the exchange of such sentiment being dog and master? And yet in the communities of men, such societies as those for the prevention of cruelty to animals are necessary! Man is certainly an animal of many sentiments.

inhaling the scents, and sounds, and feelings provided by the Dame in one of the prettiest "montes" aided to beauty by the human; besides, there were students enough—lying on the cleared places under the trees—they were not taking any risk in the abundant grass—or sitting on the benches provided in shady places. We saw dozens of beehives, so Santa Catalina must surely be a place for honey! Our old friends, the eucalyptus trees, were in abundance, too, and sorry we were when the setting sun gave notice that the show was over for the day. We found out all about the place, that visitors are permitted to enjoy the beautiful "paseos"; but, if not on foot, permission must be obtained from the College. Also we found out that the nearest station is Lavallol, and not Monte Grande, the village with the misleading name; or better still there is the station Santa Catalina, but that is to be approached by other means than the F.C.S.

And this is one of the "somewhere to go" places of Argentina within easy distance of the city. There is another where one may obtain another reminiscence of "Home" in the way of flowers—not wild violets, but yellow buttercups, as yellow as those of dear old England, and quite as fine. But this is another story.

SOME WOMEN AND MANY THINGS

An occupation which would seem unusually lucrative is that of designing magazine covers. Miss Neysa M'Main, an American, is reported to make £3750 by her work in this line of art.

The modern wedding veil is a fashion said to have been started by Margaret Tudor, the fourteen-year-old bride whose marriage with James IV. of Scotland led to the union of the English and Scottish crowns.

Most of us imagine the name "benedict," as given to a married man, originated in Shakespeare's delightful fantasy of Benedick and Beatrice. It is asserted, however, that the name was given to a bridegroom long before that time, as a recipient of the wedding "benediction."

Among the strange occupations sought by women these days in England is that of lady groom. The wife of an officer on active service was advertising last June for such a position, to carry with it a small salary and cottage, where the lady groom's little boy and nurse might live with her.

The Conservative and Unionist Women's Franchise Association has been doing a noble work in equipping a London hostel for professional women, who, when thrown out of employment by the war, could stay there free for one month, and look out for other positions.

A question which is agitating certain grand dames at Home just now is the "footwoman's" livery, for the footman is practically extinct for the moment, though the butler, being a person of years and spreading girth, is still in evidence. Even the coachman is now frequently replaced by a woman.

The number of husbands and wives who collaborate in novels, or write novels separately, is legion. Among them may be noted Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, the Egerton Castles, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Askew, Mr. and Mrs. Coulson Kernahan, and lastly Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Onions; while the marriages of Mr. and Mrs. Temple Thurston and Mr. and Mrs. Meade have been dissolved by death.

One of the latest educational novelties in London is the Play Garden School, for very young children who cannot go to an ordinary school. The idea is in harmony both with the Kindergarten and Montessori systems, but is an open-air institution, being carried on in a bungalow closed on three sides but open on the sunniest. Nature study and singing are important features of the work.

Mrs. Ghosal (or Scrimate Evarna Kumari Devi), the sister of Rabindranath Tagore, has translated a second novel of her own into English, to be published by Werner Laurie, under the name of "The Fatal Garland." It is illustrated by Indian artists, and deals with historic events of the fourteenth century Mrs. Ghosal's "Unfinished Song" was published by the same firm a year ago.

An English correspondent writes that although possessed of such clever husbands and brothers, the women-folk of the men who are commanding the army and navy of Great Britain have by no means been content to take a back seat. In fact one of the lessons of the war is to be found in the discovery that in cleverness the men are run extremely close by the weaker sex.

Land of Lilliput.

Conducted by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

I had a letter from Martin Chico, written on Sept. 26, which I meant to have let you read before; but "better late than never" you know, so I will admit you into my private correspondence now; which shows you how much I regard your friendship.

You all know the nursery rhyme of "Little Bo-peep," and how sad the little maid was when she found her sheep, because they did not come home with their tails behind them, don't you? Well this letter which I am giving you the privilege of reading, tells the story of what happened when little Bo-peep fell asleep. It says: "We went for a picnic on Friday. It was the last day of 'lamb-tail cutting, and marking,' and we always have a picnic on this day; it is a fixed fiesta every year. It was a glorious day and we enjoyed ourselves mightily, and I wished you were there dear 'Egeria,' not only to enjoy yourself, but that I might have had the pleasure of reading of our pleasure. We arrived in one field where they had already done about 300 lambs, and were finishing about 300 in the next field over the fence. It was a very busy looking scene. Saddled horses and unsaddled weary 'mokes'; a cart with seven horses in harness and our coach, the 'family coach,' with two tame beasts tied in. Then, the boss rose with a sigh after a short siesta, and everyone else 'got a move on.' Hurdles were piled on the cart, then the men mounted and off they galloped, and finally the family coach trotted (no, it can't trot) quietly on the grass grown tracks to another potrero. There I made myself a cosy nest with the cushions and sheepskins out of the coach; under the shade of another evergreen tree, one of many forming a small copse. And watched the hurdles being put up, in feverish haste, to receive the coming flock of sheep and lambs whose chorused bleating could be heard over the brow of the hill. (We were in the field you cross after fording the San Domingo creek). I aroused myself to see the fun; and was waved into line, with my two boys in tow—a Dreadnought with her submarines as escort, to help to drive the flock. On came the crowd, men yelling or yodling, handkerchiefs waving, discs of tin strung on a wire shaken wildly overhead, and almost drowning the baa-baa of the woolly panting sheep, poor things! The lambs every now and then would break away, and leaping imaginary fences, escape; only to be rounded up again and again. Finally all were approaching the fold—or corral; there were about 10 men, my husband, and the bookkeeper, myself and the two aforementioned submarines. The excitement was great, but above all the noise, the voice of the boss calling "Siga, siga, siga," was heard. And gradually the poor sheep were forced into the fold, and I found myself "shooing" a big black figure of a shepherd, with my arms outstretched to prevent him escaping me. Poor little lambs! Then we had tea, and all my cakes were devoured, and the homeward journey undertaken, the two submarines slumbering peacefully, oblivious of all the bumps and jolts in the old family coach. Can you hear the sheep? I can still hear them, I think they bleated in all the notes of a chromatic scale. There were lambs of all sizes, from about two days to two months. Oh! I wish you could have been there."

I wish I might have been at the picnic too, although what was a "picnic" for the humans, was not exactly one for the lambs, but these things have to be in human economy! And would you also not have enjoyed the fiesta my dear Lilliputians?

Now for a few items about things which are being made public every day. You have all heard about the millions of pounds that are being spent on the war. I wonder if any of you have an idea of what even one million of sovereigns weighs! I will tell you its weight. And then think if you can of the weight of 1136½ millions which is the amount spent for the first year of the war. A million sovereigns weigh 7.8618 tons, so the 1136½ millions of sovereigns would weigh 8935 tons. Think of the gold which has to be found to be converted into so many sovereigns, and of the people working first to get the gold from the earth, and then to make it into sovereigns. Of course I don't say that all the money spent was in the shape of gold pieces. There is such a think as paper money, as we who live here know so well. However, to continue our "if." If the money spent were in the form of sovereigns, they, piled one on top of the other would make a column 1085 miles long; and were they placed edge to edge they would make a line 15,705 miles long, which would extend from Brest in Western France to Singapore in the Straits Settlements and back to Brest. Can you imagine such a pile of golden sovereigns? And what a pity they have to go in warfare!

The war is responsible for the doing of many brave deeds. Fireman Ryan of the Arabic, which was sunk by a torpedo, saved the Captain a woman and a child. Ryan saw the woman and child being knocked about among the wreckage, and he swam to them and held them up until a boat drifted near and took them on board. He swam to another woman, but she was quite dead, so he let her go.

Now I will tell you an amusing story which refers to Australia Day, in far-away Australia. A gentle little widow lady, rather shortsighted, but wholly sweet, selected at random an inscribed gum leaf. She pinned it conspicuously upon the lapel of her coat. Going home in the crowded train, she noticed everybody looking at her; some giggling; some in amazement, and some in frank, tolerant amusement. After making sure nothing was "wrong" with her toilette, she accepted the indications as merely part of the carnival spirit of the day, and even returned a smile now and again. Imagine her horrified astonishment, when, after reaching home, she put on her glasses for a closer view of her trophies, and found the golden legend, "To — with the Kaiser" sprawling across her gum leaf!

The gum leaves were of course from our old friends the eucalyptus trees, and they were used in all sorts of ways to make money on Australia Day, last month. The legend on the lady's leaf was most shocking probably; but it is strange how "most shocking" things are accepted as "most expressive" since the war horrors have influenced people.

I wonder if you know the heirs-apparent to the European thrones. You do know the Prince of Wales of course, and that he was 21 on his last birthday! But I will tell you of some others, if you feel interested enough to read about them. Prince Frederick of Denmark was 16 last March, Prince Leopold of Belgium will be 14 next month, Prince Olav of Norway is 12, and Prince Humbert of Italy, and the Czarewitch are 11, the former in September and the latter in August. Prince Alfonso of Spain was 8, and Princess Juliana of Holland was 6 in May last. The Bulgarian Crown Prince came of age last January, and Prince Carol of Rumania is 22 this month. Prince George of Greece will be 25 next July and the Archduke Charles Francis Joseph 28 in August. The heir to the Serbian throne is 27, Gustav Adolf of Sweden will be 33 next month, and the Crown Prince of Germany was 33 last May. The two oldest heirs are Prince Danilo of Montenegro who is 44, and Prince Youssof Issedin, the Sultan's heir who is 58. And now you have enough to remember for another week, you will be glad to read another story, which this time is about "Pierre's Pet."

Pierre didn't like going to school at all. The little English boys and girls were very nice and kind to him, it is true. Peggy, the eldest child in the little ones' class, took him quite under her wing. Peggy was nine and Pierre was only six—she felt quite like an eldest sister to him she said.

And she would give up part of her play-time hour to teach him English. Already Pierre was beginning to speak English quite well. Sometimes he would try and teach Peggy and the others a few words of French, too; so all the children in the little ones' class could say "Bon-jour" and "Au revoir," "Merci," and "S'il vous plait," which words mean "Good-day," "Good-bye," "Thank you," and "If you please," as most of you know.

And still, though everyone made a fuss of Pierre, he wasn't happy. He told Peggy why one day.

"I to be back in Louvain would like," he said, in his quaint broken-English. "My mother she was laitier there—"

"But whatever is a 'laitier,' Pierre?" asked Peggy.

"One who sells ze milk for people to drink with their cafe—you know what I mean."

Peggy nodded her head.

"Well, in Louvain we did not sell our milk in ze shop as you do here. Mere and I had a little cart—oh, it was so pretty—and ze milk-cans zey would shine like gold."

"And I didn't go to school in Louvain—oh, no. I was always out wiz ze cart and Albert—dear old Albert. Ah, but don't you see, it is Albert I miss—Albert who was my greatest friend."

"Was he as old as you?" asked Peggy, all sympathy for her little friend.

Pierre dried the tears that had gathered in his eyes.

"Ah," he said, "it is zat you do not understand. Albert was ze dog that drew the milk cart for us. All along the streets of Louvain I would go leading Albert. He was a dog so beautiful zat everyone stopped at him to look. He had a long, black coat and big, dark eyes, and he would lick my 'ands and kiss me—oh!"

And poor Pierre fell to sobbing in earnest, whilst Peggy did her best to comfort him.

"It is Albert I miss more zan 'anything," he said, "for Albert didn't come wiz us to England—who will care for him now I am away? Not the Germans, par exemple. Oh, Albert, Albert, Albert!"

And this time Pierre refused to be comforted, nor would he join the children at their games; but with his books slung across his shoulders, miserable and forlorn-looking, trotted away to where his mother was waiting for him in the little house far away from home, which some kind English people had given her to live in until the cruel Germans were sent out of Louvain, and he and mere could go back there once more.

Peggy felt very sorry for Pierre. "If only I could get him another dog to pet, perhaps he wouldn't feel about Albert so much," she thought.

And she told her school teacher all that Pierre had told her.

Now, there are schoolteachers and schoolteachers, as you all know. But Peggy and Pierre were very fortunate in theirs, for Miss Jones, the teacher of the infant class, was a pretty, jolly girl, quite young, and in playtime would enjoy a game as much as any of the children did.

So when Peggy told her Pierre's story she also felt very sorry for the poor little Belgian boy.

"Do you think," said Peggy, "we could get up a subscription and buy him a new dog?"

"You dear child!" exclaimed Miss Jones, "you would never collect enough. Dogs are very expensive things to buy. But, stay—I think I see a way—"

Her eyes flashed and the colour rose to her cheeks.

"Why, your idea is simply great, it. I'll give a shilling. Let's find out Peggy," she said. "Any way, we'll try what the others can give."

There were thirty children in the class, and all who could afford it gave something. They were only too pleased to share in the kind action to the stranger in their midst.

But when the collection had been made, they found that in all, with Miss Jones's shilling counted in, it amounted to half-a-crown, for little boys and girls at school don't have much money to spend.

"I don't see how we can buy a dog with that," Peggy said.

"But we're going to try, all the same," Miss Jones said. "Get on your hat, Peggy; you're coming for a walk with me."

Peggy did as she was told, and very soon she realised what Miss Jones meant to do.

For she was taking her in the direction of the dogs' home.

"You can often buy dogs here for next to nothing," Miss Jones explained, as they entered the wide gates of the home. "You see they pick up all the poor lost dogs and bring them here to save them from starving."

"Oh," exclaimed Peggy, "wouldn't it be too lovely if we could get a dog 'zactly like Pierre had, with long, silky black hair and big brown eyes!"

"We'll try and get one as near like it as possible," Miss Jones said.

They saw the superintendent and explained what they wanted.

"I think," said the superintendent, "I've got the very thing."

And she took them to a kennel where, oh! such a lovely silk-haired black dog was resting, his nose on his outstretched paws, and a look of sadness in his large brown eyes.

"It was found under the seat of a carriage in the Dover express," she said. "We've had him three weeks now, but we've grown so fond of him we broke our rule for once and didn't destroy him. You may have the dog for two shillings, and we'll be only too pleased to think that he is going to brighten the life of the little Belgian boy."

The next day, when the class had assembled, the teacher called for Pierre.

He came forward very shyly to the middle of the classroom.

"Peggy has told me all about the dog you have missed so much," she said, "and we all felt so sorry for you that we are going to make you a little present. Open the door, Peggy, and let the present in."

Peggy opened the door, and then everyone in that classroom, including Miss Jones herself, were struck dumb with surprise at what happened next.

For the poor old dog, who had been so sad and quiet up till now, cleared the schoolroom floor at a bound, and, standing on his hind legs, his two paws reaching up to Pierre's shoulders, he started licking the little Belgian boy's face, giving pleased, excited little whines, and wagging his tail with delight.

And Pierre was even more delighted than he.

"Why, it's Albert," he exclaimed. "My own lost Albert! Ah, but you are good, all of you, to bring him back to me."

To this day the children never tire of telling people about the Belgian boy and his lost dog, and the marvelous way he found him; for—would you believe it, dears?—Albert had been clever enough to follow a party of refugees to Ostend and on to the steamer, whilst at Dover he had hidden under a seat in the train.

With love, from

CONCERT AT SAN MARTIN

IN AID OF PATRIOTIC FUNDS.

During the past month there have been no less than three patriotic entertainments at San Martin, F.C.C.A., which not only speaks well for patriotism of the inhabitants of the suburb, but is indicative of the earnest work they are doing in a good cause. The fact that these functions have been arranged at such short intervals makes it all the more remarkable that there was such an immense audience at the concert held there on Oct. 9 in the Teatro San Martin. The object of the entertainment was in aid of soldier's families and the Red Cross Fund. Arrangements had been made that there should be a fair division of profits between these two patriotic funds.

In spite of the large audience, which assured the function of success, it cannot be maintained that it was an enthusiastic one. There were one or two items in the second half of the programme, which attracted much attention and applause, but generally speaking those present did not warm up until after the comic songs of Mr. Ellis Griffen late in the first half of the programme. He captivated his audience and from thence onwards there was a distinctly easier feeling in the house. This is undoubtedly a characteristic of a mixed audience that is one composed of various nationalities, who strike one as restraining themselves, unnecessarily be it said, before each other. However the entertainment was a success which is the main point.

The stage managing was not of the best, nor was the general organisation, but the audience was sufficiently patriotic not to be too critical.

The arrangements were in the hands of a committee of ladies composed of Mrs. Paton, Sra. Delpech and Sra. Cueli who had worked immensely hard and fully deserved the success obtained.

An item of originality was the programmes. These were beautifully hand painted works of art, for which the following gentlemen and ladies were responsible: Messrs. Emilio Centurion, Ernesto Lacalle, Miguel A. Baya, Misses Susana Ricatea, Elsa Gimenez, Esther Sarmiento, Maria Minrielle, Mabrita Rodriguez, Emilia Jost, Enriquette Alvarez and M. Forest, and almost before one could obtain a glance at them they were all sold.

The programme was opened by an orchestra of string instruments, of which all the violinists were ladies. Professor Luis Gorin was the conductor. They played nicely and well, but orchestration was sadly lacking in the setting of the pieces chosen and there was but little briskness about the music.

The great hit of the evening was the dancing of little Miss Kathleen Furness in the Pizzicato dance. She was especially dainty and charming and was called upon to repeat her dance. Miss Julia Palmer too received long and loud applause for the Slave Dance, for which she was recalled. Miss Tassie Paton's and Miss Violet Birrell's dancing was also greatly enjoyed.

Señorita Becco on the harp received a well merited encore, and Mlle. Deshayes was in excellent voice and rendered Puccini's work very well but a trifle slowly. Mr. F. F. Bideleux was just as good as ever. It was Mr. Ellis Griffin that enlivened the proceedings and brought forth storms of applause. After his laughing song, the house would not rest and for over five minutes stormed for his return. Mr. Murray Brown danced easily and pleasingly, and two charming songs by Mlle. Sonder were included in the programme and were very well received.

Special mention should be made of the generous and untiring work of Mrs. Heslop, who throughout the evening accompanied the various artists.

As already stated, the entertainment was a thorough financial success, and the committee of ladies are to be congratulated upon their patriotic work.

VICTORIA SAILORS' HOME

SATURDAY NIGHT'S CONCERT

Saturday night's concert at the Victoria Sailors' Home was attended by a bumper house, and was a particularly successful one, inasmuch that all the items were encored. The programme, as given was as follows:—Piano solo, "Valse d'Amour," Mrs. C. H. White; duet, "Watchman, what of the night?" Mr. Charles Gabb and Mr. Stanley Parker; encore, "Excelsior"; song, "Motherland" and "Lads in Blue," Mrs. Evans; song, "Stonecracker John," Mr. Lynn Hazetou; encore, "To my first love"; song, "The Last Watch," Mr. Charles Gabb; humorous song, "Burglar Bill," Mr. A. C. Grinham; encore, "Imitations." Interval. Piano solo, "Evening Shadows," Mrs. C. H. White; song, "Up from Somerset," Mr. Stanley Parker; encore, "Glorious Devon"; recitation, "Rube at the Piano," Mr. R. Robinson; song, "A Perfect Day," Mrs. Evans; encore, "A Rose in Bud"; song, "My Little Grey Home in the West," Mr. Lynn Hazetou; encore, "Until"; song, "An Evening Song," Mr. Chas. Gabb; encore, "Two eyes of blue." Mr. Grinham concluded with several songs and recitations, which were imperiously demanded, and left him in a state of exhaustion. "God Save the King!" concluded the concert, the success of which was doubtless in part due to the fact that it was arranged by Mrs. Evans, Matron of the British Hospital. Several nurses gave a dash of colour to the scene by attending in full war paint with their red capes. Mrs. White, of Quilmes, accompanied most sympathetically. Service will be held this evening at 7.30.

LOMAS M.E. CHURCH

SUCCESSFUL BAZAAR

Buzzing with lively interest and merriment, over three hundred people assembled at Lomas on Oct. 9 evening in the hall of the Methodist Episcopal Church to participate in the annual bazaar.

The rooms were lavishly decorated with ensigns and flowers, gaining in appearance by the brilliant illumination which shed a resplendent lustre on all around, lending a rather artistic shade to the stall erections, which were very ingeniously constructed.

The two supporting pillars reaching to the dome, were adorned with a retinue of clever devices, and were surrounded by numerous "stalls" possessing all kinds of articles for sale.

Everyone was unanimous in claiming that the event, regardless of past successes, was a crowning feature, realizing in a few hours, over 500 dollars.

Messrs. L. M. Walcott and P. Shepherd presided over the function, and were the chief movers.

The "stalls" were divided in various categories.

Mrs. P. H. Shepherd, Miss Edgar, and Mrs. Walcott were in charge of the "General Hall." This department was for older folks.

Mrs. Thomson reigned over the "Busy Bees," which was a veritable bevy of bees, and was mainly for children.

The "Provision Stall" was superintended by Miss Fergus, and Miss Bolton.

There were also novelties in the shape of brass tubs which were supposed to embody the occult and cabalistic mysteries of ancient Egypt; fortune tellers, and the last, but not the least conspicuous, was the tea and cake section, which was strongly patronized, and presided over by Miss Bloomfield.

Musical selections were given by several artistes, and a recitation by Miss Prudue.

MISS ADELA VERNE

ENTHUSIASTIC AUDIENCE AT SECOND RECITAL.

Miss Adela Verne's second concert at Cangallo 1362 was attended by a gratifyingly large and enthusiastic audience on Oct. 9.

It was evident that the pianiste had lost none of her former skill during her late illness, and the performance of every item on the programme was received with repeated applause. Among the different numbers it is somewhat difficult to suggest any one as being preferable to the rest. The Scherzo Sostenido; the brilliant execution of Chopin's Sonata op 35; the charming Grave Doppio Movimento with its recurring melody; the solemn and majestic Funeral March, with its wailing chords, were all received with enthusiasm. Liszt's "A Legend of St. Francis de Paul walking on the waves" is a marvellous piece of description in sound, and played with marvellous precision and suggestion. So also the Liszt Nocturne, most sympathetically rendered in its suggestion of the calm of a summer night; La Campanella, embroidered with silvery bell-like melody and rich caprice and fantastic changes of the Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, were all rendered with perfect sympathy, feeling and technique. A perfect avalanche of flowers descended on Miss Verne at the termination, and a large bouquet was handed to her. These tributes and the numerous recalls were well merited.

On Monday, October 18, she will give a third concert in the same hall, consisting of selections by Brahms, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Alkan, Haydn Wood, Sgambati, and Schubert Tansig.

BRITISH CLUB, ALIANZA

FINAL DANCE OF THE SEASON.

After a successful season the British Club at Alianza brought their social functions to a close by a dance on Oct. 9 in their club rooms. Signs were evident of the approaching termination of the season, for, despite the efforts of the Committee to make the affair a complete success, not so many people turned up to enjoy the function as were expected. Those who did make their appearance, however, had reason to be fully satisfied, for a more enjoyable evening's dancing could not have been anticipated.

Although not a financial success, last night's dance thoroughly gratified all taking part, thanks to the efforts of the Committee, composed of Messrs C. A. Prosser, W. Kennedy, J. McGough, J. Anderson, and C. E. Dixon, the latter gentleman performing the duties of M.C. in a very efficient manner. Thanks must also be given to Miss Parke and Mr. McGough for providing a lovely display of roses.

Amongst those present were the following: Misses Maggie Parke, Kate Quinn, Mowitch, O'Brien, Cox, E. Reddy, Maggie Quinn, H. Proud, E. Fagan, A. Whitterson, J. Ardilea, Negretti, Mrs. Harry Cox, and Mrs. Frontroth, Messrs. C. A. Prosser, W. Kennedy, J. McGough, J. Anderson, C. E. Dixon, H. Thomas, J. Fagan, J. Moffatt, A. King, J. McClew, P. Thompson, P. Mullaly, J. and D. Duffey, McCormack and Bros., T. Brien, R. Proud, W. Cox, I. V. and L. Negretti.

The orchestra engaged for the evening was composed of Messrs. Lavers, Frontroth and Oporto, their rendering of the dance music leaving nothing to be desired.

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF R. PLATE

RESULT OF BENEFIT AT PALACE THEATRE.

A total of $2171.30 (net) has resulted from the performance given at the Palace Theatre on September 15, under the auspices of the American Society of the River Plate, for the benefit of the British and American Benevolent Society. This amount includes a special donation of $50.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

Illustrations which we have published have frequently depicted the return of modern armies to the use of middle-ages methods of making war. In the frontispiece this week we show Austrian soldiers preparing an avalanche for Italian troops, just as the ancients fought among the same alps. Rocks and earth are piled on the edge of a cliff, and at the right moment the whole mass is sent thundering down the hillside. The honour of "piping home" a regiment, from the trenches to its billets, is accorded in Flanders when the regiment has distinguished itself at the actual battle front. The mechanism of some of the infernal engines employed by the Germans is now well understood by the Allies who have captured poison-gas plants and fire projecting appliances from the enemy. The "flammenwerfer," or fire-projector has helped the Germans on several occasions to capture trenches from the Allies in Flanders and France. It has an effective range of thirty metres, but the dense suffocating smoke makes its effect much further. The picture of the new German observation balloon, shows quite a marked difference from the old pear-shaped type. The Germans have originated the new balloon, which is peculiarly shaped, to prevent undue oscillation when a captive balloon is used in a wind for observation purposes. The river seen in the next illustration is the Bzura across which the Russians retired before the German advance. The Germans have constructed a temporary bridge, mainly for the use of the infantry. The last two pictures deal with the fighting on Gallipoli Peninsula. It has frequently been recorded that the Turks advance to the attack in dense formation. A correspondent report that they mass themselves in hollows, or under whatever cover the lay of the country affords. Then crowding together they advance slowly, shouting and waving their flags. They furnish striking targets for the guns, and suffer heavy losses.

A SOCIAL EVENING

ST. ANDREW'S FORMER PUPILS' CLUB.

A thoroughly enjoyable social and sociable evening was celebrated last evening at Calle Ituzaingo, by the former students of St. Andrew's Scotch School. It was one of the most largely attended functions that has taken place, and fully 100 lads and lasses were present.

During the year the membership of the Club has steadily increased, until to-day it can be reckoned at full 60 paying members, and considering those who have gone home to the war, these figures are most encouraging.

Last night's social opened with a song competition, in which no fewer than 80 people took part. Little snatches of popular airs were played and mixed up on the piano by Miss Jeannie Miller. Twenty-eight tunes in all were played, and it was the duty of the competitors to correctly name them.

Miss Mabel Dent was the successful lady, guessing no less than 26 out of the 28, and thereby winning the prize—a cut-glass scent bottle. Amongst the gentlemen Mr. Robert Rasmussen and Mr. Cecil Brownie tied with 24 correct guesses.

They tossed for the silver pencil-case presented, and Mr. Rasmussen won, and Mr. Cecil Brownie was thereupon decorated with the Iron Cross.

A pleasant hour having been passed in this way, the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing. Several generous hearted ladies shared in playing the necessary music. Thus it was that an enjoyable evening was celebrated, which gave pleasure to all present. The Club provided refreshment, and Mr. Hardie, in a pause of the evening's jollity, made mention of the special concert to be held at St. Andrew's, Calle Peru, on Saturday, October 16, which is to be in aid of Red Cross and British Hospital Funds.

UNGRATEFUL BULGARIA

A LOCAL DIPLOMAT'S VIEW

BY THE EMIR ARSLAN

The following observations are from an article by the Emir Arslan, late Ottoman Consul General and Chargé d'Affaires, writing in "La Nota." His knowledge of the subject is, if not unique, remarkably extensive and well grounded. He says:

"Before this appears the Balkans also may have entered the Hell Dance, Bulgaria will have begun to move. And Macedonia will also take fire. One remembers that in 1913, while the Serbians and Greeks were fighting to liberate Thrace from the Turkish yoke, Bulgaria was secretly preparing a treacherous attack upon her allies.

"This villainous act of treason was not even justified by good fortune, the traitor was beaten, punished and despoiled of part of the territory taken from the Turks. She drew back, and in silence prepared afresh, meditating revenge.

"When Austria attacked Serbia, everyone thought, 'what will Bulgaria do?' Will she fall on her barbarous neighbour or remain neutral, through considerations toward the Allied Powers to whom she is bound in many ways?"

"Everyone knew very well that it was thanks to Russia that Bulgaria had escaped from Turkish thralldom, and that for a whole half century, Russia had struggled with Turkey for Bulgarian emancipation, and finally made war for no other end.

"To France, Bulgaria owed their economic reforms and the construction of all her railways, all this was due to French credit.

"To Britain she owed also the campaign waged by Gladstone, 'The Grand Old Man,' in favour of the Bulgarians. If, therefore, Bulgaria takes up arms against her protectors, and allies herself with her enemies, she falls into the blackest ingratitude any State can commit.

"Of course, the Chief of the Bulgarian Cabinet, has formally declared that Bulgaria has only mobilised 'to defend her national aspirations' and that she is not taking up arms against the Allies. These statesmen, abuse the phrase, attributed to Talleyrand 'Words were given to Man to disguise his thoughts.'

"We know then, how much an official declaration is worth; especially a Bulgarian one. It is about of as much value as a German declaration, for it has been said truly—the Bulgarians are the Germans of the Balkans.

"Let us turn and consider what are these 'National aspirations.'

"Ghénéadieff, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, of the Stambuloff party, and an anti-Russian told a French pressman 'If France has an Alsace Lorraine to recover, we Bulgarians have four.'

"Nothing less than four Alsaces! These are Turkish Thrace, Serbian Macedonia, Greek Macedonia and the Rumanian Dobridja (Delta of the Danube).

"Bulgaria will not hear of guarantees. She wants all her four Alsaces right away and en bloc. Discussion is useless. She knows that the Allies will not meet her wishes for the simple reason that they have not got what she wants.

"She knows, likewise, that with regard to Turkish Thrace, as the Allies are at war with Turkey, force alone will avail. Bulgaria could if willing, utilise the power of the Allies to recover that Province which she lost by her own fault and her own greed.

"A pithy Arab proverb says, 'The father who does not wish his daughter to marry asks an impossible dowry.'

"For a long time, this business of the Balkans has been the thorn in the flesh of Diplomats and the Powder Magazine of the World.

"Macedonia has always been Tur-

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUDGET

LARGE REDUCTION FOR 1916.

The most fiercely criticised item in the Budget has been the section set down under the heading of "Public Works," in which the sum of $56,068,993 is set apportioned for expenditure for 1915 while for 1916, the sum is $35,598,254 or a reduction of $21,000,000. Further reductions by the Executive have further reduced the amount to $32,528,254. When contrasted with the prodigious expenditures of previous years, these are indeed striking figures. They are dictated by absolute necessity for the money is not there to spend on ornament nor can the fantastic vanities of the "Palacio de Oro" or the Palace of Justice be repeated at present. Certainly the Budget commission has acted well and much better than many supposed they would do.

It is pointed out that from a general deficit of $160,000,000 for 1914, an economy of about one third has been here effected.

It is patent however that various projects grandiose or useful, must wait.

key's weak spot. Yearly it has cost 150,000,000 francs to keep 150,000 soldiers under arms to keep the peace between the jealous races who are not Mohammedans, but all Orthodox Christians.

"It is impossible to conceive the Atavistic hate which animates these people against each other. It is a hate ferocious to excess, combined with an intense contempt.

"Nothing can equal a Bulgarian's hate for a Serbian, unless it be a Serbian's hate for a Bulgarian. With Greeks and Rumanians it is the same. Everyone of the peoples holds the others as nothing, and the frightful thing is that the mixture of races makes a further intricate confusions.

"In addition to all this, these territories have at different times been longed to the different peoples, and each holds that they pertain solely to them.

"When all these folk were under Turkish rule, they held out their hands to Europe and with tears begged Europe to succour them and free them. Now, thanks to Europe, they are independent States, and have their hands out as before, but—this time to see what Europe will drop into them, either as the price of their neutrality or to pay the costs of their armies in the conflict. When every thing has been said, thus it is—every one thinks itself better than the others, and people like these are difficult to conciliate or to satisfy.

"Also, to satisfy them the Powers must have time, they must have victory. And one must wait. But Bulgaria has no patience. "For me," saith she, "the present, the rest can have the future, and perhaps it will be a conditional future—"

"Whence comes the attitude of Bulgaria? It is enough to look at a map of the Balkans to perceive that Bulgaria surrounded by Rumania, Serbia, Turkey, and Greece must by her attitude influence all her neighbours. If she sides with the Germans, she must divide her strength to oppose the Rumanians on one side, and on the other, the Serbians and Greeks. Through her the Germans may open a road to reach Turkey and the Black Sea. Then Constantinople might not be taken, and Russia, inexhaustible in men, but not in munitions, might be paralysed.

"If, on the other hand, the Bulgarians take part with the Allies, and march against Constantinople, the aspect of the war would be speedily changed. Bulgaria is solely inspired by material interests, and all feelings such as gratitude, nobility, civilisation, are "mere words for imbeciles" as the German Intellectuals would say."

[Since the above article was written, Bulgaria has allied herself with the Central Empires].

TEUTON TURKISH CONSUL

THE DISPUTE WITH THE EMIR ARSLAN

HERR BOBRICK'S PETITION TO THE COURTS

The dispute continues between Herr Rudolf Bobrik, German Consul-General in Argentina and the Emir Arslan, from whom the former desires to obtain the seals, papers, and books pertaining to the Turkish Consul-General which office and that of Chargé d'Affaires, the Emir very recently resigned. The circumstances have already been referred to, and "La Nota" now publishes the formal "Demand of the German Consul" to the Supreme Court of Justice.

It is at great length, and after enumerating the reasons why the Emir should be required to hand over the archives, contrary to the wish of the Turkish community, and the benefits to be conferred on the latter by the mild and beneficent attention of Herr Bobrik in the guise of Turkish Consul-General, piously concludes with a desire that "Dios guarde a Vd."

In reply the Emir Arslan traverses destructively the frivolous and impertinent allegations of the preceding document, and points out that the notification to the Argentine Government of Germany's intention to become Turkish Consul General also was made in an altogether irregular and improper manner. He concludes by respectfully requesting the Court to deliver judgment as speedily as may be, as all that he desires "is Justice." Unlike Herr Bobrik, the Emir Arslan does not attempt to drag the Deity into the case with him.

IN AID OF THE IRISH ORPHANAGE

FEIS BANBAN IN SAN ANTONIO DE ARECO.

On Thursday, Sept. 30, a large and representative meeting was held in the Salón Irlandés, San Antonio de Areco, for the purpose of naming a Committee to make arrangements for the grand ball which is to be held on the occasion of the coming Bazaar and Concert for the benefit of the Irish Girls' Orphanage.

The following gentlemen were elected by the meeting to form the aforesaid Committee: Henry Clancy, President; Anthony Slevin, Secretary, and John O'Neill, Treasurer; Vocales Messrs. John Murtagh, Michael Brennan, Jeremías Morgan, Patricio Carey, Peter Farrell, Michael Seery, Patrick Rattagan, Thomas Fagan, Nicholas H. Clancy, Thomas Gaynor, Hugo Cunningham, John Mulvihill, James F. Slevin, Thomas Barber, Patricio Mulvihill, John Clancy (junr.), Thomas Kelly, Patrick Clancy, James Manion, James Brady and James Delaney.

Everything is looking promising for the success of the Bazaar and Concert. The Daughters of Saint Brigid, who are its organizers, have already received very generous responses, both in money and prizes, to their appeal for assistance. It has come to the knowledge of these good ladies that several persons are desirous of contributing animals to be disposed of either by auction or raffle for the benefit of the Orphanage funds. Miss Maria Mooney kindly invites all such to send the animals they may wish to give, to her camp near San Antonio de Areco, where they will be taken care of till such time as they are disposed of for the purpose above stated.

There are others who are wishful to help on the good work, but cannot decide in what form they can do so most suitably. To these the organizing Committee would respectfully suggest that they send their donations in cash.

CAPTURE OF MURDEROUS BRIGAND

COWARDLY SURRENDER OF FEROCIOUS CRIMINAL.

An important capture is reported from Uruguay where a bandit named Francisco Albornoz who has long been "wanted" for crimes innumerable, has fallen into the hands of Justice. This ferocious wretch who, is only 28, has served in two Cavalry regiments the 4 and 6, deserting from both. He has, after the manner of camp bandits been footpad, road agent, burglar, secret assassin and murderer of entire families. He was wanted to call himself Martin Aquino, a worthy of the Juan Moreira type whose very name terrorised districts. On October 3, a party of police composed of an officer, a sergeant and a trooper beat the district for him near the River Timote firing sometimes into suspicious looking dens. This frightened the Bravo for a terrified voice rose from a thicket "I surrender, I yield for Heaven's sake, don't kill me."

He was seized and handcuffed without resistance displaying as much cowardice before armed men as he had previously manifested callous cruelty to the helpless.

The brigand was found well furnished for an extensive campaign. He was armed with a long dagger, a machete, a Winchester carbine and a heavy revolver and carried good field glasses.

He is now desperately anxious to clear himself of any suspicion of being the terrible Aquino, assuring the officer that he was not that person. He is considered however nearly as bad and the police encouraged by this lucky capture are actively pursuing the original Aquino in every corner of the country.

OIL FIRE AT SOUTH DOCK

SMALL BUT OF DANGEROUS POTENTIALITY.

A fire which might have been very serious broke out on Oct. 9, in the North Section of the South Dock, on the ground reclaimed from the River, where now are Petroleum deposits. About 9.30 a.m. an iron tank containing about 1000 litres of oil gave way one side. A jet issuing from it ran towards the engine furnaces and became instantly ignited. The fire immediately reached the great tank which rose in roaring flames and smoke, imperilling also two others of 600 and 800 litres. Happily the Fire Department were equally prompt in their action. The Prefectura of the Port and the Central Fire Station were simultaneously informed and, a few minutes after there arrived, the Central Guard under Colonel Armesto, a picket of Comisaria 22 and a section of the Marineros fully provided with engines. All communication was at once cut off to prevent spread of the flames and a trench was dug for the blazing oil running from the fractured tank. With great quantities of sand in bricks a vigorous assault was made on the fire and in a quarter of an hour its fury was sensibly diminished. Shortly after, the flames were completely extinguished.

It is not supposed that more than 1500 pesos of damage is done but more than $60,000 worth of inflammable oil is stored close by and within 500 yards are great quantities of C. Rivadavia oil. An extension of the blaze might, therefore, have been a veritable catastrophe. The bomberos, marineros and Police deserve credit for their prompt and efficient service. None of the oil is insured.

Sports and Pastimes

THE TURF

PALERMO

The only feature to a day's racing which could be described as ordinary, were three rattling finishes, and this certainly did something to make up for what otherwise would have been a dull meeting. Both weather and track were perfect, and considering how perfect the former was, it is somewhat surprising that a larger number of persons were not present. There was perhaps some wisdom in their staying away, and for two reasons, chiefly on account of the fact that next Sunday is the "great day," the day of the Grand National being run (weather permitting), and as on such a day many hundreds of thousands of dollars will change hands, it was perhaps a wise precaution to stay away on Sunday, particularly as there were upsets sufficient to make the general public and favourite fanciers to lose their money.

During the meeting, only three of these got home, and when they did so, they paid but poor prices.

The classic event in which Dijital, Palanta and Uva Negra turned out was a very ordinary and colourless event, and only one possible point of interest could have been found in it, that was the speculative one of seeing how one of this year's youngsters would shape against the old and tough running stagers. The result only shewed that this year's products are anything but brilliant. Palanta is certainly not the best of the year, but she is quite good enough to furnish some indication of possibilities and no doubt it was mainly for this purpose that she ran. Much valuable information has now been furnished to her trainer to assist him in future calculations.

Dijital made all the running and won practically as she wished, although Palanta ran gamely enough.

Uva Negra paid for her keep for a few days, but as stated once before, we firmly believe that the racing days of this one-time crack are over.

Of course there is one other point to consider. How would Palanta have fared if she had made full use of her light weight at the start, and tried by pace to knock the stuffing out of the heavy weights? It is just a point to remark although doubtless Mingo knows his work much better than we do, and did the correct thing, but the point must arise when the very slow time of 2.19 3/5 is noted. So much for Sunday's classic.

The first event caused the public much discomfort. Their favourite Pregon was beaten by a short head, by the erratic and wicked running Beethoven. It was nevertheless a grand race. Acosta's tactics were the usual ones of taking the lead, with Beethoven just behind him. The struggle that ensued in the run home was great. Beethoven as usual did what he could to push Pregon into the rails, and no doubt had Pregon not been sufficiently ahead he would have been badly nipped. Fenucci rode a good race, and his four kilos advantage, just did the trick. He fell off after passing the post. Bargain ran third, which was quite logical. The time was exceptionally good, for the class of race, 1.36 4/5 for the mile takes some doing.

In the second event Guayabita scored at the expense of Evasiva, with Vizeacha and Lita dead heating for third place. Guayabita shewed herself what we had previously claimed for her, that she was the best filly in the event, but this is not saying much, and although she beat Evasiva easily, it does not take much of a race-horse to do this. The debutante Yerla Mota was very weak.

The biggest upset or rather the most unexpected result (from a public point of view), occurred with the running of the next race, which was won by a complete stranger called Vespaciano, with Testun, a youngster who has done absolutely nothing, and in previous outings has not even shaped as a race horse, running second a length and three-quarters behind. The winner was greatly fancied by his stable, and this was the main cause of the 5000 tickets on him. Very little was public money. Dosel shared the public favouritism with Mahoma, but was unlucky, being shut in at the bend and none too well ridden. He came with plenty of fire and go when he did once get through. Mahoma ran very badly and so did Procopio. As for Cruel he made no effort of any kind. All these latter three can do better, and Dosel is a certain winner soon.

The public found their first favourite romping home when Red Bonnet won his race with great ease from Petit Duc and Banderalo. The winner is an unpleasantly surly runner, though when he likes he can travel very fast. On Sunday Mingo tried an experiment, which consisted in riding him with one spur and thus keeping him straight.

In this event there was a "junta" running, composed of La Delfina and Royal Train. The former had been withdrawn for the first race, and the latter was handed round as just about the hottest "snip" possible. Furthermore Acosta rode him and T. N. for a change took La Delfina. This again attracted much public attention, with the result that Red Bonnet was allowed to pay $4.20. If it had not been for these manoeuvres, the son of Diamond Jubilee would never have paid a cent more than $3.50. The "junta" ran last!

In the sixth race, Cortesia beat Insula by a neck. Cabiria ran third. The result although not quite expected, was a perfectly feasible one, and the greatest surprise of the whole affair was that Cortesia was allowed to pay $19.50. Rosiere was made favourite, on account of the sudden decision to change the jockeys from Gomez to Mingo, and this with Insula so well fancied, allowed Cabiria to pay $39.25 for a place. It was a good race and Cortesia was exceedingly well handled by Bastias in the run home. Our surprise packet Politesse never shewed up at all, and it was difficult with so many runners to judge, how she was handled. The next event was a disappointment. It was won by Mustafá at the expense of Cuaro, but we can definitely say it should not have been, and the order ought to have been reversed. Our reasons are these, San Simon made the running from Mustafá. Just after the start, Cantarina ran into third place, with Cuaro next, and Escandalo last. Rounding the bend San Simon held the rails, and Mustafá ran a shade wide to pass Cantarina who was failing. Cuaro travelled fast and passed up between San Simon and Mustafá, going strongly, and reached well up to Arcuri's stirrups on Mustafá. This was a distance from home, Arcuri then deliberately rode over towards the rails, squeezing Cuaro, who had to pull right back and out behind Mustafá. As this occurred barely 120 yards from the post, Cuaro could not catch up again, and although he ran very strongly was beaten by three-quarters of a length. If Arcuri had not played this somewhat dirty trick, Cuaro would have won. The objection made by Liceri, was overruled after some 19 minutes discussion.

The last race provided a most wonderful finish between Penitelo, Lovelace and Borbollon. Penitelo (Blanco up without prentice allowance), took the lead. Lovelace, the light weight, brought up the rear. In a terrific finish, these three fought out the question of premier honours, and arrived at the post with Penitelo a short head in front of Lovelace and Borbollon a head behind the second.

The whole honours of the running went to Lovelace for this reason. Penitelo, although a winner from start to finish, made the pace a crawl, and yet when it came to a hard ridden finish, Lovelace, for the first time out over 2500 metres, and for the first time up against some real "stuff" did not knuckle under as is so usual with the light weights and youngsters, but ran on gamely, and very nearly caught the leader. It was a great race and Lovelace was far from disgraced.

This final event put the "tin hat" on the day, and many were the long faces. To make matters worse, the taxicab strike forced many to trudge or travel home in no little discomfort.

LA PLATA

Some interesting racing took place at La Plata on Sunday afternoon, and the results in general favoured the public, who had a splendid day. The weather was perfect, and the condition of the course left absolutely nothing to be desired.

Kiddy won the classic event by half a neck from Carabinero, and once again showed that he is the best horse running at La Plata today, by further repeating this performance in the last race of the day, when he won by 1½ lengths from Monarch, when carrying 57 kilos. C. Capra, S. Ruiz and M. Vignatti each won two races on their respective mounts.

LAWN TENNIS

BELGRANO LAWN TENNIS TOURNAMENT

The finals of the annual open tennis tournament at Belgrano are rapidly approaching, and the past excellent weather has so far favoured the play, so that much progress was made, and only a few matches were down for Sunday's play. Owing to the scratching of Prescott in the Class A handicap, Villegas became opposed to Knight, and this match provided the game of the afternoon. Knight won as was to be expected, and showed once again that experience and court tactics at lawn tennis are the most valuable assets of the game. At the finish he won as he wished. Good as was Villegas' play, he played himself out early on, and Knight had only to turn on steam at the psychological moment and win as desired. The spectators thoroughly enjoyed the event. Some of the ladies' matches are rather behindhand, but in spite of this the finals of the tournament will all be played on Sunday next.

The results of the week-end play were as follows:—

BASEBALL

BUENOS AIRES V. LA PLATA

SUNDAY'S GAME AT TALLERES.

When the La Plata team went to bat first, Sunday afternoon, at Talleres with a large host of spectators at their back, a frantic cheer arose, and for a moment it looked as though the La Plata fighters with their proud heads erect would sweep the very ground from their feet.

Everyone believed that something was on hand, and subsequently they were not deceived.

Tom Smith, the umpire, had no sooner given the signal to commence when the visiting batters, one after another, with an unchecked rush, spotted the ball, and swung at it with such force as to make it seek the outer fields.

These manoeuvres pretty well caught the breath of their rivals, and the Buenos Aires men knew that they were up against it.

For a time it seemed as though they could not overcome their obvious nervousness.

In less time than it takes to pronounce "Przemysl," the visitors had

On the other side, Schick, the pitcher of the La Plata team, who is a wonderful boy in his own way, and also weighs considerably, had a sore arm, and Mason started on the mound for the visitors, with Schick covering short. At the third inning the local players began to take a decided fancy to Mr. Mason's little outshoot and Schick was soon rushed in, for succour. But the homesters were not to be denied and even Schick's tremendous speed, that made good old "Matty" famous, could not retard the eagerness of the local fighters to get at the ball.

At the fourth inning Mr. Schick, La Plata's heaviest hitter, had fire in his eye. You see, in the first two trips to the plate, he was struck out, on the third he popped up a little insignificant fly; but at the fourth he came bouncing on some flying object that was directed by Tuero, and made clean for a homerun to left.

As the game proceeded, it found the score at the finale of the fourth inning, 9 to 4 in favour of the locals, with B.A. increasing in steadiness and strength; but nevertheless both teams showed need of practice. The work is lacking in method, but the raw material is there, alright.

If the boys get things working smoothly and contrive to play a little more "inside" baseball, scores will not mount up like that of Sunday.

The fifth inning was high in blood-curdling spectacles.

Tuero, our local well-beloved pitcher, started off with his usual forte, wriggled and withed, raised his arm, pulled his cap, looked at his Señora and finally pitched the ball and—by that time the runner was on third.

In this same inning Noonan sent a terrific straight at Schick's head, who managed to stop it, but couldn't hold on.

Dawson was injured and had to retire, but as no one had heard the latest reports from the Red Cross Society, it is believed that he is on his way to recovery.

Hitlin showed up well for B.A. both in field routine and at the bat. This inning was a hard-fought one; but the honours rested with the "Cyclons," the local team, scoring three against the "Giants" nil.

The fifth and sixth inning were also strong ones, but discovered a weakening tendency on the part of the guests; and at the seventh it appeared that the "Cyclons" would go on scoring runs until doomsday.

The game was a good one, and not a little goes to the credit of the gentler sex, who were present, cheering enthusiastically for their respective heroes, and keeping the boys doing their utmost.

Box score as follows:—

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R.	H.	E.
B.A.	1	6	1	1	3	0	7	0	0	19	16	8
La Plata	4	2	0	0	0	2	1	0	2	11	9	9

Batteries for B.A.: Tuero and Volkening; for La Plata: Mason and Schick and Vaites.

Umpire: Tom Smith.

Teams:—

Buenos Aires—Volkening, c.; Tuero, p.; Dawson, 1st. base; Houston, 2nd. base; Herrod, 3rd. base; Noonan, s.s.; Hitlin, c.f.; Hendrie, l.f.; Rehmeier, r.f.; Brown, 2nd base; Ainsworth, r.f.

Tom Smith, umpire.

La Plata—Eggers, 1st base; Wright 3rd base; Gooley, c.f.; Schick, s.s. and p.; Sturgeon, 2nd base; Hinchley, r.f.; Wincheabich, l.f.; Vaites, c.; Mason, p. and s.s.

NOTES ON THE GAME.

There were plenty of thrills.

Vaites handled the "Giants" pitchers in good style. He is going to make a very steady receiver for his team.

It was a treat to watch Noonan and Houston operate around second, for the Cyclons. They are two A. No. 1 players.

Dooley, the Goliath from La Plata, was in good form.

Wright, who played with B.A. last week, donned the spangles for La Plata and put up his usual strongholds.

QUILMES LAWN TENNIS CLUB.

Very little progress was made in the Quilmes Tournament this week-end, the only two matches played were:

Gents' Singles Class "A."—G. C. Crispin beat C. J. Bell: 6-5, 4-6, 6-4.

Ladies' Doubles.—Miss Lovett and Mrs. Bell beat Miss Knight and Miss G. Jacobs: 4-6, 6-5, 6-2.

This tournament will finish next Sunday.

GASCON LAWN TENNIS CLUB, BANFIELD.

The Annual Open Spring Tournament was commenced on Saturday last and fair progress was made then and the following day. A very gratifying entry has been secured, especially in the Mixed Double for which seventeen couples have entered. On Saturday Miss Purves and on Sunday Miss Griggs presided at a very well stocked tea-table. Some very interesting matches were played, one of the best being that between Moverley and Pentreath in the men's singles and although the former lost the third set fairly easily the play was always close and of a high standard.

scored 4 runs in the first inning, while Tuero who did the pitching for the local team could not make his ball talk, as he would fain have had it.

Tuero's work was rather erratic, but will evidently improve with further practice.

At the last moment of the first inning, the game gradually assumed a normal aspect, and runs came slowly for the Frigorifico boys.

Noonan and Houston, on the Buenos Aires side, all of a sudden woke up from their deep lethargy—which threatened to last eternally,—rubbed their temples violently and suddenly played a handsome game around the keystone base, and began pulling off some sparkling tricks. Houston pulled down a high fly in short left, that reminded us of perfect big league demonstrations. These two boys with Herrod at 3rd make as solid a foundation as the Triple Entente, and they should find no obstacles in making an airtight infield for B.A.

Hendrie in left will have to get a little more pepper into his system. He is a good outfielder, but a little more ginger would improve his play remarkably. It's the "pep" that gains the golden goose.

Dawson, the cyclonic first baseman, had to retire early in the game on account of an unfortunate injury to his knee.

WOOD-PECKERS OR PENGUINS?

BOY SCOUT BADGES.

(To the Editor).

Sir.—In order to remove all doubt on the subject I beg to inform you officially that the patrol sign carried by one of the patrol leaders present at Mr. F. H. Chevallier Boutell's Lecture on the night of the 6th inst. is the head of the "Venteveo" the woodpecker of this country. Other patrols represented were the cat and the frog. These flags being homemade, from the designs of the writer, I feel bound to defend my work from misconceptions which arise when a woodpecker is drawn too similar to a Penguin and apologising for trespassing on your valuable space.

Yours, etc.,

F. H. H. LOGAN,
Scoutmaster, 1st Quilmes troop.

CHAUFFEURS STRIKE DAY

UNIVERSAL PROTEST AGAINST MUNICIPALITY.

When any body of workers or persons belonging to one trade or "guild" in these days disapproves of a law, they immediately signify the same by striking on Sunday.

Chauffeurs and gentlemen generally of the motor 'gremio' are in active disaccord with the new Municipal regulations on Traffic, wherefore on Sunday at 6 a.m. Plaza Congreso was full of silent cars and recalcitrant chauffeurs. It is calculated that their day's abstention cost them about $100,000, and caused the public enormous inconvenience. It is however the public which always pays in these disputes, either in purse or in person. Those who were returning from the Races, and were wont in minutes of prosperity, to take "taxis" had either to mount the plebian tram or "walk in sinner's ways, and stand where men profanely talk," for the profanity was great.

At 10 o'clock, a "mitin" of protest attended by over 2000 car drivers, was held, and Señores Montesano, Segura, De Marini, Farina and Morotta, all guiders of the steering wheel, harangued the assembly on their anticipated wrongs, and the iniquities of the Municipality. The speeches were received with acclamation, and it was determined to send a deputation to the Minister of Interior protesting against the Ordinance, and requesting its modification.

Shortly after midday the assembly separated, having behaved with the greatest decorum and good order. All day and all night, not a single taxi wheel stirred. There was a heavenly calm and cessation of "honkings" (now unhappily resumed) and the day's record of accidents was amazingly small, in consequence of Jugernauts' holiday. Traffic on Monday was only partly resumed. The question of increased duties on propellant oils is known to be another troublesome point with the chauffeurs.

EL HOTEL "ONELLI"

FRESH ARRIVALS AT THE ZOO.

Three interesting guests are being added to the heterogeneous family which enjoys Municipal Hospitality at Palermo. One is a Durham cow. There seems nothing peculiarly rare and precious here but, the animal is not a mere stray exhibit from the "Sociedad Rural." Senator Crotto has presented it to the Garden as a curio for it is no larger, although full grown than a good sized mastiff. In the Palacio de las Serpientes, Sleepy Hollow has a fresh arrival in a fine boa. He is a great fellow literally weighing about 200 lbs. or so and, yesterday being one of his days of appetite a modest breakfast was served on arrival. It consisted of two large rabbits, two large fowls, two ducks, all in their fur or feathers and a couple of large toads residents of the place. Sr. Boa has gone to sleep till next month to digest.

A marine wolf caught by the fishermen at Berazategui arrives today and a couple of Condors, sent from Mendoza by Dr. Benito Villanueva, will arrive next week. These huge and evil looking examples of Argentine "High Life" of the Cordillera, will join the select assortment of buzzards, vultures and carrion-kites in the great cage.

THE SAN MELITO

Escape from a Submarine

HAIL OF SHELLS IN THE CHANNEL

After some imaginative romance has been published about her, which recalls Blackbeard and Flint, and other worthies of the Carribean Pirate profession, the great oil steamer San Melito has reached this port and her adventure, exciting enough in reality, assumes its true proportions.

Last evening a HERALD representative obtained an account of the attack on the San Melito from Mr. A. Handy, her fifth engineer. The vessel is the largest ship of the oil carrying type in the world, and her dimensions are length, 533 feet; beam 65 feet and draught, loaded, 30 feet. In view of what follows, this great bulk offering an enormous target, is of special moment. The tonnage 25,000 tons displacement and 18,000 dead weight. Her owners are the Eagle Oil Transport Co., of London and Palmer's of Jarrow, built her.

On August 20, the San Melito, which burns oil fuel, steamed out of Southampton, en route for Tuxpan, to load with oil for Buenos Aires. The weather was fine and the ship running light, with only her ballast tanks filled, stood up from the water like a church. This was Friday, and on Saturday afternoon at 3.30, the San Melito was forging ahead off the Scillies. Mr. Handy was on duty at the time when he heard a loud report. The usual speculation ensued, but shortly after the Chief Engineer came down and mentioned that a Hun submarine had come to the surface and was at that moment chasing them with the amiable intention of destroying the ship and her company in the kindly German manner.

When working level with or under the water line in a box of mechanism like an engine room, a landsman would not be particularly exhilarated at such intelligence. The engine room staff, however, went about their work with their customary phlegm, while the reports repeatedly rang louder, followed by the thunderous smack! of shell bursting above decks.

On being first perceived the submarine had imperatively made the emergency signal "Stop Instantly." Captain Jackson however does not take orders from "Squareheads" and he at once brought his ship round to present her stern, she having previously had the enemy on her beam about 200 yards off. At the same time he ordered "Full Steam" to be given the engines. The San Melito is not built for record breaking but she proved herself notwithstanding her great length, not only a remarkably handy ship but surprisingly fast. The sea was calm and there was a strong following current. As the propeller blades thrashed the water with increasing fury, the speed rose till the great oil tank was tearing along assisted by the current, at quite sixteen knots a pace that would not disgrace many liners. Withal the Captain craftily manoeuvred her and the enraged Hun who certainly meant murder banged and blazed away impotently astern. The San Melito has cost Germany something. Four torpedoes were discharged at her. One ran right under the ship which riding light deceived the enemy. The others were bad shots and all are lost. This would appear to bear out the theory that most of the original highly trained murderers are now either captives or in D. Jones's locker, and that their successors are both less skilful and "nervy." Of the ten shells fired (probably 12 pr.) only three took effect. All were aimed at the bridge. One tore a hole under the bridge in the Saloon deck and went through the Saloon. A ventilator was smashed and a lifeboat riddled like a sieve but, that was all. No lives were lost and the imperturbable Captain Jack-

BEEF FOR THE TRENCHES

River Plate to "Somewhere in France" on a Barge

THE VOYAGE OF THE "DART"

A couple of months or so ago there cleared from the Plate the good ship Dart, one of those modern cargo carriers designed for special ends, and a very fair example of what the "girder" principle applied to ship-building produces. Her original purpose was to cart chilled or frozen meat from the works to the ocean going steamers, with Montevideo or Campana her furthest ports of calls. True she came out from Europe under her own steam, but then she was not hurried, went as you please, carried no cargo beyond her own coals, and ran no risk from the sly submarine.

Sending such a craft home with a full cargo of meat was therefore distinctly an experiment; an experiment, he it said, that has been fully justified by results, though the voyage, especially the latter part thereof, was distinctly out of the common. Incidentally it affords a very excellent example of the way in which the average seaman and engineer at the present time is living up to the old tradition of the British merchant service, a tradition that goes back, far back, beyond the days of the Great Armada. Commonplace attention to the daily duty, flavoured with frequent grumbling that again and again has led strangers to think that the much-longed-for disruption of the English race has come at last; that has been the keynote of the merchant marine ever since the days when Alfred the Great sent his fleets to sea, after carefully supervising their construction with his own royal eye to prevent constantly recurring complaints against unseasoned timber and leaky craft.

From the Plate to Rio the weather was bad, so bad that the long low vessel, heavily laden and with but a couple of feet or so of freeboard, gave all on board the time of their lives. The skipper, who it may be remarked en passant was not of the northern races—the boat being under the Argentine flag—once wanted to beach her on the Brazilian coast, and would have done so had not the second in command, and a Dane at that, stuck to it and carried on, against orders from the bridge. Then one night "all hands" was called, because, according to the "old man," the ship was about to founder. Apparently she didn't and the man who remarked that he stuck to his bed, as there was too much wind outside and he knew the old man well, was justified of his faith. At length Rio was reached safe and sound, but owing to a misunderstanding about clearance papers the Dart received her baptism of fire, blank, and had to heave to whilst that little matter was put in order.

On they waddled, doing a good 8 knots, carrying bad weather with them up to Pernambuco, rolling gun-son kept on his eccentric course, closing also the dampers so that a vast volume of greasy, black smoke rolled down upon the sea. This bouquet proved very distasteful to the Germans and in the vast evil smelling pall they lost sight of the San Melito, which, derisively dipped the Red Ensign thrice to them as the choking black pall blotted them out. When the San Melito's men looked again at 4.30 no grey whale back was in sight. No doubt the infuriated Huns were trying to get the taste of the smoke out of their lungs. The San Melito will after discharging return to the Mexican ports for another oil cargo.

May all her voyages be equally prosperous.

wale under on the ten days run to St. Vincent, and eventually, after various orders, finding themselves west of the Scillies. Here more trouble began of a different sort. Apparently the narrow seas are narrower than ever nowadays owing to the extreme vigilance of the British fleet and its co-ordinated subsidiaries. A trawler held them up first and foremost, giving the unusual looking craft a very thorough inspection; they thought her a German oil tank for supplying submarines! Whilst this was going on, off comes a patrol boat, ex Lord Somebody's yacht, who tells them to stay where they are whilst she gets fresh orders. Up Channel is the route; chorus of disapproval from the non-Saxon element among the crew, quelled in the customary manner. Hugging the English coast right up to Dover, stopped again and again by trawlers armed with one or two guns, "there are hundreds of them on the job," they hung about for a pilot. Nothing doing, so off started the Dart on her own for France. The French coast was in sight when a destroyer swept down on them top speed, just in time to save the cargo from going to feed the fishes, via a mine field. Back again to Folkestone, straight across thence to Boulogne, where being dark and still without expert guidance, the Dart anchored. Soon the much perplexed and bewildered skipper was disconcerted by being made the centre of a brilliant searchlight display, which went on all night. Not until next morning did those aboard learn that they were liable to be fired on any minute during that night, to say nothing of the danger from floating mines, in whose track they lay.

Still all's well that ends well. The meat was delivered, "in excellent condition" said the military man who took it over, and the Dart crossed the Channel once more, incidentally seeing a Taube come down with a flop in the water, the Hun who manned it being picked up, "crying like a child." What the future employment of this vessel will be is not for us to state. There is however a fairly clear indication given by the closing sentence of a letter written aboard her, "we shall see some life, I expect, on this run."

Yes, the little Dart will probably see some life, and some death too. Let us hope that she and those on her will come safe through it all. At any rate they have made a good beginning. Merely a prosaic meat shipment under somewhat exceptional conditions, one may say. But to those who can look deeper, the passage of the Dart, thus feebly dealt with, is emblematic of what is going on afloat all over the Seven Seas today. The watchword of the navy, "Carry On," is not used in the mercantile marine; but the spirit is there. In meat barge, collier, cargo boat, tanker, trawler, picket boat, patrol, the spirit of the old days still shines brightly. All are "carrying on," and that means, Victory, however long the fight may be.

PRESIDENT VISITS PORT WORKS

VIOLENCE OF "LA RAZON."

On October 11 the Minister of Public Works accompanied by H.E. the President visited the New Port Works and went over the various branches of the extension of the Port. The President will now give personal consideration to the urgent request of the constructors that future payments may be made in cash instead of in bonds owing to the difficulty at present experienced in translating these without incurring a loss.

Following its usual habit, La Razón makes a long and venomous harangue against the unreasonableness of the constructors in making such a request. This journal becomes infuriated at the mere mention of empresas extranjeras, especially if they be British. First the railways, then the Welsh Settlers, and now the Port Construction, have become recipients of the vials of their wrath.

THE PORK INDUSTRY

Its Possibilities in Argentina

THE OPTIMISM OF ARMOURS'

"That there is no impassable barrier to prevent the hog business from developing to quite as prominent and wealthy producing feature for the feeders in the Argentine Republic—as it has been to those in the United States"—is the opinion formulated by the Manager of the Armour Frigorifico, in conversation with a HERALD representative yesterday.

The apprehension that the pork industry was combatting overwhelming obstacles is completely put aside by the fact that the firm of Armour and Co., the pioneers of the hog business in the United States, have exhaustively investigated the salient conditions of this country, and have decided to come into the field with the idea of slaughtering hogs for the purpose of manufacturing hams and bacon and other products for export to the United Kingdom.

"The possibilities of its progress," said the manager, "rests with a thorough practical knowledge of the proper feeding of hogs for packing-house slaughter, and the breeders and feeders must be instructed in that direction. There is no foundation for the suppositions and impractical theories referring to the climate not being suitable for raising hogs as they are raised in the United States. The main difficulty so far has been due to the crude methods practised. There need be no fear as to a sufficient supply being obtained under an appropriate and exacting system."

"There are plenty of corn and other grains in the country, and the possibility of raising an unlimited quantity of the rough feeds such as sorghum, milo, maize, cow peas, kaffir corn, etc., all of which can participate advantageously in supplementing the regular corn ration which must of necessity be the principal food of a hog for the production of the right kind of hams and bacon."

"Then also the introduction of meat meal will tend largely to revolutionise the slow and hackneyed process of feeding pigs with grain, and when thoroughly cognisant with its strengthening and fattening ingredients, it will be demonstrated by the frigorifico, and a transformation is expected to follow."

"The meat will enable the feeder to produce his hogs cheaper and faster, all of which is vital in determining the future development of the pork industry."

"Up to the present time the hog business has been confined entirely to the shipments of pigs to Europe, and this has been a business which has been profitable to the producer and to the shipper, but presenting various limitations, and only slim possibilities of development."

"Under the present impetus a more extended trade will be inaugurated, and with the exportation of hams, bacon and lard to the Continent and to England, and with proper care and feeding of hogs so that they will be put on the market in suitable condition before they are a year old, it is safe to predict that a most auspicious relationship between the United Kingdom and Argentina must necessarily ensue, and that the future existence of the pork industry will be permanent and reliable."

In conclusion the manager stated "the pork industry will develop rapidly, and the various criticisms which were not based on careful investigation cannot retard its positive progress."

CAMP NOTES

(By Our Agricultural Editor.)

The weather of the week has been favourable for the camp, and grass is now "coming away" with a rush. At this season of the year fat cattle are often disappointing weighers, and this year will be no exception, as the fresh strong, green growth causes the cattle to purge far too much to enable them to increase in carcase weight.

Reports from the principal English markets announce an easier tone and less inquiry for foreign meat, as the home product at this time of year is coming more freely to hand, and also tends towards a lowering of values for the imported article. Gentlemen whose opinions carry weight in this Republic are confident that the fat stock trade is now on the crest of the wave, and liable any any moment to show a sharp decline from present extreme values ruling. There are many factors responsible for bringing about lower values for cattle here. (1) The decision of the Home Government to utilise to the full all the meat available for export from the colonies, to the displacement to a considerable extent of the exports of meat from this Republic formerly bought by the Government; (2) The possible diversion of the already few boats with the necessary cold storage space, from this route to bringing the Colonial product to Britain; (3) The further utilisation of at present practically untapped sources, where the cattle, though of plainer quality than Argentine meat, are still available at a much lower price, and equally healthy for canning or freezing. South Africa and Brazil could be cited as examples. In those countries there are large supplies of native cattle that are likely to improve in quality as the higher prices stimulate the importation of pure-bred sires.

The week's sales of imported bulls have been well attended, and prices have been in consequence firmer than has lately been experienced. At Friday's sale, Messrs. Sidey and Poels disposed of that handsome youngster, Admirable Chief, at the satisfactory figure of $10,500 m/n. This was undoubtedly an animal of outstanding merit, and goes to the Cabaña of Sr. Ignacio Goñi, the breeder of this year's Palermo Champion. Sheep breeders on the other hand have had to accept less for their animals, which combined with the firm trade for Lincoln rams at the home sales, implies that fewer sheep will find their way here, while those on the outlook for good quality Lincoln rams had better purchase now as the supply will be limited.

Considerable activity can be noted amongst wool-buyers, who are reported to be operating freely at $17 the ten kilos for extra quality clean wool, while offers of over $11 have been made for Santa Cruz wool, which in certain seasons is reported to weigh heavy on account of the sand in many of the fleeces. Some owners are determined to hold on to their clips, anticipating that this season will see $20 paid for good quality wool in this province.

The Bahia Blanca Show, announced for October 24, to 27, promises to be a very successful exhibition with the largest number of entries in nearly all the sections that have ever been recorded in the history of the Society. This enthusiasm augurs well for future exhibitions in that part of the country.

The following extract from an Order in Council will be of interest to Argentine readers:—

An Order in Council has been issued permitting live cattle to be shipped from the Argentine, Brazil, Venezuela, Honduras, etc., and to be landed at Cardiff and Avonmouth.

It is understood that this is to be an experiment, and while it is in force the Irish cattle hitherto landed at Cardiff and Avonmouth will be diverted to Birkenhead.

It will be noted that Birkenhead and London, which were the headquarters at one time for landing Argentine cattle, are not included in the Order in Council. This is not to say that the Board of Agriculture are overlooking the claims of Birkenhead and London, but those who have worked to get the Argentine embargo removed consider that the iron barrier has been removed. By the diversion of Irish cattle to Birkenhead the imports will be increased by several thousand head of beasts a week.

The first shipments of Argentine cattle will be made to this country on September 21. The new order will remain in force during the war and for a period afterwards.

An order has already been made authorising the landing of Canadian cattle at Birkenhead.

HOME SALES OF LINCOLN RAMS.

A RECORD AVERAGE.

The second joint annual ram show and sale, and thirty-fifth sale held under the management of the Lincoln Long Wool Sheepbreeders' Association, took place at Lincoln recently.

The proceedings opened on the previous day when Mr. Charles Clarke and Mr. William Wright awarded the premiums offered by the Society for the best lots of rams of not less than six nor more than twelve (Class B), and for the best lot of more than twelve rams (Class A). The competition in both classes was very keen. Amongst the smaller consignments Mr. A. B. Holt was given the leading place. These were a grandly matched lot, and sold at a very even range of price, coming fifth in the average list of the sale. Mr. G. C. Sharpe's were a very close second, but not quite so evenly matched. Messrs. R. and R. Hilton's were third, followed by a grand lot of rams owned by Mr. T.

Casswell, as reserve. They were in natural condition, and were in keen request. First amongst the larger consignments were eighteen from Mr. John Pears. A better lot has seldom been seen from his flock, which is amply demonstrated by the grand average realised, £46 8s. 8d. The second winners were another good lot owned by Mr. Joseph Brocklebank, who it will be remembered, judged the Lincoln classes in Palermo two years ago. This lot were also keenly competed for. The first sale held in 1892 gave an average of £15 8s. 9d., this average was top till 1896, when £20 19s. 6d. was realised. The following year the average was £23 1s. 9d., the best on record; but this last sale gave an average of £25 16s. 5d. for 169 head. It is also noteworthy that every ram on the ground was sold, another indication of the keen demand for Lincoln rams. A home journal reporting the sales says:—"The veteran breeder, Mr. John Pears, sent forward one of the choicest consignments that have represented his old flock for many years past. The first lot was keenly competed for, Messrs. R. and W. Wright getting him at 100 guineas; they also secured another by the same sire, "Mere R. W. G.," at 75 guineas. Mr. C. E. Howard, as well as Messrs. Nelson and Shepherd wanted the second ram by Pointon T. L. The former prevailed and he went to Nocton Rise at the top price of the day, 135 guineas. A large number of the better quality rams were secured for exportation by Messrs. Sidey, Mr. Joseph Shepherd, Mr. Candy, etc.

ABERDEEN-ANGUS CROSS WINS AT BULAWAYO SHOW.

Three or four years ago in Rhodesia it was hard to find a native bullock weighing 550 lbs. dressed weight at five or six years old, whereas at the 1914 Bulawayo Show some three-year-old steers by a Polled Angus bull and out of native cows killed 700 lbs. average. Halfbreeds are fast increasing in number, and plenty of enterprise continues in importing purebred bulls from England. Rhodesia, more than any part of South Africa perhaps, excepting the very dry Bechuanaland Protectorate, is a good cattle country, but the industry itself it quite in its infancy as yet.

The last official report as to numbers of cattle in South Rhodesia appeared at the end of 1913, and then the figures were 600,000 cattle, which were partly owned by whites and partly by natives, the latter owning 370,000 and whites 230,000. The Minister of Agriculture estimated that there would be 695,000 at the end of 1914. In North Rhodesia, the figures are very much smaller, though Northern Rhodesia will be a big producer later. Small stock are not in large numbers in either Southern or Northern Rhodesia.

SPEYING OF CATTLE.

Sir,—In your paper dated the 2nd an article appeared re the above heading with a description of how to do it, which was extremely interesting, but does not mention the immense possibilities of this procedure as a means of refining herds. In the North-West Territories of Canada there is hardly an estancia of any size which does not spey two hundred and upwards of its inferior heifers at the age of from 8 months to a year old, this age being the best for various reasons. 1st, the heifer at four or three years old, according to feed, becomes in appearance and weight very similar to a steer; horns, face, body, etc., so much so that the difference in price between a speyed cow (speyed at age stated) and a steer was $5.00 o/s.; but the difference between a breeding cow and the speyed one was $15.00 o/s. The operation was performed by one of the hands of the estancia, who had learnt from seeing it done, and is more or less like castrating colts in this country; some men being better at that kind of thing than others. The second reason is that the animal is sooner off your hands, and there is no fear of its being in calf from a strayed bull. Thirdly, that the heifer need not be kept in a special paddock, after being speyed. Fourthly, that if one dies from the operation, its value is easily replaced by the much bigger price obtained from the rest, whereas speying when the heifer is a cow, if one cow dies, the value has to be spread over a number to replace the value, because the speyed cow does not give the weight, or anywhere near of the speyed yearling heifer, and does not change its appearance from a cow. Fifthly, the meat of an early speyed animal is of much finer grain and fatter than a steer of the same age, and even fattens quicker than a steer.

It is a quick way of refining a herd, and requires no special separating. When speying, the heifer should be in good grazing condition, but not fat, as the fat is liable to augment the inflammation, if any. In Canada the percentage of deaths due to the operation was more or less 10 per cent., but it must be remembered that the heifers, immediately after the operation, were let go with the rest of the cattle, and therefore could not rest as they should have done if kept apart until sound. The heifers selected were bad colours, ones badly grown, or badly formed, and if the herd became too big, the surplus; and there was always a ready sale for them, sometimes even more demand than for the steers. Any fairly intelligent person can do the operation, having a knack for this kind of thing, after having seen it done a number of times, with an explanation added. Any person who is good at castrating colts should learn it easily; and the practice can be done on a cow butchered for the use of the estancia, so as to know the right feel of the ovaries, and the place from where they hang in the hollow of the backbone. Farmers in this country should be able to get from the North American freezers, who are accustomed to this class of meat, almost the same price as for steers, say, twenty dollars less, always with the proviso that the animal has been speyed before a year old, and given the same class of feed as the steers, amongst which they can be left to grow up. It is a good practice to

FRIGORIFICO LA BLANCA

A highly interesting history of the La Blanca Frigorifico has just been issued in the form of an illustrated booklet published by the Company. The little volume is printed in Spanish and English, and it contains much information of special interest to those who have only a faint idea of the extent and value of the meat industry of Argentina. The author of the brochure speaks correctly when he says that the history of the La Blanca enterprise reflects accurately the rise in importance of the industry generally.

The La Blanca frigorifico started operations on May 7, 1903, on a small scale. How its operations have grown may be gathered from the statement that from a kill of 17,310 cattle in the first year, the output has grown to over 300,000 per annum. A full description of the company's new plant is contained in the booklet, which is being distributed gratis from the office of the company, Can-gallo 499.

SUGAR EXPORTS

PERMISSION REQUIRED FOR ALL DESPATCH.

The Minister of Finance has sent to the President for signature, a decree by which the Customs are ordered to restrict the export of sugar in every case in which special permission for such export has not been obtained from the Department.

This measure is intended to prevent the export of sugar from the country which may be needed for internal consumption with the consequent disturbance of supply and exaggerated prices.

BANCO DE LA NACION

NEW BRANCHES TO BE OPENED.

It has been decided by the directors of the Bank of the Nation to establish a number of branches of the Bank in several of the most important agricultural districts throughout the Republic. The scheme is not yet completed, and no intimation has yet been given of the various new centres of the Bank's branches. However, arrangements will be fully completed by the time the new harvest is ready.

Doctor Iriondo, the President, has stated that these new branches will be opened in two months' time.

THE GARDEN AND ORCHARD

TALKS WITH AMATEURS

(BY "THE RUSTIC.")

The season for the spring preparations of the garden and orchard is far advanced, but for those who have not followed the rules of gardening, there is still lots to do, especially if the thorough overturning of the soil has not been carried out in the late autumn or during the winter. This operation is most essential, as it helps to oxidise the earth, and thus afford it the opportunity of replenishing itself of this useful element which it takes from the air and rain water. Besides, with the help of the winter frosts all large lumps and clods disintegrate, and the soil becomes more uniform and compact. If this operation has not been effected, no time should be lost in giving the garden a good overturning; not too deep or too near the permanent plants, and care should be taken to pulverise the soil well by breaking up all large clods with the spade and by cross digging several times, and then passing the rake over and over until the soil is almost uniform.

It must be borne in mind that the upper crust, having been long exposed to the air, is rich in oxygen, whilst the lower layers, if beyond the reach of the roots of plants, are rich in other nutritive elements, therefore by uniformly mixing these with the intermediate layer, where the roots of the plants have been working, the soil is renovated to a great measure, and a large quantity of the nourishing elements added to it.

The present season is very favourable to the growth of weeds. Weeds are the plague of the gardener, and take all his time to keep them down. They are a sign of the bad or good quality of the soil, for it is quite easy to tell at a glance whether the soil is rich or poor according to the class of weed growing on it. It is certainly very much to the detriment of the plants for weeds to get the upper hand, as they not only choke the plants above the surface of the ground, but they also do the same with the roots, and besides consume all the good out of the soil, thus depriving the plants of the available nourishment. Everybody knows the way to clean gardens of weeds, but it is not out of the way to mention that where it is possible, it is very advantageous to dig the weeds into the soil, where, for instance, it applies to more or less large plots of ground and provided that the weeds are sufficiently deeply buried, so that there is no chance of their growing again. All vegetable matter which is mixed with the soil and allowed to rot in it helps very much to enrichen it, therefore besides following this system it is useful to remember that all dead leaves, cuttings, etc., should be buried where possible. This reminds us that a very useful practice is to dig a pit about a yard deep, and two wide, by the length required, in any out-of-the-way corner of the garden, into which all leaves and other vegetable matter which is capable of decomposing easily can be thrown in. After spraying with a bit of slack lime and sulphate of iron, the mass should be covered with a thin layer of earth of about 4 inches, taking care that this is watered every now and then, if the rain is not sufficient to keep it moist. With the heat of the summer and sufficient water to keep it moist, this will in some 9 or 10 months be transformed into a most excellent soil for hothouse and pot plants. The pit can be gradually filled in with alternate layers of leaves and earth.

Returning to the destruction of weeds, it is as well to bear in mind that these should be destroyed at such time when they are not in the act of shedding their seeds. This is obvious, for during the operation of digging them up or cutting them down, any amount of seeds will fall and germinate, thus all the work done is lost, and will have to be done over again. The best time to destroy weeds is when they are in the act of flowering. If it is done earlier, any bit of stem or large roots are very likely to take root again.

One of the plants which demands attention now is the rosebush. It is of course taken for granted that the roses have all been pruned at their proper season; that is, during the months of June and July, but should this not have been done, it would be advisable to thin them out a bit, by cutting right away all weak branches, and specially those which have sprouted from the ground around the plant. Also all branches in the bushes or creepers, which in any way form close clumps of vegetation once the plant is in full vegetation should be cut away. This operation is necessary for several reasons. In the first place all weak and unproductive branches are a drain on the mother plant, and deprive the well formed parts of the plant of force and life. Again the hot and damp climate in this country is most favourable to the development to a very dangerous extent of cryptogamic diseases. Cryptogams are fungus growths which develop on leaves and tender shoots, as well as on the flowers themselves. We often see the leaves get small spots on them, which rapidly extend, or the petals and leaves will curl up and then gradually change colour and fall off. The buds of flowers will open irregularly and then open very uniformly, looking sometimes as if some one must have been nibbling at them. We wonder why the poor plant looks so bad, and think that some insect is destroying it, but the damage has been done by the cryptogams during those hot sultry or misty days which follow after a shower. An occasional spray with Bordeaux Mixture (sulphate of copper and lime) will work wonders, and the plants will grow up healthy and strong. Therefore the idea is to grow the plants in a well open form, so that sunlight and ventilation can enter every part. Provided the plants are situated so that they can get plenty of current air and sun, if a proper system of pruning is car-

RAINS AND THE HARVEST

BENEFITS TO THE B. BLANCA ZONE.

The rains which have fallen in the Bahia Blanca zone are stated to have been exceedingly beneficial. It will be recollected that a short time ago, this region was reported to be especially suffering from drought. There is no excess quantity even now, as the average fall over the whole district is very small, but it is confidently hoped that there will be further falls between the present time and the end of November.

A very favourable effect has been produced generally on the prospects of the harvest by the last rains, and sowings are now being completed in some parts where rain had been anxiously awaited for that purpose.

In the North of the Province, a want of rain is still noted, and none has fallen there recently. There is no reason however to suppose that if a further fall occurs the harvest prospects in that district also will not come short of the most favourable anticipations.

THE NEW MILITARY COLLEGE

A CASE FOR LITIGATION.

Whatever difficulties have arisen between the Government and the contracting firm building the new Military College has not been stated, but that some difficulty has arisen is clear from the fact that the Government have decided to go to litigation in respect to the same. October 20 is the date set aside to consider the matter.

It may be realised that in the original scheme the building was to cost no more than three and a half million dollars, and was to be paid for in Government script carrying an interest of 5 per cent.

It is probable, though not officially stated, that this is the cause of any difference of opinion that may exist between the contracting parties.

ried out, a great improvement will be noticed as regards cryptogamic diseases, always of course assuming that the climatic conditions are not exceptionally favourable to the development of these.

The next serious plague to rose and other plants is that of the aphid. This plague is of the insect order, and of course must be dealt with by a different method. It is often thought that the so-called "liquids" for curing plants will destroy all insects and diseases, but this is not the case. The remedy for curing the plants from cryptogams will not in the least affect the aphid or any other insect pest. Neither will the spray for the aphid destroy the cochonille or the "bicho del cesto." The aphid is an insect which sucks the sap of the plant by means of a trunk which it buries in the tender tissues, and destroys them, thus producing a very similar effect to that of the cryptogam, which sends out roots that bury themselves also in the tissues and destroy them. But the aphid is protected all over its body by a waxy substance, and does not absorb poison which may be put on the surface of the plant it attacks, so that in order to destroy it we must find some ingredient which will attack and destroy it on the surface of the body. Very good results have been obtained by the employment of piretrum powders, commonly known in the market as "Bufach" "Kill-all," etc., but the most effective is the spraying of tobacco juice diluted, to which a certain proportion of caustic soda or potash has been added. We will, in the course of these articles, give the recipes of the foregoing solutions, and the way to apply them, as well as the most convenient seasons for them to be used.

MC KENNA'S BUDGET

THE CLASSES AND THE WAR.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—I should be glad if you would kindly publish the following in reply to your correspondent A. V. S. whose letter appeared in last Saturday's HERALD.

A. V. S. appears to be under the impression that the masses are doing all, and the classes nothing, in this great war. If he refers to THE HERALD for Sunday, he will see a statement to the effect that over 10,000 men from Cambridge University are either fighting or training. In the same issue I read also that up to date five Peers have been killed during the war. I frequently hear from my home (Oxford), and my people tell me that the University is dead, practically all the students having gone to the war. Those remaining, and they are few, are unfit for service. Many of the colleges are used for military purposes, and the Examination Schools have been fitted up as a hospital with 500 beds. Mr. Lloyd George, who has always been considered one of the most bitter opponents of the aristocracy, tells us that they have made a splendid response to the appeal for men, and we all know they have provided the money also. I am a worker, but I like to see fair play, and credit should be given to the "Dukes and drones" for the great part they have played in the struggle. Don't abuse them because they happen to be in a better position than yourself. The majority of them have worked for what they have, or their ancestors did before them. Why does not A. V. S. go and do his bit in the firing line? He may have a good reason, but from the tone of his letter I should say he is a shirker, and for that reason he cannot see that the classes (who are workers in this war) have done anything. Anyway, if he cannot or does not care to volunteer, the least he can do is to keep quiet. I have not volunteered, but for the simple reason that I am unfit for service.

A. V. S. would like to see the deer parks "forced into production." The greater part of the land used as deer parks is absolutely unfit for agriculture, but if your correspondent cares he is at liberty to buy or rent 50 acres of the land, and make an experiment. If the Duke of Norfolk (or any other land owner) will not rent or sell to him land for agriculture, he can apply to the County Council, and if the County Council are satisfied that he is a suitable person, they have power to take the land by compulsion, under the Small Holdings Act. If this park land is so valuable for "intensive cultivation," will A. V. S. please tell me why there have not been applicants for it? In my own county, up to the end of 1910 the County Council had bought and taken on lease a number of farms, amounting to some 3,000 acres. There were also several hundred applications for land under consideration. The Council also has power to obtain loans for the erection of houses and farm buildings, which are repaid by the tenant on easy terms, so that every facility is given to those wishing to work the land. The fact that it is possible to obtain this land on such good terms, and that advantage has not been taken of this Act to obtain part of the deer parks, should be sufficient proof that the land is worthless for agriculture. To read A. V. S.'s letter one would imagine that there were no land taxes in the United Kingdom. In addition to land taxes, the land owner has to pay the rates on his land, and these are charged out at a much higher proportion in the £ on deer parks than on agricultural land, so that if a man keeps a deer park he has to pay for the privilege.

I do not agree with taxing the people's food, but at the same time I do not believe in taking the upper classes out of the country. There has been too much of that done in recent years. All classes should pay proportionately to the cost of the war. I be-

LORD NORTHCLIFFE AND "THE HERALD"

Tribute from the Napoleon of the Newspaper World.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA IN SOUTH AMERICA

Since the outbreak of the war, THE HERALD has been frequently quoted in the leading London newspapers, and more than one tribute has been paid to the quality of the journal. Quite recently, Sir Edward Russell, one of the oldest and most famous of British journalists, spoke highly of the well-informed and high literary quality of THE HERALD.

To-day, however, we have to announce a still greater honour.

Lord Northcliffe, the uncrowned king of Fleet-street, director of "The Times," "Daily Mail," "Daily Mirror," and a host of other newspapers and magazines, in a letter to a member of THE HERALD staff writes as follows:

"I AM WELL ACQUAINTED WITH THE "BUENOS AIRES HERALD." IT IS REALLY WONDERFUL WHAT AN EXCELLENT SHOW OF NEWS YOU CAN GET OUT OF YOUR CABLE SERVICE. . . .

"IT SEEMS TO ME THAT YOU ARE DOING EXCELLENT WORK IN COUNTERACTING THE EXTREMELY ACTIVE GERMAN PROPAGANDA IN SOUTH AMERICA, OF WHICH I KNOW A GREAT DEAL."—Northcliffe.

Such a tribute, from the greatest of British newspaper controllers requires very little comment. The opinion of a Northcliffe is a hall mark of the quality of any live, modern newspaper. Furthermore, the appreciation of the inspiring genius of the London "Times" is shared by the British and American communities of Argentina. That is the principal reason why THE HERALD has had to record phenomenal increases in its circulation during the past eighteen months.

POLITICALS V. MUNICIPALITY
V. POLICE

DISPUTE A TROIS.

Dr. Gramajo, that strenuous Chief of the Municipality, has apparently clashed with the Chief of Police, an unfortunate circumstance as, while the Municipality may be the brain to devise certain measures, the police alone can be the arm whereby they are actually enacted and made of force.

It is all about the sacred right of meeting in public places. It appears that Sr. Udabe for the police had with a view to pleasing everybody and avoiding trouble promised equal rights to all orators and the use of the plazas in rotation to the various political parties.

It is obvious that if all desired to use them at the same time and insisted upon it something worse than wordy dispute might ensue. All seemed to be going on beautifully but Dr. Gramajo had been forgotten and, still greater offence to the Intendente's dignidad, the Chief of Police had acted, as the Intendente alleges, ultra vires, having no jurisdiction over the plazas which as Dr. Gramajo contends are all under his rule and authority as the citizens pay for them. The fact that the citizens have very little say in what is done with their property is not mentioned.

How the dispute will terminate, who can prophesy? The unfortunate thing for the public is that there are so many authorities, most of whom seem more concerned at what appearance they make and their sacred dignity than for the public interest.

lieve in making all imported manufactured goods contribute by charging a substantial import duty. There is nothing in the way of manufactures that we cannot produce at home.

One other point with reference to deer parks. Has A. V. S. calculated the amount of money which is spent annually in connection with them? All this money is spent in the country's advantage. If the deer parks were closed, there would be many unemployed as a result, and no advantage gained.

Yours, etc.

RED CROSS CONCERT

AT DOCK CENTRAL.

Under the name of an impromptu smoking concert an exciting and enjoyable evening was spent at the Restaurant Dock Central at Ensenada on the night of October 9.

Mr. Hunt of the Frigorifico occupied the chair, supported by Messrs. Lindopp, Graham, Williams, and Santa Maria.

The band of the Lamport and Holt s.s. Vasari opened the proceedings and the first half of the evening passed away in music making.

Then Mr. Graham approached all present for funds for the Red Cross. There was nothing in the commencement of this appeal to hint at the surprises to follow. Ticket No. 19896 of the National Lottery was raffled for in 80 tickets of one peso each. Some difficulty was experienced in the selling of the last ten tickets. Then the extraordinary happened. A special auction was arranged, and a battle royal for possession commenced between Messrs. Hunt, Lindopp Williams and Van Begin. The last two gentlemen commenced falling over each other with bids of $5 per time; until the ticket was knocked down to Mr. Van Begin at $125. The auction of a handkerchief representing the colours of the Allies was next proceeded with and amidst great excitement the handkerchief realised $113.50, Mr. Van Begin again being the purchaser. It was found that Señor M. Alegrucci won the raffle, and as he generously returned the same for more funds $360 were realised for this when knocked down to Sr. Santa Maria.

The result was that $785 were realised for the Red Cross Fund at one of the jolliest evenings possible.

"BRAVO TORO!"

ABSURD SPECTACLE AT SAN RAFAEL.

Bull fights are forbidden by the laws of the Argentine Republic but, notwithstanding they sometimes take place, like other forbidden things. The last Corrida de Toros is reported from San Rafael in Mendoza. Who organised it is not stated but among other persons desirous of signalling their valour and skill as banderilleros, chulillos, picadores and espadas was a local (and loco) hairdresser who fancied himself Lagartijo and Escamillo rolled into one. He had arranged that a comparatively harmless farm bullock was to appear as No. 1, but when a real king of the mountain had entered, snorting and brandishing long polished horns he fled wildly. The bull pursued, more for fun as it appears than anything else and amid roars of laughter chased him over the barrier. It promptly followed him, apparently disliking the publicity of the ring and, pushing through the crowd reached the street. It ultimately arrived at the Market Garden of Sr. Antonio Ruiz where it wreaked its fury on the cabbages devouring them and grazing with the utmost ferocity. This terrifying scene was succeeded by another no less exciting. A half grown calf was chased into the ring and upon it, the valiant bull-fighters advanced the picadors with brandished lances, the chulillos waving their red cloaks and the banderilleros with their ornamental darts. Instead of snorting fire and charging like a hurricane, el toro knelt down in the sand and bleated for help. The public hilarity burst forth in peals. No insults could persuade the fiery calf to rise and finally the police intervened and rescued him from his tormentor. If ridicule can kill this ought to be the last bull fight in San Rafael. Some Spaniards present expressed their contempt in the most candid fashion.

A MADMAN'S CRIME

TRAGEDY IN A CAFE.

In a café at the corner of Calle Garay and Plaza Constitución a most extraordinary crime was committed early yesterday morning, which could only have been the work of a lunatic.

The café belongs to Braulio Sanjil and when he came to open it up at 6 o'clock yesterday morning a customer entered and ordered refreshment. During the time he waited to be served the milkman called and commenced to fulfil the usual daily order of the café, which he had supplied for some years.

While in the act, the first customer suddenly jumped up, drew a revolver and with some wild words fired. The milkman an Italian named Arribillaga, fell without a word. The proprietors call for help, brought two vigilantes on the scene, who disarmed the madman, who made no resistance whatever. On arrival of the ambulance, the wounded man was being removed thereto when he expired.

The criminal is stated to be an Italian, 41 years of age, called Eliseo de Pau. He is now in solitary confinement awaiting Dr. Llavallol's enquiry.

There is but one conclusion and that is the de Pau is insane and this too is the police view.

KAISER - FERDINAND COMPACT CONCLUDED IN APRIL LAST.

Rome, Oct. 9.

"La Tribuna" says that an agreement between the Kaiser and King Ferdinand providing for joint military action was concluded last April.

Germany intended to attack Serbia in May, considering that the time was opportune for doing so, as that Balkan State was being ravaged by epidemics. Action against Serbia was delayed, however, by Italy's intervention in the war which forced Austria to send strong forces to the Italian front.

DAY BY DAY IN ROSARIO.

(From Our Correspondent).

October 12.

The Rev. J. A. Rickards leave tomorrow for Buenos Aires, and in a few days will take steamer with Mrs. Rickards and his son, George, for England.

Mr. and Mrs. Gostling, with their daughter, of Alberdi, are due back by the R.M.S.P. Desna after a holiday in England.

The Sale of Work in aid of the Rosario City Mission, reported in more detail elsewhere, realised a sum of about $620 m/n. Chiefly to Miss Studdert must the credit be given for so satisfactory a result.

The members of the Evangelical Union of the Methodist Church met together last Tuesday evening, with Mr. French presiding and the Rev. J. A. Rickards and family as guests, the occasion being a farewell to Mr. Rickards, who has always taken a deep interest in the work. As a tangible recuerdo, the members asked the departing friends to accept a silver mounted maté bowl and pipe, and a handsome autograph album.

The staff and scholars of the Spanish School at Alberdi on Wednesday night invited Mr. and Mrs. Rickards to accept a silver salver as a mark of their esteem, eulogising their work during the past six years in furthering the interests of that institution. One of the visitors added to this token the gift of a beautifully worked drawn thread table centre, as a tribute to Mrs. Rickards.

Large swarms of locusts have been seen in different parts of the district and it is feared that unless very stringent measures can be taken serious damage may be done to the wheat and linseed crops.

The Intendente, Sr. Miguel Culacati, paid a hurried business visit to the Federal Capital last week returning on Saturday night.

There was a large gathering of masters and pupils at the Talleres School on Friday afternoon, when occasion was taken to say farewell to the Rev. J. A. Rickards, Mrs. Rickards and George. The headmaster, Mr. G. S. H. Harding, dwelling on the plea-

"CHILDREN'S HOME" BELGRANO

The Annual General Meeting took place at the Home yesterday, at which, the following ladies were present: Mrs. A. W. Boote, Mrs. R. H. Roberts, Mrs. H. C. Thompson, Mrs. Caninos, Mrs. George Bell, Miss Dawney, Mrs. A. A. Knight, Mrs. W. H. Krabbe, Mrs. J. T. Leitch, Mrs. R. I. Lisowski, Mrs. Lough and Mrs. Rugeroni.

The report records steady progress. During the past year the working of the Home has been satisfactory in every respect, the general health of the children excellent, and no serious case of illness or accident has occurred; above all, there is a general interest taken in it by the public that is very gratifying. There are 58 children in the Home, 38 boys and 20 girls. On June 30 last year there were 56 children, 35 boys and 21 girls. There are 40 under 10 years of age.

The Committee expressed appreciation of the excellent management of the Home by Mrs. Reischer.

The school is under the inspection of the National Board of Education: Señorita Brave, a fully certificated Spanish teacher, is still in charge of the morning classes; Mrs. Reischer, teaches English in the afternoons.

The financial state is satisfactory leaving a balance after all deductions of $69,814.37 which is the capital of the Institution. Mrs. Hope Gibson, Mrs. H. C. Thompson, Mrs. H. Hume, Miss L. Simson, Mrs. G. Leitch and Mrs. Corbett are thanked for organising bridge drives and raffles and the Masonic Brethren for contributing $250 through Mr. A. W. Boote. The Home stands in need of support to carry on its good work.

The system of small monthly subscriptions has proved an undoubted success. A small monthly contribution can more easily be spared than a larger amount paid annually. The majority of the subscriptions are from $1 to $5 per month, any one willing to contribute in this manner is requested to communicate with the Honorary Treasurer.

sant associations of the past six years, said they all regretted deeply the fact that such good friends of the School were about to leave them, and he asked their acceptance of some little recuerdos of the pleasant and profitable times at the Talleres. To Mr. Rickards he handed an inkstand, writing pad and the usual accessories, to Mrs. Rickards a travelling clock, and to Master George something very nice in a box. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rickards said a few things appropriate to the occasion, and assured them all there was no need for recuerdos, as they could never forget the happy times at the School.

On Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Rickards again had to say farewells, this time at the Talleres Hall, when Mr. T. G. Russell, representing Mr. J. P. Crouch, asked Mr. Rickards to accept a small draft in recognition of his work at Talleres Church and School, and Mr. C. H. Montgomery handed to Mrs. Rickards a handsome gold wrist watch. Besides this there were further mementos in the shape of an illuminated address and an enlarged photographic group of the choir, suitably framed.

Mr. P. F. Beasley for many years on the staff of the Old Rosario Railway is returning to Argentina. For some years past Mr. Beasley has held an appointment in Mexico City which he resigned some little time ago owing to the unsettled conditions of the country. He has now accepted a post in the accountants department of the North Eastern and Entre Rios Railway and is expected to arrive in the course of the week by the Highland Glen. It will be remembered that only the other day his son, Mr. A. C. Beasley, left on the Ruahine to offer his services to his country as ammunition maker.

A parcel of clothes for the Belgian Children made by the G.F.C. Members in Alberdi was despatched the other day.

IN MEMORIAM

CAPTAIN G. S. ROBERTSON,

ROYAL SCOTS, 1st FOOT.

Some details of the career of the late Capt. G. S. Robertson of the Royal Scots, may be of interest. This gallant and brilliant officer was killed in Flanders on Sept. 26, during the great attack of the Allies. His widowed mother received a cable from the War Office with Lord Kitchener's expression of sympathy. Captain Robertson was one of the many of British blood, born in the Republic, who at the call to arms rallied to the Flag of the Motherland. He entered St. George's College, Quilmes, at the age of 12, and speedily proved his ability, gaining next year, Class Honours, and Distinction in Divinity and Spanish, he being the second youngest who took 1st Class honours in the Oxford Junior Local. Next year he was forty-seventh, though youngest, out of eighty-one in the 1st Class Honours list, with Distinction in Religious Knowledge and Spanish. This was brilliant at 14. Two years after he took first Class honours in the Oxford Senior with fresh subjects to secure exemption from the Matriculation of the London University. He was sixth in the list of First Class Honours and took 1st place in Religious Knowledge, 1st in English, in French 9th place, Latin 12th place. The total who sat for the examination was 9357.

After holding a scholarship four years at St. George's, he went to England in 1909. At Trinity College, Derbyshire, he in four months gained half the possible prizes. In 1910 he entered for and won the Open Scholarship for four years at Oxford for Classics and Mathematics, and went into residence at Exeter College. He graduated just before the outbreak of war and entered for the Civil Service, from which many men had enlisted. He passed the examination and was offered a post in Dublin but declined it, and secured a commission in the Royal Scots "The right of the line." After a few months at Camberly Staff College, where his ability was remarked, he was promoted Captain. He reached the trenches on July 9, and was in all the fighting until the day of his death. He was not an athletic specialist, but his thoroughness enabled him to win the School Championship in his last year at St. George's. At Oxford he won the mile and half mile in College Sports. In the "Varsity" Sports he won his "half blue," and a place in the team against Cambridge, where he did his duty as pace maker. He was also fifth man in the Oxford team of relay race against Pennsylvania University, which Oxford won very closely.

A memorial service was held on Sunday last at his old School chapel, Quilmes, as a token of respect to one who was a devoted son, a brilliant scholar, a true sportsman, a loyal patriot and a God-fearing youth. He was at the first Confirmation held at St. George's, and years ago had an intention to take Holy Orders. The Sunday before his death was the first ordination Sunday after his 23 birthday, the age limit fixed by the Church. "For still for him high service waits, Though earth's last fight is fought, God did not give that martial soul To end at last in nought."

That steadfast soldier heart was not, For this brief life alone, 'Tis as a soldier he will stand before the Great White Throne."

THE NEW PORT WORKS

FRIDAY, September 8, 1915.

It is hardly conceivable that the Argentine Government will commit the irretrievable blunder—amounting in its seriousness almost to a crime—of permitting the new Port works to be closed down. Yet that is the alternative to the Government rising to the occasion and finding the money necessary to the prosecution of the work. In an interview reported in THE HERALD yesterday Mr. Walker, principal of the company which has the contract for the construction of the works, stated clearly and succinctly, the difficult position in which the contractors have been placed. Those familiar with the history of this particular contract are aware that Mr. Walker has stated his case with a commendable degree of generosity—to the Government. There was much he might have said in perfect fairness to himself and his company, to show that the contractors have not had that liberal treatment, and real consideration that they might reasonably have expected. It is a tribute to the company and its principal that to-day, when they are facing a prospect that must be a bitter one to them, there is no trace of bitterness, or even of complaint in the manner in which they have laid the situation before the public.

This spirit is in striking contrast to that underlying a suggestion made by one of our evening contemporaries in dealing with the future of the works, that the Government should take advantage of the situation and endeavour to drive a bargain with the contractors of a nature that would be inimical to their interests. We cannot believe that such a suggestion represents the ideas and the spirit of the Argentine Nation towards its contractual obligations, for it is both ungenerous and unwise. Mr. Walker's suggestion that the Government should observe the spirit of its contract and make the form of payment of real value, seems to us to be fair. The Government is not responsible for the fact that its bonds bearing five per cent interest are unrealisable in competition with British Government securities yielding seven per cent. That is more or less the result of peculiar circumstances. It may be, however, that had the government not issued other bonds in such volume as to make them all a drug in the market, then the scrip handed to Messrs. Walker and Co. would be able to compete more favourably in attractiveness from the public's point of view, than is the case.

Setting aside these two points, however, it is obviously the moral duty of the Government to see that the form of payment for work performed and services rendered is something real, and at least of face value, and if the bonds given do not conform to these standards, then another form of payment should be made. It may be argued, of course, that as Messrs. Walker accepted as payment bonds always liable to market fluctuations, and as the market has "gone against them," they should stand by their bargain. We do not think that the Government after proper consideration would hold to this view, for clearly it was never contemplated that Messrs. Walker should do the work at a loss, or that the work should be abandoned because of the bonds becoming unrealisable, and the company being shut out from the ordinary channels of finance. In fact the whole arrangement points to the opposite intention. As we understand it the bonds were given because the Government could not finance the work, nor pay for it in cash as it progressed. Messrs. Walker were at the same time to pay themselves and finance the undertaking by placing the bonds on the market at favour-

THE GRECIAN TRAGEDY

SATURDAY, October 9, 1915.

For some days the world was completely in the dark as to the meaning of the sudden and surprising resignation of M. Venizelos, Prime Minister of Greece. To-day the world understands that once more has Germanism secured a triumph, which fortunately will prove only fleeting in character. By means and methods of which Germany is the past-mistress, she has temporarily sundered the Government of Greece from the side of the Allies. For the moment she has brought the Nation, whose very existence is due to France and Britain officially into line with Turkey and Bulgaria, her dual dupes of the Balkans, but that she will hold Greece in that position no sane person can for one moment believe. Her influence over Turkey and Bulgaria may be permanent, and the evil effects of it may be disastrous to them, but she can no more turn the democracy and freedom of Greece into vassalage of Germany, than she can reverse the positions of the sun and moon. Greece will never march to the goose-step.

The means whereby Germany has secured her temporary triumph are clear to us. For months she has laid King Constantine under the mad delusion that he is Greece; that he as King is the state, and Venizelos and the majority of Greeks behind Venizelos, merely subjects. This is the Kaiser's idea. It is the sole-surviving example of foolish adherence to a decayed doctrine that the King is the Nation, and holds sway over his people by Divine right. With a very foolish and very envious and very German king like Constantine, it has not been a matter of great difficulty for Germany to delude the Grecian monarch. If he had any doubt on the question of his power, Germany overcame it by buying a few politicians and getting them to instil the poison of flattery into his ears. If he looked for public evidence of it, he found it in the columns of the hired Press, purchased with German gold to urge Germany's cause and the King's omnipotence. The most recent cablegrams give full evidence of this propaganda, and the results of it able opportunities. Through peculiar circumstances over which neither they nor the Government have any control this arrangement has broken down, and it is surely not intended that the company should suffer the whole burden of the collapse.

We have no particular concern in the matter, other than that of wishing that a fair arrangement should be made, in the interests of Argentina, as well as in that of the contractors, and in British interests generally. As we view the question it is one of principle and of good faith. In this way we believe it should be viewed by everybody. By the way in which it acts in such affairs the Government either establishes or destroys the confidence which is essential to the maintenance of its relations with foreign capital and enterprise. Messrs. Walker and Co. have had the very closest business relations with Argentina over a long period of years. We believe they have realised fair profits from their contracts, and on the other hand have rendered great services to Argentina. Between such a company and the Government there should be no suspicion of unfairness in bargaining. We believe there is none, but there is always a danger that a short-sighted policy may be adopted by the Government, under pressure from journals which evidently wish to see all confidence in Argentina's good faith destroyed. If Messrs. Walker's proposition is overriden then the biggest loser in the end will be the Nation itself.

THE WORLD-WIDE WAR

SUNDAY, October 10, 1915.

The greatest war in history is spreading and growing in intensity instead of being restricted in its area and diminished in its ferocity by the lapse of time. In this it differs from all other wars of modern eras in which the general tendency of the passage of time has been to limit the area of the struggle and reduce the violence of the contest by the simple process of exhausting one side or the other. Truly this is a world-wide war, and there is no saying that eventually it will not involve the whole of civilisation. Such a culmination might, in fact, be expected demonstrate clearly what a colossal mistake it is for Britons to continue in the belief that German publicity methods need no counteracting campaign on the part of the Allies.

Germany is doubtless jubilating over her temporary triumph, but she has reckoned without her host if she imagine the people of Greece are submissive to her will, imposed through a deluded monarch. Greece is more in sympathy with Germany and Turkey, than Italy was when in that country Germanism appeared to have gained the governing hand. The real voice of Greece has been heard in the remarkable manifesto of M. Venizelos. Nothing finer, nothing nobler has ever come from the lips of a democrat and a patriot, sensible alike of the welfare and honour of his country. In that utterance the ex-Prime Minister has given us the true sentiment of his country, not that which Germany would have the world interpret from the action of her foreign king, and the gang of politicians who have sold themselves. If this be not so how can we understand the emphatic declaration of M. Venizelos that, "Though the entire available forces of the Central Empire be added to those of Bulgaria in the attempt to crush Serbia, Greece will unflinchingly remain true to her passed word. . . . to the last man and the last drachma?" In what other way can we interpret this, but as a declaration that Germany is not to triumph?

The veil of mystery enshrouding the whole situation has been drawn aside by M. Venizelos, and we behold a tragedy of which not he, but his King, is the victim. The man who was to have been done to death politically will emerge as the hero, while the King will undoubtedly fall beneath the weight of his own iniquity. Can it be otherwise if Venizelos knows his own countrymen? Twice in one year King Constantine has forced from office the man of whom he is personally envious, and the man who alone typifies the spirit of Greece. The first time there was no great issue at stake. Venizelos retired from office merely as a politician who had lost a majority of votes in Parliament. He appealed, still as politician, to the people. They returned him to power with an overwhelming majority. Now the case is different. Venizelos, while still enjoying the support of the majority, has been forced from office on a vital issue. He goes to the people this time as the guardian of the Nation's honour, against a band of intruders and usurpers who seek to ally Greece to an ancient foe, and make the country false to its friends. There can be but one answer, and Venizelos must have felt sure of it when he spoke as he did. King Constantine has thrown down the gage of battle for the second time, not to Venizelos alone, but to the country which stands behind the ex-Prime Minister. He has put himself and his German friends before Greece and her honour. The late Elbert Hubbard spoke with the voice of a prophet when he said that after this war there would be a number of second-hand European crowns for sale. That of King Constantine has been bought by Germany, and Greece will deliver the King with it.

as the logical sequence of the division of the world into two parties, or aggregations of nations, over the great and vital principles on which this war is being fought. It is difficult to see how it is possible for nations in sympathy with the cause of the Allies—a cause which differs from that of Germany as night differs from day—to keep out of the conflict. They must, if they value their own existence and treasure the principles which have evoked their sympathy, range themselves in actual combat by the side of the Allies. If not, then they must be prepared to see themselves, the present Allies, and the principles for which they are fighting, go down before sheer weight of numbers.

It is this issue which we see being worked out in the Balkans. There the propulsion toward a decision on the part of the various nations, and their consequent entry into the fight comes from Germany, which clearly is putting into force wherever she can the idea that nations must be compelled to define themselves either as her friends or as her enemies, and act accordingly. Germany can do this because her policy depends on force, and she herself represents force. The Allies, on the other hand, fighting as they are for ideals of liberty and freedom, have relied, and must rely, on reason and choice. It is impossible to force a nation to fight for freedom, just as it is impossible to compel a man to volunteer. A nation takes up the cause of freedom because that cause appeals to it. Germany, standing as she does for self-interest and territorial and Imperial aggrandisement, and representing as she does terrorism, can operate, and has operated in many ways to gain aid. She has been able to appeal to the cupidity of small nations such as Bulgaria, or she has been able to sway their judgment by threats and terror.

Despite what may be said to the contrary, the Balkan Powers have no serious quarrels as between themselves such as would make them choose one side or other in the colossal combat. Their civilisation, whether it be of a high standard as in the case of Greece, or of a low standard as in the case of Bulgaria, decides for them whether they shall fight for Germanism and all it means, or oppose it. This does not predicate that Bulgaria as a nation is necessarily in sympathy with Germanism, but it does indicate that the civilisation of Bulgaria is not of a sufficiently high standard to permit that country exercising a free choice when bribery, force and fear are met only by an appeal. In the case of Greece we see a higher civilisation in operation. The best that Germany has been able to do there is momentarily to control a section of the Government, and even then only to the extent of using that section to commit the country to neutrality. A similar attempt was witnessed in the case of Italy, but there the democracy was too strong for the pro-German official party, and we believe this will also prove true in the case of Greece. Where there is a real sentiment, a real understanding of the issues of this war, the result we believe is inevitable; that sentiment will express itself either for or against the Allies, and action will follow.

The great war, as we said at the outset, is spreading. The nations outside of those at present actually engaged in the contest are not disinterested spectators as the majority of nations have been in most wars. There is in this contest something that vitally affects each neutral, to a greater or lesser extent. It merely needs time, and some occurrence of a nature that makes decision inevitable, to bring every nation into action on one side or the other. They may elect to fight for Germanism, or to fight against it, just as their own national ideals or aspirations dictate. They must so decide if for no other reason than that Germany will force the decision upon them if she can call to her side a few more allies, or bring into her net a few more dupes, for it cannot be doubted that if Germanism

THE SERBIAN CAMPAIGN

TUESDAY, October 12, 1915.

Serbian Government reports announce that Belgrade has fallen into the hands of the Austro-German forces after a stubborn fight. The news was what might have been expected, and does not signify a great deal except that the enemy have secured for themselves a base of operations across the Danube, with a railroad for further advances in one direction. In the very nature of things the new campaign upon which the Allies have entered must be a defensive one, and it is probably quite in keeping with their strategic plans, which will be based on French ideas, that the Teuton forces shall have an undisputed advance up to a certain point. When this is reached the Allies will be found occupying a position of considerable strength in the face of which further progress by the enemy will at least be slow and extremely costly. Generally speaking we should say that the new campaign will repeat the principal phases of the first German rush toward Paris, though the element of surprise and uncertainty will be eliminated from the minds of the Allied commanders.

Before the Austro-German forces and the Bulgarians can attain their objective, which is not primarily the crushing of Serbia but the relief of Turkey, they must open up a way for their transport and supplies, and this through mountainous country which lends itself easily to a defensive campaign. What forces are available for the defence of a line selected by the Allies are not known, and probably never will be known. So far as we know there must be a fairly strong composite force of French, British and Italian troops available to support the Serbian armies, and the fact that these forces were landed, and a campaign planned before the Teuton plans developed, are the only bright features in the disappointing story of the handling of the Balkans problem by the Allies. There should be now in position to hold the German advance, while the selected defensive position along the railway to Nish and Sofia is consolidated, a force almost equal in numbers to any that Austria and Germany may have launched. Bulgaria is at present the unknown quantity, but under conditions as they prevail she cannot impose an overwhelming balance in favour of her allies. In face of the uncertain attitude of Rumania and Greece she must perforce detach large bodies to watch her frontiers. In fighting capacity the Serbians are still equal to anything like their own numbers. The cablegrams have merely hinted at it, but it may be accepted as certain that in the past two or three months a vast quantity of ammunition, guns and munitions generally have been sent into Serbia by the Allies, and the moral effect of this tangible support by the French and British would alone make the Serbian forces dangerous. They are on their own ground and under proper direction will fight tenaciously. The country is peculiarly difficult in which to wage an offensive campaign. Mountainous positions have to be forced at the bayonet point. Against them artillery will not prove very effective, but from them well-placed artillery liberally supplied with ammunition can execute great losses. The campaign has only opened, and perhaps it is a little early to discuss it, but we feel that the Allies can hold the Teutons in check, and will finally dispel their ideas of any easy march to Constantinople.

is to triumph by weight of numbers, the nations who have been neutral must submit to the fate of those she has crushed. They must either enjoy the benefits of victory with the Allies, and must make that victory sure, or they must sink beneath Germany's triumph. A war that involves the whole world can have no neutral spectators.

THE NON-CENSORSHIP

WEDNESDAY, October 13, 1915.

No one will deny the necessity for a careful censorship of all news published in the newspapers of a country engaged in the great game of war. Whether or not that censorship should be left to the good sense and patriotism of editors, or whether a military official should be the final court of appeal is a point which may be debated at some length. But one thing sanity does demand, and that is that the censorship shall be just, that it shall be consistent, and that it shall not be merely a means of hoodwinking the public and obstructing the legitimate work of a responsible newspaper.

On the first point practically every journal in Great Britain has been agreed since the outbreak of the war. When a press censorship was established there was not a dissentient voice. It was realised that great interests were at stake and that nothing must be done that would in any way hamper the work of the naval and military authorities. Mr. F. E. Smith was the first chief of the Press Bureau, and, in some measure, he accomplished the difficult task to which he was appointed with ability. It was only when he passed certain despatches for publication and was subsequently disowned by Mr. Asquith that it was obvious that red-tape and muddling officialism were once again interfering with the liberty of the subject. Mr. Stanley Buckmaster succeeded Mr. F. E. Smith, and, in the arrogant manner to be found in professional politicians, he announced, in effect, that neither the press nor the public possessed any rights. Since that time the Censorship has been supreme, both in power, inconsistency, and wilful ignorance.

The statements made editorially by the Times, the Morning Post, and the Manchester Guardian are too fresh in public memory to need detailed reiteration. Suffice it to say that it has been pointed out that the British Government has suppressed news known to our enemies and which had already appeared in the bulk of the neutral press of the universe. In Argentina these deficiencies have not been pronounced, for the simple reason that we are able from day to day to publish despatches from every front on which war is being waged. The only point however, which must have been noticed from time to time by the careful observer is that in several important instances German-claimed successes have been announced by wireless from Berlin some time before confirmation or a corrected statement has been issued through British channels.

This state of affairs is far from satisfactory. If a censorship be for the purpose of withholding news from the enemy, why should news of slight German successes be suppressed until such time as exaggerated versions through enemy sources compels the publication of the correct story? If accounts of the effect of the recent Zeppelin raids are not to appear in the London newspapers because such information will enable the enemy to make further successful attacks why are residents in the United Kingdom allowed to transmit through the post stirring stories of the scenes recently witnessed in the Metropolis? Apparently, everyone knows precisely what happened when the Zeppelins visited England except the people resident in the unaffected districts. Recent mails have brought a deluge of such letters to Buenos Aires and we, on one recent occasion, merely refrained from publishing such a letter out of deference to the opinion of the Home Authorities.

The fact is that the Censorship, like so many other institutions during the present war, has failed not only to perform its allotted task but has unnecessarily interfered with the rights of the British public. The most recent London journal to join in the attack on the authorities is the Pall Mall Gazette, which has been notorious for its unswerving support of the

TO OUR CONTEMPORARY

THURSDAY, October 14, 1915.

In keeping with its ignorance of what the canons of decent journalism demand, our effete contemporary the Standard has again seen fit to launch an attack upon THE HERALD to which it is our unpleasant duty to reply. The method of attack is the fabrication of letters to the editor of the Standard denouncing the character of THE HERALD under the guise of an impeachment of Lord Northcliffe, from whom we published on Sunday last a letter complimenting us on the excellence of our news service and congratulating us upon the work done to counteract German propaganda in South America. The method, manner and motive for this attack are as thin and as hollow as the Standard itself, and the spirit behind it all is indicative of the Sinn Fein proclivities which characterise the conduct of the sheet.

There is such a thing as professional etiquette in journalism, and regard for this etiquette, no less than consideration for the reading public, dictate that a newspaper should not indulge in abuse or criticism of its rival contemporary. With this dictum we are entirely in accord, but when in a community numerically limited, as is the English-speaking community in Argentina, there exists a journal which never was, and probably never will be, a newspaper in the broad sense of the term, and which, through jealousy and enmity over the growth of a rival, is continually reverting to methods antedating those of Eatanswill journalism, then the reading public is asked to display some little patience while that parochial-minded sheet receives the rebuke it deserves. For a considerable period, it was a fond delusion in the office of the Standard that THE HERALD did not exist. In recent months, however, this delusion has given place to one that the Standard can attack with impunity the contemporary which it cannot hope to equal as a newspaper. Labouring under this delusion, the Standard has frequently provoked a reply from ourselves and has invariably had the worst of the encounter.

On the last occasion when the Standard attempted to be humorous and "cutting" at the expense of THE HERALD it made the mistake of attaching an absurd editorial note to a letter criticising us. The retort on our part led to a wholesale castigation of the Standard's staff by the Managing Proprietor of that paper, Mr. Mulhall, Government during the time of great trial. The Pall Mall states that the Censor is suppressing unpleasant news already known to the enemy simply for the sake of preserving an atmosphere of false optimism. This attitude, it is claimed, is perpetrating a combination of insult and injury which the country has every right to resent. The charge is a strong one, but it is to be feared that it is only too true. The temporary suppression of the news that M. Venizelos had resigned was a colossal blunder. It served no military purpose; it did not aid the Entente. All it did do was to maintain the people of Great Britain in the blind belief that a Balkan intervention on the side of the Allies was imminent. The Censorship merely delayed an inevitable disappointment. Why? The answer is not easily given; but one fact emerges quite plainly, and that is that the once-free press of the United Kingdom must shake off the shackles which it willingly allowed to have placed upon it. A group of officials whose least recommendation is the possession of brains has done little except to aggravate and obstruct the most powerful recruiting agent at the disposal of the Government; and this without having in any way assisted in the successful prosecution of the war. Mr. Asquith's succession of censors have, indeed, done nothing except to make Britain and her people appear ridiculous.

who delivered a lecture on the folly of playing with fire, and issued instructions that on no account was the Standard to indulge in any attack on THE HERALD. At the moment Mr. Mulhall happens to be in England, hence the disregard of his instructions. We say this deliberately, because nobody possessed of a higher standard of intelligence than that which guides the destinies of the parish magazine or Calle Rivadavia would be deluded into the belief that the letters to the Standard, in which the attack on ourselves is embraced, were the genuine emanations from readers of our contemporary.

In these fabricated Epistles to the Unintellectual the Standard describes THE HERALD as anti-English. It also confesses its customary ignorance of current British history. The justification of this remark is found in the Standard's own statement that it has "no information as to whether or not Lord Northcliffe narrowly escaped death for his dastardly attack on Lord Kitchener." It is common knowledge that the Standard has no information on most important subjects. Regarding the charge that we are anti-English, we do not propose to make reply. Our policy has never been submitted to the judgment of the Standard, and even were that judgment favourable we should not be flattered. The one thing that concerns us and our readers is that we have a policy, and whether it be anti-English or anti-German, it is at least clear and courageous and is anti-humbly. We do not one day publish articles appealing to all and sundry "to do their bit," and when asked to explain ourselves admit that we don't know just what we mean. We do not follow up such articles with a public announcement that "we cannot identify ourselves with the natural working of the national sentiment," or words to similar platitudinous effect. And did we fail to associate ourselves with a public-spirited movement, after having urged all "to do their bit," and then made ourselves publicly ridiculous by attempting to explain our own inconsistency, we hope that we should not be so foolish as to send an emissary to the gentleman who had initiated the movement, and make open confession that, in the absence of the Managing Proprietor, the conduct of the paper was in the hands of those who did not know their business.

If the Standard has anything to say about THE HERALD, then we would advise it to say it openly. If it be the great journal that it imagines itself to be, let it assume one of the virtues of great journalism, which is courage. If the Standard cannot acquire this virtue, then let it conform to the instructions of its managing Proprietor and leave THE HERALD severely alone.

FATAL FALL FROM EXPRESS

DR. JOSE GARCIA FERNANDEZ KILLED.

A melancholy fatality took place yesterday at Avellaneda while the fast train leaving Constitucion at 12.5 noon was running through at a high rate of speed.

A passenger was seen to fall from the platform of one of the cars, and the rest of the train passing over him inflicted shocking injuries causing instant death. The deceased gentleman, who was the well-known La Plata lawyer Dr. José García Fernández, was travelling on the platform, according to one account, because of the crowded interior of the carriages, and as the train struck the sharp curve he lost his balance and fell outwards. The local Comisaria, however, states that the previously recorded statement is incorrect, and that it was in the act of passing from a passenger to the dining car that the fatality occurred.

A most painful sensation has been caused at La Plata by the tragic event as Dr. Fernández was very well known there and universally esteemed for his amiable and upright character. His family left for Avellaneda on receipt of the tragic news. The body was removed from the Avellaneda bridge, where the accident occurred, to the Fiorito Hospital.

Public Opinion as expressed in the Argentine Press.

A BRIGHT ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

(La Prensa.—October 7).

The state of the commercial world in this Republic strikes one as satisfactory, remarks La Prensa, whilst it must also be borne in mind that the outlook on the future is also distinctly satisfactory. One of the factors which specially bear out this point of view is Exchange. The rate of Exchange on London has bettered by 1 o/o, and when it is remembered that this applies to a period when shipments are not as heavy as they will be ere long, when the wool begins to move off and more cereal stocks have to be dealt with, it is easy to see that before very long the gold deposits in the legations will begin again.

There are however other factors that are contributory to the improved general feeling now permeating banking and business circles. Share quotations have improved considerably, and the improvement embraces not only official stocks but also sundry other private companies' paper. In the wool trade prices are likely to go higher than has ever been known before; an operation having been registered recently at $19. The same applies to cereals, prices of which are rising already, whilst to the recent increase credited to maize, linseed, and oats, must be added the rise in the North American markets, which is bound to react locally. Then again, the official report on the French crop, showing as it does some 20 o/o less return than in 1914, must also favour Argentine growers. Finally La Prensa argues that the increased activity of exporters has been the cause of another sharp rise in freights, the latest quotation for Great Britain reaching 70/- per ton, though at the same time the rise in coal freights is also partly responsible.

CLAIM AGAINST THE NATION

(La Nación.—Oct. 8.)

The number of cases wherein permission has been sought to proceed judicially against the national authorities is so great, says La Nación, as to call attention, and many have already been authorised to seek this manner of collecting what is due to them. For it stands to reason that they must be sure of their case, and the terms of their several contracts, ere going to this extreme, since any flaw would instantly invalidate the chance of success. As a matter of fact, the legislative commissions go into all antecedents of the matter ere granting such permission; thus the whole procedure is merely the last form of putting pressure to bear on the Government whereby to collect what is due to the creditor.

These numerous petitions do not speak well for the solvency and integrity of the State, leave the impression that it is a bad payer, and the net result is that the country suffers. First-class firms will no longer tender for Government orders, and in practice it is found that these are left in the hands of a group of professional tenderers who have sufficient influence behind them to be able to collect their accounts, and who quote high prices that shall compensate them for their pains. Tenders under such circumstances are a mockery, for the firms who are in the best position to supply the required goods simply leave the business alone; and if things go on as they are at present the Government runs the risk of not being able to find anyone willing to trust it, and will therefore have to pay dearly to the group in whose hands it has practically placed its affairs.

SHIPPING FREIGHTS

(La Nación.—October 7).

The importance of the freight question in regard to the liquidation of this country's cereal harvest, is, says, La Nación, so manifest that close interest therein is but natural, whilst when the figures reach extraordinary heights commercial circles are alarmed, and with very good reason. This latter phenomenon has shown itself during the past few days in the coal freights from Cardiff to Buenos Aires. From 25/-, their present normal price, they have risen to 45/- for the month of December, and this unusual increase leads one to think, continue La Nación, that there is bound to be a heavy addition to the freights from this country to Europe. Given the cent per cent increase on the coal rates as a base to work on, and the added freight would have been terrific.

There is however no reason for these fears, thinks La Nación. In normal times, when there was a definite relation between outward and homeward freights, shipowners calculating their profits on the round voyage, there might well have been anxiety on the part of shippers. The general disorganization has however upset all normal relations, and freight values are determined by each individual contract at the moment of its fixture. Moreover the advance is only for coal, since the transport of general cargoes is bound to remain stationary in common accord with the requirements of other European nations. Last week freights for Europe rose 10/- and October-November fixtures for Great Britain have been done at 70/-, with the same price paid for Italian ports. But in La Nación's opinion, this rise has nothing to do with the rise in coal freights, being rather related to the Balkan complications and the probability of more tonnage being taken off the trade routes. It is not out of place to remember that this time last year freight to Italy stood at 81/- and quite possibly this year will not see that figure exceeded.

THE REPORT ON THE BUDGET

(La Prensa.—Oct. 8.)

The report of the parliamentary commission appointed to consider the forthcoming budget gives evidence of considerable labour and at the same time enables one to see how the national finances stand, and very far from flattering they are, remarks La Prensa. The report endeavours to show that the income and expenditure have both diminished, whilst at the same time it recommends that the latter item be docked as much as possible. La Prensa argues that the chief diminution in expenditure has, however, been made at the expense of the public works and subsidies to the provinces. In 1913, these accounted for some $421,000,000, whilst in 1916 $343,000,000 is their share. Moreover La Prensa, whilst admitting that the expansion of the country has called for greater administrative outlay, draws attention to the fact that in this respect the 1916 budget is higher than that for 1910. Resources, too, have steadily fallen off, the deficit for 1914 on the customary receipts reaching $156,367,205. Thanks to arbitrary measures and short date credits, coupled with some sweeping economies, the amount passed to the

(La Nación.—October 9).

Special information recently received by the New York American leads one, says La Nación, to look again towards Armenia and its horrors. The old world offers such a vast picture of slaughter and desolation that details are bound to escape the eye. Interested in the dramatic vicissitudes of the Belgian resistance, the French counter-offensive, the Polish battlefields, one has but little attention to give to events that take place beyond the limits of the great theatre of war. Hence the victory of Serbia has passed almost unnoticed, despite the fact that it was a masterpiece of military skill and national heroism; unnoticed also was the particularly atrocious manner which characterised the Austrian invasion. Similarly the recent story of the Turkish horrors in Armenia, horrors that in normal times would have caused all Europe to shudder, has been lost.

It would appear impossible for the Turks to have surpassed their old records, says La Nación, but it is clear that they have done so. The persecution of the Armenians began with the foundation of the empire of the sultans in Asia, and it may be said to have never ceased for a single day. Ottoman administration, everywhere arbitrary and corrupt, has in Armenia been mercilessly ferocious. Borne up by a greatness of soul that is not sufficiently recognised, the Armenian people have survived everything. The massacres of 1896 moved all Europe to intervene, but the habitual hypocrisy of the Porte and the attitude of Germany, which had already begun its Turcophile policy, nullified the hopes that were raised of permanent betterment. To-day, given the Turco-German alliance, the anti-Armenian campaign is being carried on with a bloodthirstiness that has no equal even in Turkish annals. Constantinople politicians, by the aid of the Kurdish hordes, now seek the utter extermination of the Armenian nation. They may be able to do it, seeing that the Porte no longer heeds the voices of those who protected the life and liberties of Greece and Bulgaria. But the civilised world cannot refrain from showing its horror at the torture of a noble people who have for centuries maintained their historic tradition, their national culture, and their Christian faith, beneath the oppression of Turkish militarism.

In round figures the resources for 1916 are estimated at $300,000,000, say $23,000,000 less than the Congressional estimate made in 1914 for the current year. And, as La Prensa remarks, it is a wise prevision, seeing that from 1913 onwards estimates have consistently erred through excess. Thus the ordinary income for 1916 is estimated at $98,000,000 less than that of 1914, and $23,000,000 less than that of 1915. The commission, in common with all Argentines and the majority of the strangers resident here, are confident that better times await the country. They feel, however, that something must be done to meet the needs of the moment, and therefore suggest increased taxation. This resource La Prensa does not consider suitable to the country at the present time. If the fiscal revenues are reduced owing to poor trade, increasing taxation will not help the traders. Rather do the circumstances suggest a broad policy of development. No one will deny that economy ought to prevail in the public expenditure, but it ought to be supplemented by making the most of the natural resources with which Argentina is so amply endowed.

THE PAN-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS

(La Prensa.—October 9).

The work of binding closer and closer the people of America is at the present moment chiefly concerned with the preliminaries for the Pan-American Financial Conference to be held early next year. The purpose of this Conference is to deliberate on the commercial legislation of the various American nations in so far as it concerns international trade, and work for its unification. Undoubtedly the mercantile relationships existing between the several countries constitute, as La Prensa states, one of the most important subjects capable of treatment in a Conference such as is proposed. Isolation, with each state doing what seems best in its own eyes without heed to what is taking place elsewhere, is nowadays quite out of date. To-day the tendency lies in a contrary direction, consultation being comparatively general, whilst Argentina herself has on various occasions taken part in reunions designed to further commercial reciprocity.

Moreover the great importance acquired by the trade of this country is another incentive to its inclusion in the international comity of commercial nations. Its export returns, especially in those departments of trade that are now in most demand, prove that this country stands in an exceptional situation, being destined to increase still further its importance as one of the prime factors of international commerce. The Argentine commission charged with the representation of this Republic at the forthcoming Congress has already begun its labour, and the importance of the task upon which it is engaged will focus public interest on its doings, the more so seeing that the Argentine capital is the destined centre wherein the meeting that is bound to have an effect on our commercial future will be held.

LIMITED COMPANIES

(La Nación.—October 11).

Fundamentally, says La Nación, the decree sanctioned the other day gives official sanction to the pledges given by Dr. Saavedra Lamas to public opinion regarding the control and inspection of limited companies in accordance with the needs of the community. The conclusions arrived at by La Nación were as follows: the Commercial Code at present allows of the exploitation of the public for the benefit of mal-administered concerns; it is also powerless to exercise such control as shall prevent fraud; confuses the faculties of personería jurídica, and commercial capacity; in short, is entirely lacking in insurance legislation, laws dealing with co-operative societies, pension funds, and so forth, there being no guarantees for monies collected from the public, either as regards their investment or administration; a state of affairs that is prejudicial alike to the state, the individual, and respectable limited companies.

The new decree takes a wide view, continues La Nación; and in order to carry out a thorough reform it has called for a report from the department of Justice, covering suggested reform of existing legislation, the same to be handed in before March 31, 1916. This step La Nación considers eminently praiseworthy, since the department of Justice has a large measure of practical experience in this matter whence to draw conclusions. Moreover the new decree also deals with the question of the balances of public companies and the due and proper valuation of their assets as therein set down. As things stand to-day, valuation by balance sheet, or fiscal control, is of no practical utility whatsoever.

MUNICIPAL PURCHASES

(La Prensa.—October 11).

The Intendente's department of the Municipality goes on its way undisturbed says La Prensa, and effects all its purchases for the cleaning department without the slightest regard for the various ordinances that establish the conditions which are supposed to control all buying that exceeds the amount reasonably left to personal discretion. La Prensa states that ever since it first heard that the purchase of forage and other articles was being done through a broker, without tendering, the broker being paid his customary commission, it has not ceased to insist on the fact that such procedure deserved the severest censure, inasmuch as it ran counter to the most elementary ideas of what ought to be the conduct of sound public administration.

When private interests only are in question, one is perfectly at liberty to bestow one's confidence where one pleases; the same does not however apply when the expenditure of public monies is concerned. In such cases the fact that the superior functionaries are certain that their trust is well placed does not exempt them from adhering to the well-established rules designed to prevent misfeasance in any shape or form. Apparently it is useless to insist on this argument, continues La Prensa. The Intendente's department is deaf to all comment, and prefers to administer the commune as though it were part and parcel of its own property; and administers it badly at that. For instance tenders were asked for forage to be used during the last quarter of the current year, and in view of the fact that the samples and prices were not suitable, the Intendente's department has again authorised the cleaning department to go on buying as before.

And so, against wind and tide, the old régime goes ahead. No heed is paid to the frequent comments on the intervention of brokers who in many cases may buy from the very men whose tenders have been refused, and with it all the Intendente appears to be thought infallible, and regardless of the gravity of the acts stated.

THE INTENDENTE'S ABSURDITIES

(La Prensa.—October 12).

The Intendente, who is giving abundant ground for criticism owing to the tactless method of administration which has on more than one occasion been commented upon in the columns of La Prensa, has caused another sensation, this time in the heart of the city. A body of inspectors entered the cafés and restaurants situated in the vicinity of Esmeralda and Corrientes, with instructions to turn out all women found on these premises, whilst at the same time strict orders were given to the owners against their re-entry save at the risk of severe penalties. The latter, La Prensa states, though threatened by persons duly authorised, are not legal. Many people witnessed the scene, and general disapproval of the Intendente's action was expressed.

Thus, continues La Prensa, the Intendente reopens his campaign against night birds, despite the unfavourable reception given to his attempt to send everyone home early which marked the beginning of his term of office. The fact of the matter is that this particular idiosyncrasy, right or wrong, does not go down in Buenos Aires. What, asks La Prensa, is the object in thus prohibiting women from taking refreshment in the cafés and night restaurants? Presumably his action is supposed to have a moralizing effect. But apparently he has failed to realize that this is not likely to have any effect on masculine street walking. Either let the women be kept absolutely within doors, or, if a certain amount of liberty is admitted, let it be realized that they have the right to such services as the cafés and other resorts of that nature afford. The Intendente errs from excess of zeal, and has a paternal comprehension of the nature of public morality which is out of place, especially when exercised without the slightest discretion. In conclusion La Prensa expresses its belief that the Intendente wishes to manage Buenos Aires on patriarchal lines, and is incapable of realizing certain crude facts of life common to all great capitals. Buenos Aires is one of the most moral capitals in the world, but the Intendente means to go still further, confounding morality with hypocrisy.

LIQUIFYING THE BANK DEPOSITS

(La Nación.—October 12).

The copious emissions that have eventually come to stagnate in the treasuries of the banks have raised the problem as to how these funds may best be drawn from their unproductive retirement. For some time past, says La Nación, especially since the banks have prepared to drop their rate of interest on deposits, the Government has been trying to think out some scheme for diverting these funds to the public loans, and it is suggested that the operation may well be carried out by the Banco de la Nación. On advising its clients that the interest is to be reduced, it will lay before them the advisability of investing in Government bonds, bearing better rates, and equally facile of realization. This is the keynote of the scheme. If it is omitted the depositor might well refuse to accept the risk of market depreciation; thus it implies that the bank will buy back at the original price of purchase, thereby taking the operation right outside the orbit of the ordinary market.

This pledge would mean at the present moment a tax of 15% on the Government fund, given the actual price of Argentine bonds. A fund for repayment would also be requisite, and this could only be provided by the Banco de la Nación, since the treasury is not in a position to take on any such responsibility. It would moreover mean a heavy responsibility for the Government, and even the bank might find that the charge was one which weighed too heavily on its normal method of working, and this, says La Nación is the grave disadvantage of fixing the value of the bond on a permanent basis. Yet the promptness with which he can obtain his money is one of the chief attractions to the bank depositor, whilst the rate of interest suggested, 5%, is less than that afforded by the Cédula. So that given equal conditions of realization, the former value would have the preference. Large sums of idle money do not necessarily imply a demand for the public funds. The Crédito Interno 5% Loan was launched with this belief, but its results did not prove as satisfactory as was first expected. In short, financially considered, the scheme for turning bank deposits into the public debt looks more than a little risky, and may land the treasury and the Government into unforeseen difficulties.

MORE MUNICIPAL PURCHASES

(La Prensa.—Oct. 13.)

The persistency with which the Intendente insists on buying how and when he will, instead of calling for tenders, forces one to comment, remarks La Prensa, on the strange silence of the Municipal Commission. Tendering has practically ceased in many important branches. From the 1st July, forage for the street-cleaning department has been bought direct, despite the fact that these purchases call for at least $60,000 per month. Indeed, the Intendente has gone so far as to pay accounts that the Accountancy department has commented upon as unconstitutional when unsanctioned by the Commission aforesaid. To them ought to be submitted all accounts that call for special comment, and the omission of this formality makes it the duty of the Commission to look into the antecedents of the case, unless it is determined to adopt the part of a merely passive body, prepared to legalise with its sanction any and every act of the Intendente.

By paying these accounts, the Intendente shows that it is his intention to pay no heed to the law and the Municipal Commission, and the latter body is bound, declares La Prensa, to intervene, since its silence implies its complete nullity. If it does not adopt the means that the case calls for, it will show itself lacking in the will to control the administration of the commune and that it has put the Intendente above all law. In which case, concludes La Prensa, the bad management that characterises municipal affairs will probably continue.

LOCAL PUBLIC LOANS

(La Nación.—Oct. 13.)

The Minister of Finance has given La Nación further details of the scheme whereby it is proposed to persuade people to invest their savings in the Argentine Internal 5% Loan, with its 1% amortisation. It is intended to ask Congress to grant the Banco de la Nación the necessary faculty whereby it may offer its depositors bonds emitted by the State for the purpose of carrying on public works. Actually the Banco de la Nación is swamped with deposits. Of the $380,000,000 in savings bank accounts, $280,000,000, more or less, are held by the said institution. At present the bank has to pay enormous sums for interest on this money—which it cannot find a use for—and, as La Nación remarks, it would be a great help if it could turn this capital over to the State.

Government, on its part, would offer to repay the takers of bonds in full at any time, in cash, at the original purchase price, always provided the investors left their securities in charge of the Banco de la Nación, who would collect the coupons and credit their clients' accounts. If the bonds were taken out of the bank's charge, the right to re-convert at cost price would lapse. The price at which the bonds would be issued would be 90, thus giving 5.56% on the depositors' money, the Banco de la Nación receiving ½% of the nominal value of the bonds as its commission. Hence, as La Nación ingeniously puts it, the depositors would be as safe as if their money was in the bank, whilst they were enabled to get higher interest. In all, there are $120,000,000 of the said loan available for issue under these conditions. Finally, at the stated periods for the payment of the service of this debt, Government must deposit in the Banco de la Nación the proportional amount of amortisation.

THE SABBATH CLOSING

HAIRDRESSERS WISH TO BE SAVED FROM IT.

The Hairdressing Profession is on principle at least, not in accord with the proposal of complete Sunday closing and the Minister of Interior is being solicited for a favourable reply to the petition against the measure presented on August 25 last. In an eloquent peroration the latest note reminds the Minister of the heavy burdens already laid on the trade and the extreme difficulty experienced by small businesses in making ends meet, in spite of the hard work of the principals and employees. As a melancholy evidence of this, the large number of recent suicides is indicated. The Hairdressers request permission to work until 12 m. Sunday being a very busy day with them when many of their clients who cannot find time on other days take the opportunity to overtake and correct their tonsorial deficiencies. The Minister's reply has not been received.

CHRIST CHURCH BARRACAS

AN EXCELLENT CONCERT.

Wednesday, October 13,

It is quite some considerable time since a concert was held at Christ Church, Barracas, and it cannot be denied that when at last the time came, as it did last evening, the entertainment was excellent, and certainly the best concert held at Christ Church.

The church hall overflowed, and the appreciation of the audience was most marked. Not only was the audience delighted, but the singers themselves were enthusiastic concerning the accompaniments of Mr. Ellis Phillips. It is rare to find perfection in this particular, but Mr. Phillips who is the organist at St. George's Chapel, Quilmes, was well nigh perfect, and as a consequence the singers one and all excelled themselves. Apart from his playing there was a new kind, a refreshing kind of entertainment given by him. Mr. Ellis Phillips "at the piano" is a rather poor description of what this gentleman does or of what he is capable. "The Charge of the Light Brigade" in various characters, was sufficiently entertaining, but better still a rendering on the piano of a mixed medley between "In the Shadows" and "Rule Britannia," while "Potted Shakespeare," a composition of Mr. Phillip's own, was the best of all. This artist, for artist he unquestionably is, was encored no less than six times.

The items he gave were, however, but a small portion of the concert, Mrs. Alfred Drysdale was singing and doing so in excellent voice, and with charm. Mr. Gabb excelled himself in Blumenthal's "Evening Song," which was rendered to perfection and exquisitely accompanied.

Mr. Bideleux was just as good as ever, and perhaps on account of the manner of Mr. Phillips, in his rendering of the music, was better than usual, which says much.

Unfortunately, Mrs. R. H. Thompson was suffering from cold, but her two songs, which she changed from her original selections were pleasing. The Rev. Morrey Jones greatly assisted in the general enjoyment with his banjo.

A vast change is recognisable at Christ Church, Barracas, during the past three months—in the concerts given, which could not have been superior nor more appreciated than that given last evening. The programme was as follows:

Part I.

Pianoforte Solo, Selected, Miss Thompson.

Song, "The Deathless Army," (Trotter), Mr. F. F. Bideleux.

Song, "Bird of Love Divine," (Haydn Wood), Mrs. A. T. Drysdale.

Banjo Solo, "Dinah's Wedding," (J. Pidoux), Rev. Morrey Jones.

Song, "Eyes that Need to gaze in Mine," (Olcott and Ball), Mrs. R. H. Thompson.

Song, "My Dreams," (Tosti), Mr. Charles Gabb.

At the Piano, "The Grocer's Song." Encore: "Charge of the Light Brigade," and a pianoforte medley, Mr. Ellis Phillips.

Part II.

Pianoforte Solo, Selected, Miss Thompson.

Song, "Trooper Johnny Ludlow." Encore: "A Veteran's Song," Mr. F. F. Bideleux.

Song, "The Nightingales of Lincoln Inn," (Herbert Oliver), Mrs. A. T. Drysdale. Encore: "Down Vauxhall way."

At the Piano, "Potted Shakespeare," "In the time of Richard I." and "By Desire," Mr. Ellis Phillips.

Song, "I Love you truly," (D'Hardelot), Mrs. R. H. Thompson.

Song, "An Evening Song," (Blumenthal), Mr. George Gabb. Encore: "Two Eyes of Grey."

Banjo Solo, "Andante and Waltz," (Sullivan), Rev. Morrey Jones, God Save the King.

BLOODSTOCK SALES

STUD SAN JACINTO.

The sale of the youngsters from the Haras San Jacinto was concluded yesterday, but the few that had not been previously disposed of were only a very ordinary lot. Those that attracted the most attention were Picos Pardos, by Pippermint—Prisonbound, a nice, good legged colt; and Tanguero, a brother of Don Gabino.

Remolino, bought by Sr. R. Coll. for $2000, was cheap, and appeared well worth the money. He is a brother of Dosel, and much like in appearance. Remolino was perhaps the bargain of the sales.

The total amount realised was $23,700. Occurente, a full brother to the now famous Occurrencia, was withdrawn from the sales. He is not a particularly handsome colt, but is well boned and powerful looking.

The closing results of the sales were as follows:—

Bufo, Val d'Or—Batahola, $2200, sold to the Stud Palermo Chico.

Votante, Val d'Or—La Marseillaise, full brother to the lately deceased Sufragio, $3000, sold to Sr. A. Cibould.

Submarino, by Pippermint—Canonera, a full brother of Pasco, sold to Sr. F. Goyeneche, for $1400.

Pastelito, by Pippermint—La Luna, $1600, to E. Celery.

Tanguero, by Pippermint—Dancing Fox (Flying Fox blood), a good colt, sold cheap to Sr. E. Cerda for $3200.

Remolino, by The Whirlpool—Dear-est (Ben d'Or blood), sold very cheap to Sr. R. Coll, for $2000.

Rencilla, by Pippermint—Gresca, $1800 to the Stud La Fe.

Sal Gruesa, by Pippermint—Modern Agnes, $1400, to Sr. E. Celery.

Quinua, by Pimental—Biznaga (Saint Gall blood), sold to Sr. Quijano for $1700.

HARAS BRONCE.

There was another excellent attendance at Palermo yesterday afternoon to witness the continuation of the horse sales at Tattersall's. Some of the progeny of Bronce, Cyllene and Roscate Dawn were listed to come under the hammer.

Out of some sixteen yearlings from the Haras Bronce, twelve of these were sold and realised in total $82,400. The highest price paid was $15,000.

With the exception of 3 or 4 colts and one filly the stock that came under the hammer was only ordinary, but in quite a number of cases was disposed of cheaply, and one or two undoubted bargains were picked up.

The colt that attracted most attention and sold for the highest price was Miguel-Angel by Bronce out of Miss Gray by Pietermaritzburg. He is a strongly boned powerful colt, with clean limbs and full quarters. He was however none too cheap at $15,000. He was sold to Sr. Durrieu.

The colt that seemed to us the best bargain and one of the most likely looking customers in the sale was Shakespeare by Bronce out of Salt Tears (Ben d'Or blood). He is a brother of Broncina. (Scintillant, his mother's half sister won the Cesar-witch). A powerful colt with plenty to work upon, perhaps a shade long in the pastern, he looked as though he would be heard of again in days to come. He was sold to the trainer, Pio Jean, for $10,000.

Aristoteles, Bronce out of Artesiana by Orange, was sold to the Montiel Stud, for $11,000. He is a likely sort but was somewhat expensive.

Other colts were:—Torbellino by Bronce out of Traviata by Eager, $5,000, sold to Sr. Gigena.

Floridablanca by Bronce out of St. Philomela by St. Simon, sold cheaply to Sr. Olivieri, for $8,000. A thoroughly useful colt.

Artesano by Bronce, Algeria by Porteno, $5,000, to the Stud Cayupan.

Salterio by Bronce, out of So So by Sundridge, half brother to Sun Yat Sen, $2,500, to the Stud Rosario. Ameghino by Bronce, out of Lady Argon, $2,700, to Sr. Regueires.

The six fillies that were sold had but little to commend them. The two best were Marianela and Romany Lady. Three of the fillies were withdrawn of which the best was Rydal Beauty, a handsome and attractive daughter of Bronce out of Rydal Water by Orme. The mother is a half sister of Troutbeck.

Marianela by Bronce out of Mine-ra (Gay Hermit blood), sold for $6,500, to the trainer Pio Jean. She is a nicely built filly with sufficient bone to build on and well quartered.

Romany Lady by Bronce out of Romany Lass by Eager. (The mother is a winner of the Rous Memorial Stakes), was sold to Sr. Liani for $3,500. Rather light in bone she was nevertheless cheap at the price.

Other fillies were Dulzura by Bronce out of Desca by Desmond. (The mother is a half sister of the four times winner of the Liverpool Cup, China Cook). This filly was sold to Sr. E. Rivella and was cheap at $3,500.

Coquina by Bronce out of Cobweb by Diamond Jubilee, (a sister of Chucker Out) was sold to the Stud Eclair of Montevideo for $2,700. She appeared somewhat light of bone and lacking in stamina.

Rondalla by Bronce out of Rehear-sal, (Kendal blood), a somewhat poor sort, sold to Sr. Paredes for $1,500.

Fornarina by Bronce out of Fonta-na, full sister to Velasquez, a well built filly with stamina and bone, sold to Sr. Edmundo Frazer for $3500.

Albufera by Escamillo out of American Girl was withdrawn as was La Gloriosa by Bronce out of Good Scotch, (a full sister to Solis). This completed the sales of the Haras Bronce. The average price of the colts was $7,400, and that of the fillies sold $3,533.

HARAS PORRAZO CHICO AND J.C.V.

The horse sales at Palermo yesterday afternoon were anything but a success and were poorly attended. The class of animal under the hammer was anything but good, in comparison to other sales and quite a number of them had perforce to be withdrawn for want of bidders.

The two best colts sold were Infalible by Millenium out of Distinguida. Although on the small side he was good in bone and build, with plenty to work upon. He was sold on commission for $8,000.

Impecable was another by Mil-lenium out of Rosina and in our opinion the best colt sold. He is a well cut powerful colt on the small side, but distinctly attractive. He was reasonably cheap at $7,500 and was bought by the Stud Tevere.

Imposible III by Millenium out of Portefita by Porteno a small but strong colt $3,500 to Stud La Celina.

Incredulo by Millenium out of Pi-rueta, full brother of Ducho a colt with good quarters and cheap at $3,000 to Sr. A. Sibourd.

Incendio II by Pimiento out of Ser-pentina $1,600.

Ironico by Porrazo out of Calabaza a coarse built colt heavily boned $1,000.

Ilustre II by Millenium out of Ale-grias $1,200.

Idem Idem by Millenium out of Ale-grias, half brother to Eslabon with-drawn at $1,000.

Iris IV by Pimiento out of Natita a short legged powerful filly with a poor back $2,000.

Ignea by Pimiento out of Bruyula withdrawn at $1,000.

Impetuosa II by Pimiento-Defensa a poor sort with a bad tempered eye $600.

Incognita by Millenium out of Pil-dora withdraw at $2000 a good well built racy filly with rather narrow quarters.

HARAS J. C. V.

Only one colt was sold, El Tero, by Bonaparte-Salamina by Kendal. A coarse built animal $1,200.

Batintin by Bonaparte out of Belle Dame heavy in front with fair quart-

RELIEVED OF HIS COMMAND

Action Taken Against Suvla Bay Leader

GOVERNMENT'S "NO REPRISALS" POLICY

Continued Political Dissension in Britain

LONDON, OCT. 20.

TO-DAY'S DEBATE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE GENERAL SITUATION REVEALED THE FACT THAT THE OFFICER WHO COMMANDED THE LANDING OF BRITISH TROOPS AT SUVLA BAY ON THE GALLIPOLI PENINSULA WILL BE DEPRIVED OF HIS COMMAND.

THE WAR UNDER SECRETARY, MR. TENNANT, REFUSED TO GIVE FURTHER INFORMATION ON THE GROUND THAT IT WOULD BE AGAINST THE INTERESTS OF THE PUBLIC TO DO SO.

A HARROWING WEEK

Gloomy Press Predictions

POSSIBLE COLLAPSE OF THE COALITION

London, Oct. 20.

"Truth" says that the last week in London was the most harrowing experienced since the war broke out. It says:—

"Not only has the military situation on the Continent developed a new cause of alarm; not only do Zeppelin bombs compel us to close our doors; not only are the croakers more vociferously confident than ever before; but we are threatened with acute Cabinet crisis, and we have seen the ugly portent of resignation of the French Foreign Minister.

"In times like these one envies the soldiers in the trenches, held together and braced as heroic sacrifices in the presence of the enemy, blessedly ignorant of the quakings and squealings at home. The more wrangling over the best method of making war, the longer the war will last."

THE CABINET CRISIS.

London, Oct. 20.

The illness of the Prime Minister has had the effect of producing an air of greater calm in political circles than would otherwise have attended the resignation of Sir Edward Carson. From present appearances there will be no more resignations. It is quite likely that Mr. Asquith's absence will be extended to nine or ten days.

This enforced cessation of political passions is expected to give time for the reconciliation of differences, which, it seems generally believed, are not yet actually settled.

Mr. Frederick Smith succeeds to the Attorney Generalship, and Mr. George Cave, a Unionist Member of Parliament, succeeds Mr. Smith. The "Daily Express" says that it regards the appointments as certain, and asserts that the crisis is ended.

Mr. Horatio Bottomley in a speech at Newcastle last night predicted the immediate collapse of the Coalition Government, but the "Express" thinks that the new experiment would be no more successful than the coalition, and that before the end of the war we should have a revolution or a National Council of business men.

War Committee Secrets

CONFERENCE ON CAMPAIGN IN THE BALKANS.

London, Oct. 20.

The members of the War Committee held a long session to-day which was also attended by some of the superior officers of the British Army and Navy.

Various resolutions of importance regarding the campaign in the Balkans were adopted; but as secrecy is considered as indispensable to the success of these plans, nothing has been published about them.

In consequence of this, it may appear for some days that the operations of the Allies are weakening, and that the enemy is getting the advantage; but this will be merely due to the necessity for keeping silence until the plans are in the course of full development.

Asquith's Health

PREMIER'S CONDITION REPORTED TO BE IMPROVING.

London, Oct. 20.

The medical bulletins of this morning report a slight improvement in the condition of Mr. Asquith.

NO REPRISALS

British Government's Attitude

STATEMENT IN THE COMMONS

London, Oct. 20.

A suggestion that the British aerial squadrons should exact reprisals from Germany for the Zeppelin raids was opposed by the Government.

Mr. Tennant, Under Secretary of State for War, said that the Flying Corps should not be diverted from its principal responsibility, which was to carry out strictly military measures.

Coalition Government

JOHN REDMOND BELIEVES POSITION IS PRECARIOUS.

London, Oct. 20.

The illness of the British Prime Minister may result in the postponement of the debate in the House of Commons of the war policy of the Government and the differences in the Cabinet which led to the resignation of Sir Edward Carson.

Mr. John Redmond's opinion is that the present state of affairs threatens to make the position of the Coalition Government precarious.

[Note: Mr. F. E. Smith has for several years been regarded as one of the most brilliant of the "young" men in the House of Commons. He was the first chief of the Press Bureau.]

Insufficient Men

BRITAIN'S RECRUITING PROBLEM

London, Oct. 19.

Brigadier General Sir Eric Swayne who is actively engaged in the recruiting campaign said in a speech at Hull yesterday:—"We want to have another three million men in camp by next spring. By placing overwhelming forces in the field we shall be able to convince Germany of the uselessness of continuing the struggle."

There is at present a sufficient influx of recruits to supply the daily demand and fill the gaps in the field; but Lord Kitchener, who is looking to the future, and has prepared a programme for maintaining seventy divisions in the field of battle next year, is not satisfied with the rate of recruits and wants it to be doubled. He says that he must have half a million men more within the next four months.

The recently compiled National Register disclosed that there were 1,900,000 men available for service apart from those who are employed in the munitions factories, railways, etc. This total includes many who have been found to be physically below standard, and the actual number of men fit to take the field is only about 1,250,000.

Britons in Bondage

Australia's Determination

"TO DO MORE THAN SHE HAS DONE YET."

London, Oct. 20.

Despatches from Australia and New Zealand quote the newspapers as asserting that the heavy losses of the Australasian forces at Gallipoli have only roused the Colonies to greater determination, and in no wise cause despondency. The papers urge confidence in the British Government, and deprecate criticism. The Minister of Defence in Australia stated in a speech that Australia is prepared to do more than she has done yet.

BRITISH ARMY GAINING GROUND

Progress Between Dixmude and Nieuport

DEADLY FIRE OF FRENCH ARTILLERY

Pope Intervenes to Save Condemned Belgian Ladies.

London, Oct. 20.

Field Marshal Sir John French reports that the British artillery is shelling the German positions in Flanders along the whole front and decimating the enemy's ranks. None of the enemy's counter-attacks have made any progress owing to the energetic action of the British troops.

War Office despatches announce that the British continue to gain ground between Dixmude and Nieuport, where, in conjunction with the Belgians, they deliver constant attacks. The enemy is known to have sustained important losses.

SUPERIORITY OF FRENCH ARTILLERY FIRE.

Paris, Oct. 20.

Despatches from the front announce that at most points from the North Sea to the Vosges the French are still maintaining the offensive and inflicting very important losses on the enemy.

Their artillery has thoroughly established its superiority over that of the Germans, who are learning more and more to dread the intensive fire of the French batteries. Their trenches are battered by prolonged cannonades which destroy their defences and compel them to abandon position after position without being able to escape the deadly fire which relentlessly pursues them throughout the vast network of their labyrinths.

The French have had no losses worth mentioning.

"L'Osservatore Romano" states that His Holiness Pope Benedict has appealed to the Kaiser through Cardinal Gasparri for the commutation of the sentence of death pronounced upon the Countess of Belleville, Mlle. Thulier and seven Belgians who were accused of having aided French and Belgian prisoners to escape. The Kaiser has ordered execution of the sentence to be suspended until he has had further information upon the subject.

It is reported that King Alphonso of Spain is also moving in the matter.

Captured Submarines

LYING IN BRITISH PORTS.

New York, Oct. 19.

According to a local newspaper, the outcome of the steps taken by the British Admiralty to cope with the German submarine "blockade" of British waters has been that, at a certain British port the name of which is not allowed to be published, there are lying thirty-two captured German submarines fit for service in the British Navy whenever required; while at other points there are eight more undergoing repairs.

Adding to these the number of German submarines that have been sunk and lost beyond recovery, it is plain that the losses to British shipping are more than counterbalanced by the losses of the enemy.

This accounts for Germany's announcement of her desire to preserve the friendship of the United States by acceding to President Wilson's wishes in regard to the abandonment of the campaign.

Hun-boat Sunk

BRITISH SUBMARINE SUCCESS.

Copenhagen, Oct. 20.

A British submarine has sunk the German steamer Daleliven in the North Sea. The crew escaped.

BRITAIN AND THE BALKANS

Silence of the Government

NO INFORMATION FOR PARLIAMENT

London, Oct. 19.

Mr. Asquith being absent from the House of Commons this afternoon owing to illness, he was represented by Mr. Lloyd George, who eluded all the propounders of what the Government considered awkward questions.

He said that it is impossible at present to reply to the urgent requests for a statement on the situation in the Dardanelles, or as to Italian co-operation in the Balkans. He was only able to say that the methods whereby Italy can most effectively help Serbia were a common cause of discussion among the Allies.

Lord Robert Cecil, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, replied with the determination of avoiding premature revelations of any nature. The matter involved was evidenced by the query regarding the Dardanelles campaign, of which Mr. Robert Outhwaite, Liberal member for Hanley, had given notice.

The query was, whether Russia still attached the same importance to the Dardanelles as when the British Ambassador at Petrograd declared that the operations were undertaken at the request of Russia with the object of drawing off the Turkish forces in the Caucasus.

Sir Robert Cecil said that it would obviously be improper to make a statement regarding the importance attached to any special theatre of war by any of the Allies or by ourselves.

Admitting that the British Ambassador was accurately quoted, the Under Secretary added that the quotation ought not to be taken as a complete statement of all the considerations involved.

He continued that when notice of the query was given it was designed to elicit whether Lord Milner's suggestion of the evacuation of Gallipoli found any official supporters.

In reference to the report that Lord Reading's mission to the United States had also been to negotiate respecting appeals from the British Prize Courts to an International Tribunal, Sir Robert declared that there was not any truth in the report that permission or authorisation had been given to Lord Reading to discuss the general question at Washington of the freedom of the seas.

Hamilton's Return

DARDANELLES COMMANDER TO CONFER WITH THE GOVERNMENT.

London, Oct. 19.

General Ian Hamilton, Commander of the British forces in the Dardanelles, is expected back here in a few days to report on the progress of operations.

It is stated that General Hamilton will be superseded in the command by General Charles Carmichael Monro.

NO ABANDONMENT OF DARDANELLES CAMPAIGN.

London, Oct. 19.

The recall of General Hamilton to London is due to the necessity of consulting him upon certain essential points in connection with the campaign. In no case would the Allies entertain the idea of abandoning the operations in the Dardanelles.

As a matter of fact, the Allies are making excellent progress, and the British troops have distinguished themselves by their valour and important successes. Their losses have been heavy, but those of their opponents infinitely more so; and they are constantly receiving reinforcements. Sooner or later a final victory is confidently anticipated.

Mountain Warfare

ITALIANS' STEADY PROGRESS.

Rome, Oct. 20.

A despatch from the headquarters of the Italian Commander-in-Chief dated the 19th instant reports as follows:—

"Supported by an intense and efficacious artillery fire, our infantry yesterday took the offensive at various points along the Tyrolean frontier of the Trentine, obtaining notable successes.

"In the valley of Lagarina we occupied Brentonico and a castle on the Mori road.

"On the Cordevole our troops occupied the north-east of Sasso di Mezzodi, an important height of 2249 metres, and the counterfort extending from that height to the right bank of the mountain stream between Soranaz and Ornella. On the opposite bank we also occupied the counterfort extending from Col Lana to Livina.

"In the Falzarego zone we completed the conquest of Sasso Stria, reaching the crest, which is 2477 metres in height.

"In Carnia we are continuing active operations with a view to driving the enemy out of the wooded country at the head of the Chiarzo torrent.

"On the Carso yesterday there was a lively artillery duel, which was prolonged with occasional intermissions throughout the night."

Trouble in Tunis

FRENCH TROOPS ENGAGED WITH ROBBER BANDS.

New York, Oct. 20.

The "Evening Sun" publishes a telegram from Paris which says that the small and little heard of war in Tunis consists principally of encounters with large bands of robbers who cross the Tripoli frontier, cut telegraph wires and rob the convoys of the French advance posts.

Important fighting of this kind occurred on September 25 and October 9. For a considerable time a French garrison of 200 men kept swarms of the robbers at bay until relief arrived.

Bulgaria, the Betrayer

TSAR'S STERN INDICTMENT.

Petrograd, Oct. 20.

The following Imperial manifesto has been issued to the Russian nation:—

"We hereby make known to all our loyal subjects that the treason of Bulgaria to the Slav cause, prepared with perfidy since the beginning of the war, has now, although it seemed impossible, become an accomplished fact. The Bulgarian troops have attacked our loyal Ally, Serbia, already bleeding from her struggle against a stronger enemy.

"Russia, and the Great Powers, our Allies, tried to dissuade the Government of Ferdinand of Coburg from taking the fatal step, and to persuade her that the realisation of the ancient aspirations of the Bulgar people regarding the annexation of Macedonia would be assured to them by other means in conformity with Slav interests; but underhand methods prompted by the Germans, and fratricidal hatred of Serbia, triumphed.

"Bulgaria, our co-religionist, liberated but a short time ago from the Turkish yoke by the fraternal love of the Russian people, openly took sides with the enemies of the Christian faith, Slavism and Russia. The Russian people regard with sorrow the treason of Bulgaria, who has been so near to them until these last few days; and, with bleeding heart, draws the sword against her, leaving the fate of the betrayer of the Slav cause to the just punishment of God."

Ferdinand's Perfidy

A Governmental official communication published in this city says in reference to the part played by King Ferdinand, that he continues to be a German Prince although reigning over Bulgaria. The communication concludes as follows:—

"During almost thirty years the Prince of Coburg has stood between Russia and Bulgaria. Throughout this period Russia has never ceased to hope that its sister nation would at last open her eyes.

"Even now when Bulgaria is sacrificing herself to German perfidy Russia has still not abandoned the hope that Bulgarians, faithful to historic tradition, will not lift their hands against the sons of the Russian warriors who died for Bulgaria."

Isolation of Russia

TEUTONS' REASON FOR COMMENCING BALKAN CAMPAIGN.

Naples, Oct. 20.

Travellers who have arrived from the Balkans by the steamship Rumania assert that the real purpose of the struggle in the Balkans is not to prevent munitions and food being sent through to Constantinople, so much as to keep the Central Powers from cutting the supply of munitions which have been sent to Russia by the Allies over the Salonica railway. They say that Bulgaria is in the best position to carry out the plan of the Central Powers and at the same time deprive Serbia of munitions.

Optimism in Russia

CONFIDENCE RESTORED BY NEWS OF TEUTON FAILURES.

London, Oct. 20.

Telegrams from Petrograd say that little by little confidence is being restored by the news that the enemy is not advancing.

The Russian Minister of the Interior has informed a journalist that the Germans may be considered as being exhausted, and are now doing their best to bring about strikes in the country and hinder the activity in producing munitions.

In Petrograd the greatest importance is attached to the successes obtained by the Russian troops in the central Styrian region. It is stated that in a single day the Russians captured from 3,000 to 4,000 prisoners belonging to three different army corps.

At present the Teutons have not sufficient forces to advance between the Stoched and Styrian rivers.

WAR MINISTER SAID TO BE IN PAY OF THE GERMANS.

London, Oct. 15.

A high Russian official who has been staying temporarily in this city is known to have stated to certain members of the British Parliament that the incapacity of the former Russian Minister of War, General Sukhomlinoff, has been the sole cause of the severe reverses suffered by the Muscovite forces. He declares that the General, embittered by not having been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army, took this way of revenging himself, and that, by order of the Tsar, proceedings are about to be taken against him.

BY JOURNALIST AT SALONICA

"Efforts are being made to rescue the Ministers at Nish by automobile; but the roads are deep in mud, and it is believed that the attempt will be unsuccessful.

"Mackensen's army, which is estimated by the Serbian military authorities at 24,000 men, is cutting through the Bajacar region, where the principal Bulgarian forces are operating with the purpose of engaging in joint action against Nish."

LONDON RAIDEDMORE MURDERS BY ZEPPELINS*LITTLE MATERIAL DAMAGE

London, Oct. 14.

The Home Secretary has issued a notice saying:—

"On Wednesday night some Zeppelins attacked a certain part of London and dropped a number of explosive bombs. The material damages caused are of slight importance. Several fires broke out, but were quickly extinguished by the fire brigades.

"The Admiralty will issue a supplementary report when all information has been obtained. At present it can only be stated that no public building has suffered any damage.

"As far as has so far been ascertained, six men and two women were killed, and the number of injured is thirty-four. With the exception of a soldier, who was one of those killed, all the victims were civilians. These are the figures obtainable up to 11.45 last night."

45 KILLED; 114 INJURED.

London, Oct. 14.

The British Admiralty announces that the Zeppelin raid on London last night resulted in 45 persons being killed and 114 injured.

BERLIN'S STORY OF THE RAID.

New York, Oct. 14.

A wireless message from Berlin transmits the following official bulletin which has been posted in that city:

"On the night of October 13-14, German airships attacked the city of London and adjacent important establishments, as well as the batteries at Ipswich.

"Several attacks were made, especially on the City of London Docks and the waterworks at Hampton, near London; and Woolwich was also heavily bombarded with incendiary bombs.

"At all the places attacked important explosions and great fires were observed.

"All the airships returned safely, although they were vigorously attacked when passing the English coast."

EFFECT OF THE RAIDLARGE INCREASE IN NUMBER OF VOLUNTEERS.

London, Oct. 15.

The immediate result of the last and most important Zeppelin raid on London has been a marked increase in the number of recruits that have volunteered for active service.

The Government is said to contemplate energetic reprisals against Germany. The matter will very probably be dealt with at a Cabinet Council.

It is also stated that the British Foreign Office will call the attention of the United States to the danger to American subjects in London caused by the aerial attacks of the enemy.

NEUTRALITY A CRIMEBISHOP OF LONDON'S STRONG STATEMENT.

London, Oct. 18.

At Hackney yesterday, the Bishop of London, presiding at the ceremony of delivering an ambulance for the front, said:

"When I think of the situation of Belgium and a part of France, it pains me to remember that there are still neutral countries." The prelate added that under present circumstances he considered neutrality almost a crime. The Allies are fighting the mailed fist with their bare hands.

BOMB HIS SLEEPING TOWNS*"GLOBE'S" ADVICE TO THE PEOPLE

London, Oct. 14.

The "Globe," which has been conducting a campaign advocating reprisals for Zeppelin attacks, says:

"The public knows now that the Zeppelin is choosing its own time and circumstances for attack, and is practically immune against ordinary aerial weapons.

"The only way to hit the enemy is to strike at him as he strikes at us, by bombing his sleeping towns."

NAVAL GUNNERS NEEDED WHO CAN DISTINGUISH BETWEEN ZEPPELINS AND STARS.

London, Oct. 14.

With further reference to the Zeppelin attack of last night, the "Globe" says:—

"People who went to their business this morning amid the spectacle of shattered window fronts may be forgiven if they wonder how long this sort of thing will be allowed to go on without effective measures being taken to check it. We have a new scheme of defence, but it did not defend us.

"The plain fact is that, apart from wind and weather, London has no adequate protection against Zeppelins. The standard of our air defences is clearly not yet up to the mark.

"As a spectacle, the thing was disappointing. Drury Lane theatre has often been better than that.

"We learn from the official statement that another Zeppelin broke through the aerial defences of the London District; but we look in vain for the announcement that the visitor was brought down.

"Admiral Percy Scott's recent appointment to the command of the defences is a proof that we are on the point of commencing to begin; but it may be permissible to hope that we shall soon have a corps of naval gunners who can really distinguish between a Zeppelin and a star."

REPRISALS FOR MURDERSIR A. CONAN DOYLE'S STRONG VIEWS.

London, Oct. 15.

The British novelist, Sir Conan Doyle, has written to the "Times" in regard to the Zeppelin raids on England maintaining that the time has arrived for taking reprisals for these murderous attacks.

The writer suggests that a British aerial squadron should be stationed on the eastern frontier of France, and that the British Government should announce that whenever the German airships attack British cities or towns a German undefended city would be similarly dealt with by our aeroplanes. This, he believes, would put an end to Zeppelin raids.

Sir Conan Doyle admits that such a procedure would be repugnant to the feelings of British aviators; but it must not be forgotten that for a long time the enemies of Britain have been murdering British women and children.

LABOUR AND THE WARMINERS' WAGES INCREASED.

London, Oct. 16.

The wages of the South Wales metal operatives will be raised from ten to twenty per cent. by agreement. The demands of the railway men have been settled at Derby.

The war bonus will be increased to five shillings, or 2/6 for boys.

The wages of the Northumberland miners are now 73 per cent. above the 1879 standard.

"BOOM" IN VOLUNTEERINGEFFECT OF ZEPPELIN RAIDS

London, Oct. 16.

For a time at least the last Zeppelin raid on London has staved off conscription.

It is stated in Parliamentary circles that the result of the raid was a "boom" in enlistment, to such an extent that the pro-conscriptionist members of the Cabinet have consented to delay their programme for six weeks.

HOW TO WARD-OFF RAIDERS

London, Oct. 16.

Writing to the "Daily Express," the widely known British airman, C. G. Grey, says that the whole system of protective measures such as darkening the city against Zeppelin incursions is wrong, and should be replaced by a lavish system of searchlights, making the city one vast carpet of light so as to blind the enemy with the glare.

For this reason the proposed plan of sending aeroplanes for a night attack on Zeppelins is ridiculous; because until a Zeppelin is lighted up by the searchlights an aeroplane cannot find it; then it soon rises above the Zeppelin to drop bombs on it. When he gets into a beam of light the pilot of a Zeppelin is helpless owing to the glare.

The writer goes on to say that one hears much about nightly aeroplane patrols over Paris; but they are chiefly composed in the minds of the people. The real protection to Paris is the ring of searchlights completely enclosing the city. He then proceeds to submit the following scheme for the protection of London: Divide the city into half-mile squares. At the corners of each place searchlights, throwing wide beams vertically upward, each overlapping its neighbour. Then, he says, the guns will have a clear target.

"DIRTY WORK""REPRISALS" CONTROVERSY IN ENGLAND.

London, Oct. 18.

The newspapers continue to discuss the air raids and the question of reprisals.

Viscount Bryce writes to the Times protesting against imitating the policy of Germany in Belgium, France and Armenia by adopting reprisals, which, he says, would lower Britain to the level of that Government.

Sir Conan Doyle, in a letter to the same paper, says that French aviators have already raided Carlsruhe and Stuttgart, the latter attack being announced as having been made in return for the raids upon the open towns of France and England. He says that it is dirty work at the best, however necessary it may be; but the dirtiest would be to permit our Allies to do it in our name while we explained to the world that we could not condescend to do it ourselves.

BULLET IN THE SPINEDOCTOR'S WONDERFUL OPERATION

Paris, Oct. 14.

Dr. Emil Girou reports that he has performed upon a wounded soldier a remarkable and unprecedented operation, having extracted a missile which was embedded in his back along the whole width of the vertebral column.

In communicating the details to the Academy of Medicine, Dr. Girou said that he performed the operation at a time when the patient was in a dying condition. The result exceeded his greatest expectations. The patient has no fever, he can move his legs and his sensory powers are gradually recovering. The wound was sufficient to kill anyone, but the man is now recovering.

SHELLS, THEN GASTHE CAPTURE OF HOHEN
ZOLLERN REDOUBT*BRILLIANT BRITISH SUCCESS

London, Oct. 18.

Mr. Percival Phillips in a despatch from the British Headquarters in France to the "Daily Express" says:

"The British gas attack on the German infantry entrenched between Loos and La Bassée, on Wednesday resulted in the capture of the Hohen-zollern redoubt.

"The gas is heavier and more bewildering than any London fog and no German periscope could pierce the blackness of its solid wall which arose so suddenly that the puzzled enemy could tell nothing of the moment when they would be attacked. Shaken as they were by the intensity of the preliminary bombardment, this new and unexpected enemy had exactly the effect intended and the Germans were easily flung out of the trenches when the British suddenly appeared rushing out of the gas mist with fixed bayonets and cheering.

"The British guns had done their work thoroughly. Hulluch and other German machine-gun strongholds seemed complete heaps of ruin. Fosse 8 Pithead has seen more desperate fighting than any other mining works in northern France, being pounded mercilessly by the British guns. Loos on the other hand gave me the impression of being comparatively undamaged. Bilados has been thoroughly raked by the guns but when seen through the glass has not the appearance of utter desolation and annihilation that mark Vermelles.

"The twin towers of Loos still dominate the plain and all the efforts of the German gunners have failed to crumble them.

"The British got a stretch of the first line position South West of Hulluch front, two thirds of a mile wide but the German shell fire obliged them to evacuate this trench although the British stuck wherever they could find foothold.

"The Germans attach great importance to the redoubt on one side of the Quarries and after we captured it first time, German orders were issued to retake it at any cost and all costs. The British still hold it.

"The American financiers showed a very proper regard for American interests; at the same time they did not attempt to exact too much from us."

"Whatever happens in the war, nothing will change the views of Britain and her Allies, that there can be only one ending to it. Until we have reached the final victory our efforts will be continual. Britain is prepared for every sacrifice."

FOOD IN FRANCE

SERIOUS INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING.

Paris, Oct. 18.

In a conversation with a representative of "Le Matin" to-day, the Minister of the Interior, M. Malvy, referring to the question of the rise in the cost of living, said that the situation is serious, but not alarming. It would be an illusion to pretend that it were possible to bring prices back to normal; but by concentrated efforts the Government will enable Parisians to obtain the essential articles of food at prices which never will be prohibitive. Arrangements have been made which will make a rise in the price of bread impossible. Steps have been taken to increase the imports of frozen meat, butter, eggs and dried vegetables; but if the result of operations by speculators makes this ineffective, the Government will have recourse to taxation.

DYES FROM GERMANY

EXPORTATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, Oct. 14.

Fifty tons of coal tar and dye stuffs of German manufacture are due in New York to-day by the steamship St. Louis, consigned to the Secretary of Commerce on account of William Mitchell of Lowell, Mass., representing the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers.

A statement made by the Department of Commerce says that several months ago the Secretary consented to act as consignee for two cargoes of dyes from Germany, the safe passage of which was assured by permits granted by the British Government upon the express condition that the Secretary of Commerce should be consignee.

The embargo on these cargoes from Germany has not been lifted by the British Government, but arrangements were made that the exportation to the United States of the dyes coming by the St. Louis should be permitted. It is hoped that this is the first of a series of similar shipments.

In the majority of cases the crime imputed to the victims was communicating with persons outside the territory subject to German domination, sentence being pronounced after a more than hasty trial.

SALVATION ARMY CONGRESS

Thursday

STAFF LUNCHEON AND INAUGURAL MEETING.

This week is one of special interest and activity to the Argentine branch of the Salvation Army. The Territorial Congress is in session, and various events of importance to the organisation are taking place. Yesterday afternoon a Reception Lunch was given to the Congress Delegates and to Col. Kyle, the London representative and the new Chief Secretary and his wife, Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell. The delegates included officers from all parts of South American Territory.

After the lunch a meeting was opened by Col. Palmer, who introduced Col. Kyle and the new Chief Secretary and his wife.

A solo was rendered by Staff Capt. Booth.

The following officers as representative speakers welcomed the visitors to the Congress: Mayor Bonnard, on behalf of the Social Institution, Mrs. Palmer on behalf of the Women officers, and also the Mercy League.

Staff Captain Thomas on behalf of the officers working outside of Buenos Aires Staff.

Captain Rosarios, on behalf of the work of the sailors.

Captain Michel also spoke on behalf of single officers.

Col. Kyle was warmly applauded, and said in reply, he brought greetings from General Bramwell Booth to the South American Salvationists. He spoke of the valuable work the Army is doing at the front and mentioned incidentally that twenty thousand Salvationists were now in the British Army as Chaplains in Red Cross work and in other ways.

Later both Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell spoke.

In the evening a very crowded and successful meeting was held at the Central Hall, Rivadavia 3280, when a programme of about 15 items was rendered. Colonel and Miss Palmer spoke in welcome of the Delegates, Col. Kyle and Brigadier Deverell also addressed the meeting. Instrumental music was provided by the Headquarters band, and by the Juvenile band, the first in the country.

Friday

PICNIC FIXTURES.

Yesterday the officers attending the Salvation Army Congress, spent a happy day together in the Bosque at Palermo. There were gathered together over one hundred officers, both men and women in positions of trust and responsibility, who had left for a few hours, the cares and worries of their duties to spend a day together in the open air.

They had a happy time, playing games, running races, etc. The weather was everything that could be desired.

Saturday

Yesterday a united meeting was held in the Plaza Once at which all the Salvationists attending the Congress were present. The Territorial Headquarters Band and Songster Brigade both took part.

Colonel Palmer being in charge. Colonel Kyle and Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell spoke. There was a big crowd of interested listeners, and the meeting from all aspects was a great success.

At 8.30 p.m. another meeting was held (for members only) at the Army's Central Hall, 3280 Rivadavia.

Colonel Kyle's discourse took the form of a heart to heart talk to his South American comrades and was "full of good things."

Sunday

On Sunday last the Salvation Army had a Field Day. Holiness Meetings were held in the morning in the five Army Halls in Buenos Aires, and these were led by specially-elected officers, who all reported good congregations and great interest. The biggest meeting was held in the Rivadavia Hall, which was led by Col. Kyle, assisted by Col. and Mrs. Palmer, and also Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell. The Staff Band composed mostly of officers belonging to the Territorial Head Quarters, rendered good service as did also the Singing Brigade, which is mostly composed of the wives of the various officers attached to Head Quarters and Social Institutions in Buenos Aires.

Colonel Kyle delivered a fine spiritual discourse upon "Practical Holiness" and its working out in the everyday-life.

This meeting resulted in a large number of persons publicly "Reconsecrating their lives for God and Humanity."

Successful meetings were also held at 3 p.m. in Calle Pedro Mendoza and at Plaza Constitucion, and a march was organised from Plaza Congreso at 7 p.m. in which the flags of the Republic, and the Army, the South American Territorial Leaders, Col. Kyle and other officers with the Headquarters Band, took part. At Margherita de Savoia Hall, Independencia 2540, whither the column proceeded, another most successful meeting took place, addressed by Colonel Kyle and by Colonel and Mrs. Palmer.

Wednesday

GREAT MEETING IN PRINCE GEORGE'S HALL.

Sincere congratulations may be offered to the chiefs of the Salvation Army on the notable success which concluded their Congress week.

The march from Plaza Congreso, timed for 7 p.m. was slightly delayed owing to the energies of photographers, who opened an enfilading fire of cameras under which the column proceeded (by special permission) via the Avenida and several principal thoroughfares to Prince George's Hall.

That spacious Salon had its seating capacity taxed severely. Downstairs the place was full. Among the prominent ladies and gentlemen who testified their interest in the good work by attending were: H.B.M. Minister Sir Reginald Tower, Mr. H. G. Mackie (British Consul General), Mr. E. Milington Drake (First Secretary of Legation), Sr. Cardenas, Dr. J. Lovat Mulcahy, Mr. F. Chevallier Boutell, Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, Miss Percy, the Rev. Mr. de Barrett, Rev. Mr. José Felices, Rev. Mr. Espingola and Mr. and Mrs. Torre. Colonel Philip Kyle, Colonel and Mrs. Palmer, Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell, and many officers of the staff and from the camp were on the platform. Some of the camp workers appeared in riding dress hooded and spurred and rebenque in hand. There were picturesque social groups and "Argentina" in person or a lady who resembled her. After the opening hymn, addresses were given by Adjutant Lopez and Brigadier Deverell. Colonel Palmer gave an interesting account of the activities of the Salvation Army work on the South American Continent. Mrs. Palmer and Colonel Kyle also gave addresses. Mrs. Palmer on the great subject of work on behalf of women. There was a quintette of concertinas, a revelation to those who only know this instrument as a wheezing and gasping abomination afflicted with chronic asthma, singing by the children and a quintette vocal by officers, band selections, some capital musical exercises by twelve small and well-drilled girls to music by Staff Captain Booth and dissolving view portraits of the heads of the army and the principal officers in South America. The Doxology closed a remarkably successful and enthusiastic evening.

SIX MONTHS OF WAR

Anglo-Argentine Doctor's Experience

"TOMMY A GRAND PATIENT"

TREATING THE VICTIMS OF GAS.

"Tommy is a grand fellow. It's a privilege and a pleasure to look after him, and it has been an honour for me to have been associated with the branch of the service that takes him in hand when he is sick or wounded. There is no breath of scandal, or muddle, or mismanagement about the Royal Army Medical Corps."

This high tribute to the British fighting man, and to the medical service, was paid by Dr. K. M. Walker who was interviewed yesterday by a representative of THE HERALD on the subject of his experiences as a surgeon at the front. Dr. Walker left Buenos Aires early in the year to take up an appointment on the staff of the Duchess of Westminster's hospital in France, and from March until he left for Argentina, he served as a surgeon, attending all classes of cases brought down from the fighting front. The Duchess of Westminster's hospital is at Le Touquet, not far from Boulogne, and is the sole surviving private institution of the many that were started, which is recognised by the British authorities. It is now being used entirely as a hospital for officers.

Dr. Walker was asked about the cases of gas poisoning which he had seen, and the results of the special investigations which he had made close to the firing line, after the first gas attack made by the Germans.

"For some time," he said, "we were in doubt about the gas used, though we had no doubt about its awful effects. Our assumption that it was a chlorine gas was proved correct when we captured one or two of the cylinders from the Germans. They were also using a gas shell containing a mixture of bromine, formalin, hydro-cyanic acid and some corrosive. The effects of the shell were not serious because the explosion of the projectile caused a rapid dissipation of the gas cloud, but that projected from the cylinders was terrible in its result. The men came to the hospitals, purple—almost black—gasping for breath, and suffering awful pain and distress. The gas has a destructive effect on the membranous lining of the lungs. After the first attack I believe the mortality was 14 per cent of the cases brought in. After the second attack the percentage dropped by at least half. At first we were quite helpless because we had no means of treating the cases to afford relief. All efforts were centred on finding an antidote, but later on this gave way to devising preventive measures. When I was at the front I saw rows of gas victims lying on the grass, gasping, coughing, and suffering terribly. There was no relief for them, and really the best treatment was to leave them in the fresh air. Our first respirators were practically useless, but now a proper helmet is in use in which there is a pad soaked in hypo-sulphite of soda. The French helmet, such as pictured in your paper to-day, is a more elaborate affair."

Speaking of other problems before the medical service Dr. Walker said the worst of all was "gas gangrene." "This has nothing to do with gas poison," he said, "but it is so called because it sets up a gas in the tissues and causes a swollen condition. It is terribly virulent. Like the tetanus bacillus, the germ of gas gangrene comes from the rank ground which has been turned up in Belgium. It is the worst thing we have to fight against. A man may come in with a simple wound. We dress his wound; it appears alright, and suddenly gas gangrene sets in and

British Army's New Line

MORE GERMAN ATTACKS REPULSED

The following telegram has been received by His Britannic Majesty's Minister at Buenos Aires, from the Foreign Office, London:—

Oct. 20 (12.35 p.m.)

19th October. Sir John French reports since 14th October artillery on both sides very active. On our front South of Le Bassée Canal enemy has made number of bombing attacks in neighbourhood of Fosse No. 8. All were repulsed. The continued reports in German communiques of repulse of British attacks North East of Vermelles have no foundation. Position where fighting mentioned above took place would be more correctly described as South West of Auchy Lez La Bassée, from which it is about 1500 yards distant. It lies 3000 yards North East of Vermelles. The new front now leaves our old line at point about 1200 yards South West of Southern edge of Auchy Lez La Bassée and runs thence through main trench of "Hohenzollern" redoubt in Easterly direction 400 yards South of Southern buildings Fosse No. 8 to South Western corner of quarries. We also hold South Eastern corner of quarries. Our trenches running thence South East parallel to and 400 yards from South Western edge of Cité St. Elie to point 500 yards West of North edge of Hulluch line then runs along Lens Le Bassée road to chalk pit 1500 yards North of highest point of Hill 70, then turns South West to point 1000 yards East of Loos Church where it bends South East to North West Slope of Hill 70 and runs along Western slopes of Hill bending South West to point 1200 yards South of Loos Church whence it runs due West back to our old line. Chord of salient, we have created in enemy's line measured along our old front is 7000 yards in length. Depth of salient at chalk pit is 3200 yards. Since 28th September enemy has reinforced his troops holding front we attacked by 48 battalions which include division of guard. After heavy bombardment enemy attacked our front this afternoon between quarries and Hulluch and was everywhere repulsed.

the case is fatal within 24 hours. Fortunately the arrangements in the hospitals are so perfect as to prevent the disease becoming infectious, but it is bad in the case of the wounded men lying out in the field. I have seen some very bad cases of wounded men who could not be got in from the trenches quickly enough. Tetanus is practically non-existent, and the disappearance of this one time deadly disease is one of the triumphs of science. The Red Cross Society is doing splendid work, and you can be certain that the gift from your readers of a motor ambulance will be welcome. The Society is looking after the transport of the wounded, and its ambulances go right up to the front, and are frequently under fire.

Dr. Walker has many interesting experiences to relate on the conduct of the war generally. He states that opinions even among the staff officers are strangely divided on the question of when the war will end. The French methods he describes as being particularly vigorous. "There are no kid gloves used by them in conducting operations. I have come back with intense admiration for France and the French army. Both are magnificent. France now has her 'second wind' and is prepared for anything."

Dr. Walker left France on the advice of the hospital authorities who suggested that he should return to his practice during the winter. He may return to France in the spring, and take up military duty once more.

DAY BY DAY IN BAHIA BLANCA.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Oct. 17.

A good deal of interest is being taken in the concert and dance to be held in the Anglican Church Hall on Monday 25th, in aid of the Church Fund and Red Cross.

The Rev. Mr. Saunderson being absent in Buenos Aires, his place is being taken to-day by the Rev. Mr. Mills, who arrived here yesterday morning.

Mr. J. Clarke was able to leave the Barrionueva sanatorium again last Tuesday, and is making good progress towards a complete recovery.

Mr. Stockman left for England on board the Highland Loch on October 12.

A subscription list has recently been opened here for the Blue Cross, which is a fund for the sick and wounded horses. Donations towards this may either be made to Mr. Hilton, at the administration of the Pacific Railway, or to Calle Colon 360.

A very successful concert was held last week in aid of the Allies' Red Cross, at Maldonado. Amongst the English community who took part were Mesdames Carpenter, Migotti, Shilton, and Miss Jones. Several raffles were also held, the total amount realised for the fund amounting to $1,300.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Olivet are now on a short visit to their relations here.

Three pitch tennis courts are shortly to be made by the Gas Company here, one on the ground of the tennis club near the Pacific Railway, and the other two out at Maldonado on the field of the Pacific Athletic Club.

Mr. J. J. S. Russel is on a visit to Bahia Blanca, also Mr. Downes from Junin.

Mr. and Mrs. McLean, of the Sunshine Harvester Co., arrived back here from Australia again at the beginning of the week.

Amongst the recent visitors have been Messrs. G. Corbett, Schoeder, Gunther, C. Stuart, Campbell, and Mr. and Mrs. Hickman.

DAY BY DAY IN ROSARIO.

(From Our Correspondent).

October 19.

On Monday, November 1, a feast day, a mixed doubles tournament will be held in connection with the Epworth League, on the courts adjoining the Methodist Church in Boulevard Oroño.

Corporal Nichols and Corporal Welch, two of the railwaymen at the Front, are with the London Rifle Brigade in Flanders. The former writes that he ran against Mr. Eric C. Buxton, Secretary of the British Patriotic Committee in Rosario, who has received his Commission. Haciendo su pedazo, as usual.

Mr. H. C. Horne and Mr. L. B. Heinert have been away holiday-making at Salta and Tucuman.

Mr. C. Lingenfelder, late Captain of Rosario Rowing Club, is going down to Buenos Aires to row in one of the Buenos Aires crews at Tigre Regatta.

A Rosario crew is also going down to take part in the Open Fours.

Mr. T. Duke, of Paraguay, a former employe of the Stores Department F.C.C.A. is on his way to England to volunteer.

Mr. W. Gostling and family of Alberdi are returning on the Desna from England where they have been spending a few months' holiday.

Happily the news that Mr. Walter James had been killed at the Front has been contradicted by a cablegram which states that his name only figures among the wounded.

The Garden Fete and Sale of Work which is being organised by Mrs. J. P. Crouch to take place on Saturday and Sunday, 20 and 21 of November, at The Quinta, Talleres, will provide an opportunity for many people to purchase useful and ornamental articles suitable for Christmas presents and at the same time give assistance to a very deserving fund—for Officers' Widows and Families. On Saturday afternoon there will be a variety of competitions for children, and on Sunday for men.

Rev. J. A. and Mrs. Rickards with their son, George, left Rosario Norte on Wednesday of last week. A large number of friends including Mr. J. P. Crouch, Mr. C. H. Montgomery, the Rev. C. S. Deacon, and the Rev. F. Middleton, were on the platform to bid them farewell. Mr. Rickards and family joined the s.s. Herschel which sailed on October 16.

On Friday next a Drill Display will be given by the pupils of the Alberdi High School at which all parents and friends are invited to be present, tea will be served at 3.30 after which the display will begin.

Mrs. H. C. Hearn and family are going in a few days up to the Hills for a change.

A Concert and Social will take place in the Methodist Church on Wednesday, October 27, under the auspices of the Epworth League.

The Central Argentine Railway Traffic Institute is very busy; every evening classes on Commercial and Technical subjects are held and lectures on Hygiene are given and entertainments frequently arranged. There is besides a very flourishing cooperative supply organisation; and now there is under way a Christmas Tree the object of which is to give useful presents to children of the poorer classes of employees.

The first Monday in November being a Feast Day there will be no meeting of the Alberdi Ladies' Work Party. The meeting will be held the following and each succeeding Monday until the Sale which as announced last week will take place on December 8th in the High School. There will be a Plain and Fancy Needle work stall, a Produce Stall, Arts and Crafts Stall, Confectionary Stall, Toy Stall and Fishpond; contributions for any of them will be gladly received and should be sent to the High School Alberdi.

Signs and Tokens.

Two more German ships have gone in the Baltic to the account of British submarines. As already pointed out in this column, neutral shipping is not being attacked by British under-water craft, and Sweden's attitude is therefore, except on the grounds of ill-will suggested, quite incompressible. It was noted apropos, that the Swedish steamer Kronprins Gustaf, which went out of port on Tuesday, dipped her ensign in passing the German steamer Muansa. The courtesy was strictly reserved for the German, and neither British, French, nor Italian shipping was saluted. Does not "A Dane" find this also significant? She was towed out also by the Hamburg Sud Amerika tugs. Dear Sir, a man is judged by his friends. And a ship may also be safely submitted to the same criterion.

Mutual Gas and Reprisals.

Messieurs the Huns appear to have been much surprised at the return visit paid to them at the Hohenzollern Redoubt, by Allied Gas, which was denser, we are told, than "a London particular." What the particular properties of this gas are we do not know at present, and none of the Germans in the trenches appear to have left any record. Having persisted in their infernal practices, the Germans will, no doubt, nevertheless, raise an indignant howl at the idea of anything of the kind being used against their sacred persons. Reprisals, however, should go further. While no one among us wishes to see even war (very correctly and tersely described by General Sherman as "Hell") degraded to the unspeakable filth of the German level, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle was right when he said that to protect the lives of our own helpless non-combatants, we must give the truculent German populations who agree with and applaud wholesale murder, a taste of their own physic. To let our Allies do it, and profess to be too virtuous to do it ourselves would indeed, be the worst kind of meanness, cowardice and hypocrisy. It is the only thing which will bring the German brute to reason.

"Neutrality a Crime."

This is not the opinion of a Dane, but of the Bishop of London, who evidently considers, like some of the more strenuous minded of us, that Germany incarnates the Powers of Evil, and that you cannot be at peace with the Devil and yet do well. The opinion will certainly be strongly combated by many, especially by the tepid, the self-interested, and those of whom an American wit said that "Patriotism is a disease, which breaks out with severe inflammation on the left side of the body near the heart, causing the latter to swell. It goes on raging till it reaches the breeches pocket, when it suddenly disappears, leaving the patient very neutral." Mr. T. P. O'Connor has previously assured us that there is no room for Gallios or sitters on the fence. Nevertheless they continue to exist in considerable numbers. Some of them are undoubtedly hooded enemies. That is the particular danger of these people, that German genius, that Teutonic cult of super falsehood, treachery and corruption finds in these easy converts and convenient cloaks.

BRITON.

A general meeting of the members of the Golf Club will be held at the Britannia Hotel on Saturday, October 30, at 9 p.m.

On Sunday evening next at 8 p.m. the preacher at Talleres Church will be the Rev. S. C. Deacon. Books and a hearty welcome are provided for all.

BAHIA BLANCA NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

October 14.

Concert in Aid of the Anglican Church.

Arrangements are now being made for the holding of a concert in the Anglican Church Hall here on Monday, October 25. The entrance fee to this will be one dollar. As there will no doubt be a large number of people in from the camp for the Rural Show, a dance is to be held after the concert, the tickets for which are to be $3. Seventy-five per cent. of the proceeds obtained are to be devoted towards the Red Cross Fund, and the remainder to the Church Fund.

News from the Front.

A letter has been received from Mr. W. Rae (who left here some time ago to volunteer, and is now "somewhere in France"), by his father, in which he describes the firing line and how a cow was killed by a shell just at the back of the trench in which was his company. He joined the Cameron Highlanders. News has also been received from Mr. Lemming, who left the Almacen Ingles to join the R.A.M.C., and is in hospital at the Dardanelles. He states that some of the men brought in are in a condition at times which makes one wonder how they can still live, and how when the Australian contingent took hill 971, some 23 were brought into hospital so badly hurt that only five of them were alive two days afterwards. More than half the cases there are suffering from dysentery on account of the bad water that they have to drink.

Ministerial Visit.

On Friday last the Ministers of Finance and Agriculture, accompanied by a large committee, arrived here with the managers of the Southern Railway. They first went to Port Militar, arriving there at 10.30 in a special train, and, after lunch, came on to Ingeniero White and Port Galvan, returning from the latter place on the Southern Railway tug. They then proceeded in the special train to Neuquen, first spending a few hours in Bahia Blanca, and leaving in the evening at 7.45 p.m. On arriving at the station of Admirante Cordero they will proceed on a visit of inspection to the irrigation canals that are now being made for the Government by the Southern Railway in motor cars provided by the Governor of the district (Senor Elordi). To-morrow (Monday) they are expected here again, and will proceed the same day to Buenos Aires on the Pringles line.

A German Newspaper.

It is currently reported that the local paper, the "Nueva Provincia," has for the time being been taken charge of by two Germans named Hutenburg and Barnenberg, as the machinery in the printing office belongs to them. The manager of this paper is said to have recently resigned owing to his being unwilling to "cook" the telegrams received for printing in the daily edition. If this report is to be relied on, and it has come from a usually reliable source, no doubt, the English banks and the railways here will shortly withdraw their advertisements, etc., from the paper.

Items in Brief.

Notice has been received of the proposed formation of a "trust" of bakers, and should this come about the price of bread will probably go up still higher than it is now.

An inspection of the line and the proposed alterations along it has recently been made by the managers of the Pacific Railway from here to Minica Renanco.

As a further method of economy, the postal authorities here have decided to supply the postmen with the same summer suits that were given them last year—or as many of them as are still fit to wear—as it will be remembered that after the summer when other people were wearing over-

NIGHT LIFE IN B.A.

EVADING THE INTENDENTE'S EDICT.

The Intendente's measure of prohibiting the presence of women in the night cafés in Maipú is evidently being evaded for it is apparent that most of the women have discovered new resorts.

Already a good number of such "dens" thrive in Esmeralda, with the familiar bustle, and noise, which were habitually encountered on Maipú.

It is stated by various keepers of cafés and bars that the Intendente's manoeuvres in this particular case, will have the tendency of causing drinking houses in general all over the city to fall into desrepute, instead of the exact knowledge of confining the evil to certain "downtown" sections, with which frequenters were cognizant.

All other cafés were exempt from such associations. Besides the consequent effects of the spreading of vice is apprehended.

They also allege that the necessity of either restoring to the cafés in Maipú, their former privileges or of enforcing a complete cessation of such activities, which the last few days has given birth to in Esmeralda, is highly essential. Otherwise the evil might develop into a serious moral menace for the public.

coats, these men were still obliged to go about in their summer suits on account of the re-dyed winter ones not being to hand.

It is stated that the lines destroyed by the floods on the Southern Railway last year cost the company two hundred thousand pounds to repair.

For the fund opened by Senora Epstein for the purpose of buying wool for the manufacture of socks, scarves, etc., for the Belgian soldiers during the coming winter, the sum of $1201 has already been collected.

District Notes.

A sale of livestock recently took place at Juarez, when 2100 steers for fattening were sold. There were in good condition, and of a good class, and fetched $133 each. They were bought by the firm of Lacau and Co., of Buenos Aires. The total amount paid ($279,300) was the highest that has been given by one firm in the district of Bahia Blanca this year.

Trafalgar Day.

For Thursday next arrangements have been made under the auspices of the Bahia Blanca Overseas Club to celebrate Trafalgar Day. The festivities are to take the form of a children's entertainment at Loma Paraguaya on the ground of the Golf Club, which has been kindly lent for the occasion. Invitations have already been sent out to a large number of British families, and should any of these who are members of the former club have accidentally been left out, the committee would be pleased if they would at once communicate either with the Secretary or Vice-President. Members of the Club are also asked to be present if possible in order to assist in the entertaining of the children.

The Analysing Office.

A petition signed by a large number of the residents here has been sent to the Minister of Finance asking that this office, which was closed last year with a view to retrenchment, may be re-opened again, as it is most necessary in this port, the third largest in the Republic. Under the present arrangement a great delay is caused, as samples of merchandise have now to be sent to Buenos Aires to be analysed, which means a delay of from 6 to 8 days, and has been sometimes from 15 to 20, while here the work can be done in 48 hours. Under present conditions the merchant cannot state when he is able to deliver his goods when selling them, and they are apt to suffer by being left on the waggons, or a big expense incurred by unloading and reloading again. This petition is signed by some twenty-four of the leading business houses of the town.

LAND IN CHUBUT

A READER'S QUERY.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—As a regular reader of your excellent weekly, I have of late seen much reference to the Argentine land laws. I have also known from the Welsh papers here the attacks of the La Razón, especially when a few decided to go to Australia. Also your view of the emigration question in THE HERALD of a recent date. It is an explanation and some information of that trouble that I require, viz., the Land Laws. I have resided in Chubut about 18 months, having arrived direct from England. Being interested and having experience a little of agriculture, I intended to go on the land with a capital of 4,000 dollars. From what I can gather from your weekly, there is an extremely chaotic state of things appertaining to land, especially Government land sales, rents, etc.

Now, Mr. Editor, can you give me some definite information on the subject? Especially the sale or rent price per hectarea of this extensive Government camp in this irrigation district, duty paid and other annual charges (if any); and also how to obtain it, taking into consideration my inability to speak or write Spanish correctly. I shall be very thankful if you will inform me on the above through your weekly.

Yours truly,

JOHN THOMSON.

Chubut Valley, Sept. 26.

[Perhaps some of our Chubut readers, who are well acquainted with the terms and conditions of settlement on Government lands in that territory, will oblige our correspondent with the required information.—Ed. THE HERALD.]

HOMICIDE AT ESQUINA

FATAL QUARREL IN A GAMING HOUSE.

People in Corrientes are getting alarmed at the frequency of bloody brawls and ferocious murders, often on the most trivial pretexts. A case of the kind has just occurred at Esquina where on Saturday Luis Etamozo and Justo Gonzalez had a dispute in a gaming and dancing house. Whether the disagreement concerned dice, cards or a woman is not recorded but so mortal was the offence considered that both retired to an adjacent piece of ground and engaged in a furious conflict with the long and ever ready cuchillos which they habitually wore and which were not much shorter than faucons.

After a short exchange of blows Gonzalez received a savage stab in the belly. He fell to the ground writhing in agony but almost immediately expired. The murderer, who is styled "the homicide," was detained by the police. There is a general demand in view of the frequent occasion for dangerous and fatal quarrels given by these places, that the police shall take measures to close them.

RESTLESS RIO GRANDE

ATTEMPTED REVOLUTION.

Port Alegre reports state that the chronic unrest in Rio Grande do Sul have again caused alarm, an attempt at actual revolution being now feared. The brothers Barrios are believed to be the organisers of the present trouble and at the request of the Brazilian authorities have been provisionally detained in Uruguay where they are at present residing and from whence they appear to have been manipulating the things.

It is considered that with the active preparations made to surpress any outbreak, the attempt has failed. More detailed accounts suggest that a renewal of the Monarchist agitation is at the bottom of the persistent troubles and that as usual German intrigue is not absent.

POVERTY, MURDER AND SUICIDE

MELANCHOLY STORY OF PRIVATION AND DEATH.

Yesterday morning the concierge of Tucuman 1459 notified Comisaria 5 that something was wrong at that address. On examination, a room of the house occupied by Jorge Bernard and Josefina Juana Geignil was found to have remained closed since two days before.

Repeated knocking at the door by the officers obtaining no response, the Comisario gave orders to force it and on doing so a deadful spectacle presented itself.

The man Bernard's body lay on the floor and that of the woman upon the bed and, both corpses were in a decomposed condition which is remarkable considering the comparatively short time which must have elapsed since death. The police surgeon certified that Josefina's body had a bullet wound in the right temple and Bernard a similar injury at same place. He considers that both died on Sunday night. A revolver, containing two exploded cartridges lay beside Bernard's body.

Enquiry elicited a melancholy story. For some time Bernard had been entirely without work and the unfortunate couple found their position desperate, being entirely without resources. No letter or communication of any kind was found in the chamber of death, but the presumption is that on account of the misery both were enduring, the man killed his wife and subsequently destroyed himself. The bodies were removed to the Morgue. This is yet another of the dreadful reminders that Buenos Aires is no longer a city where all who seek work may obtain it.

F.C.S. LOSSES

DIRECTORS' REPORT FOR PAST YEAR.

London, Oct. 15.

The report issued by the board of directors of the Argentine Great Southern Railway for the past financial year shows that the gross receipts amounted to £4,941,627, expenses to £2,986,838, and net revenue to £1,954,889. The falling off in gross receipts and expenses respectively was 9.57 and 6.67 per cent.

Compared with the previous year, there was a reduction of 4,268,178 in the number of passengers conveyed, representing a decrease in receipts from this source of 14.26 per cent.

Similarly in the goods traffic the total tonnage conveyed during the year fell short by 500,506 tons of that conveyed the previous year, the falling off in receipts being 10.81 per cent.

The floods in February last cut the railway in 154 places, and the repairs will cost £200,000, whereof £165,453 has been taken from the casualty reserve fund.

The grain harvest for the year was expected to yield 1,300,000 tons, of which 1,040,000 tons were carried by the end of June.

The extensions opened during the year came to 65 miles.

One hundred and twenty-seven members of the Argentine staff and eleven of that in London had been granted special leave to join the British army. The following were reported killed:—J. S. David, G. W. Hilliard, W. M. Phillips and C. F. Smith.

WINE TRADE

IN THE CAPITAL.

Reports from Mendoza indicate that a satisfactory feeling pervades wine producing circles there in the assurance that the Pacific Railway has not increased and does not intend to increase freights on wines.

Certain travellers and wine merchants, so called whose ignorance of the article wherein they deal in the Capital is profound, are said to be causing much trouble to the producers and consignees of the wines, producing the most disastrous variations of prices.

AEROPLANE "RIVER PLATE NO. 2"

WHEN WILL YOU DO YOUR BIT?

Where they have had a chance, the aeroplanes have given a good account of themselves and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will occur for their use against the Zeppelins.

Assistance of all kinds has been given by the British Community towards the war, men from the River Plate are fighting on all the fronts, on the sea and in the air; money has been subscribed to every fund for the relief and comfort of the men, and the widows and orphans; horses have been shipped in large numbers but still the war continues, and while it lasts it is necessary to keep up our record. One aeroplane has been subscribed for and news is expected any day that the "River Plate No. 1" is actually in commission. No. 2 should be ordered without delay, but the Committee of the British Society do not feel justified in forwarding the order until a larger amount has been subscribed towards the total cost.

The amount required is $26,000 m.l. half of which has been subscribed. Surely to those who can only "look on" there could be no better opportunity of giving some tangible assistance than in supporting this subscription.

All contributions should be forwarded to the Hon. Treas. Mr. W. Watson, Calle Cangallo 536.

RED CROSS CONCERT AT JUNIN

A successful concert was held in the Hall of the Railway Club, Junin, on Saturday night last, in aid of the Red Cross Fund. The function was arranged by the choir of the English Church, but its success was mainly due to the efforts of Messrs. W. H. Monk, J. E. Lenney, F. R. Moore and Miss E. J. Stanger. Mr. Monk worked especially hard.

The attendance was good and a pleasant evening was spent.

Before the concert and during the interval the F.C.P. band played selections and their music was much appreciated. The choir gave four choruses creditably and songs were rendered by local artists. Perhaps the best item of the programme was the Piano and Flute Duet by Sres. Basile and Rosaenz, which was enthusiastically encored. Mr. W. H. Monk, too, made a "hit" as a comic singer and was encored. After the musical programme the Sketch "Crazed" was given and proved to be quite a success.

The characters were Mr. Brown (Musical composer), Mr. Arthus Downes, Mr. Smith (Tragic Author), Mr. Jack Parsons, Sally (Maid of all work), Mr. W. H. Monk.

The following was the programme: Overture, F.C.P. Band; Chorus, Soldier's Chorus (Faust), the choir and band; Song, The Rosary, Mr. W. H. Hovell; Song, "That was enough for me," (encored), Mr. W. H. Monk; Song, "Thora," Mr. Roderick-G. Williams; Pianoforte Selection, Mr. Wilkinson; Chorus, Old King Cole, the Choir; Interval, Band Selections; Chorus, "Ye Mariners of England,"

BRITISH RED CROSS FUND

ENTERTAINMENT AT PORT MADRYN.

Its a long way to Port Madryn, but even in that far Southern Port, will be found a British community zealously doing its bit. The following is an account of the theatrical performance given by the Florit Company on Saturday evening, September 25, in aid of the British Red Cross Fund, which was a tremendous success. The small British community headed by the Vice-Consul, Mr. C. T. Alt, is highly satisfied with the success of its efforts, as it was never expected to make anything like the sum received. The hall was crowded, thanks to the ladies who sold the tickets, and the general public for their kind support to this most deserving cause. Tickets were sold to the extent of $664, 50 per cent. of which were handed over to the company as previously arranged. Programmes sold by young ladies, dressed as Red Cross nurses accompanied by children with Red Cross armlets, gave a total of $122. A fancy box of chocolates presented by Mr. Francisco Mercevic, was raffled for the sum of $105. The following articles were presented and were kindly auctioned by the artists. Mr. Francisco Nogueira presented a card table, which was knocked down to Mr. Walter Smart, for the sum of $80.

Sociedad Anonima presented a doll which was dressed by Mrs. C. T. Alt, as a Red Cross nurse, knocked down to Mr. J. T. Davies, for the sum of $35; returned for sale and again sold to Mr. C. A. Alt, for $30; again returned for sale and sold to Mr. N. Feller for $25; again returned for sale and sold to Mr. F. C. Haddock for $25; again returned for sale and sold to Mr. J. T. Davies, for $20. Total result: $135.

Miss Blanca Coscollano presented a lady's lace wrap, knocked down to Mr. R. A. Sanderson, for $40.

Mrs. C. T. Alt presented a cushion, which was knocked down to Dr. Borrero for $100.

Mrs. Ross, Hotel Britannia, presented a cushion, the lucky buyer being Mr. F. C. Haddock, at $55.

Mrs. Walter Smart presented a cushion, which was eventually knocked down to Mr. C. T. Alt, at the sum of $125.

Mr. Pedro De Paolis presented a box of chocolates, knocked down to Mr. William Burgoyne, for the sum of $35.

Mrs. J. T. Davies presented a lady's work basket, which was knocked down to Mr. E. H. Williams, for $85.

Mr. R. A. Sanderson presented a silver dessert dish, knocked down to Mr. N. Feller, for the sum of $45, who kindly returned it for auction, being eventually sold to Mr. R. A. Sanderson for the sum of $20.

Mr. S. Davidson who was the winner of the raffle, kindly presented the prize for auction, which was knocked down to Mr. F. C. Haddock, for the sum of $55.

Total result of auction sales: $775.

Subscriptions were obtained from the following: Mr. J. M. Contin $50; Mr. Walter Daniel $50; Mr. Geo. Shipton $50; Mr. Reginald Smith $50; Mr. Julian Castro $15; Mr. H. Binboni $10; Mr. E. B. F.C. Central del Uruguay, Stores Superintendent's Office. Peñarol, Oct. 7, 1915.

Dear Sir,

Your card acknowledging receipt of tobacco for the gallant Tommies reached my hands to-day and please accept my thanks for same.

I am glad to see that you are an original member of the Over-seas Club. As I am an Uruguayan by birth I cannot become a member of your Club. I belong to the staff of the Central Uruguay Railway Company and have many friends who at the outbreak of the war went to England to enlist in Kitchener's Army, so presume they are at present at the front.

I am also a member of the Uruguayan Employees Committee in the Railway and we collect about $250 monthly for the British Patriotic Fund.

People here are all in favour of the Allies.

Trusting you will come through safely and wishing you and your comrades good luck.

Believe me,

Yours very truly,

Such gifts as yours are very highly appreciated, so while we enjoy the solace and comfort of your generous gift, we tender you our heartiest thanks and send our best wishes for your future prosperity and happiness. BEDS FOR THE WOUNDED

A NOBLE SCHEME.

Among the many other ways in which the British community in Argentina is assisting to bear the burden of the war, is the provision of beds in the British Naval Hospital at Netley. Local supporters of the Overseas Club have already raised the funds to maintain four beds in the institution, the cost of each being £52 per annum.

The following letters of acknowledgment have been received by the Hon. Corresponding Secretary in Buenos Aires of the Overseas Club:—

General Buildings, Aldwych,

London, W.C.,

September 14, 1915.

Dear Mrs. Morris,

We have just received your letter enclosing cheque for £52.10.8d., and are most grateful to you and to all the members who have so generously contributed towards the Hospital bed at Netley.

We have just written to Sir Robert Hudson, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the British Red Cross Fund, and have forwarded him a copy of your letter, and I am sure he will do all he can to carry out your wishes. As soon as we hear from him we will forward you his letter.

It may perhaps interest you to see this photograph of the Peddie District (South Africa) bed at Netley Hospital, and we hope very much to have a photograph of your bed to forward to you soon.

Yours truly,

Chairman,

FALKLAND ISLANDS NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Port Stanley, October 4.

The Weather and Water Supplies.

Spite of our vilified as "excessively wet" climate, we recently had quite a lot of dry days, and large households dependant on the rainfall (since their water-wells were closed by the authorities) quoted the ancient mariner,

"Water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink."

Yet, "springs of water, wells and fountains (might easily) make glad the thirsty city" from the untapped sources on hills near the town.

The 20 to 25 thousand pounds cost of our two new buildings stigmatised as "White Elephants," viz., the Hospital (for the last three months having one doctor and one certified nurse for it and the whole town), and the Town Hall (still surrounded by its scaffolding); the murmurers say "could have been more usefully and profitably expended on a water supply and drainage system for the town." The largely increased town-population soon use up the rain water caught from the house roofs, then have to beg, borrow or steal, or employ someone to roll water in barrels from the small reservoir of discoloured water at the westend.

Daily Cable News.

Extracts from the B. A. HERALD now reach us by cable.

Shipping.

The three-masted schooner "Pax" has been renamed the "Kelp." The "Kelp" took away a cargo of "Kelp-cr's" tallow on September 27, her destination undivulged.

By the home-bound R. M. "Orissa" on Sept. 15 came Mrs. McCloud and two children, Miss Jane Alazia, Messrs. Haroomal, Alfred Smith, Mackinnon, Barr.

By her left Mrs. (Dr.) Craddock for England, Mr. A. G. Bennet, and son G. A. Bennet to consult an eye specialist at Buenos Aires.

The P. S. N. C. cargo boat "Bogota" (last from Madryn) arrived on Sept. 25. She left on Sept. 27 taking 500 bales of last season's wool. Two more "Kelp-cr's," Messrs. D. S. McTee and E. J. McAtasney, worked their passage home in her to offer themselves to "K. of K."

By the local steamer "Falkland," on Sept. 24, there left for Beaver Island Mrs. McCloud and two children.

The "Falkland" on 30th from out stations, from which among other passengers she brought Mrs. Blythe, Mr. R. Pole Evans, Mr. Mackirmon from P. Howard and Chartres.

From Sea Lion Island Mrs. Lutchenborg; at which place a boat capsized nearly drowning two men.

A Stanley Midshipman.

By cable I hear that Mr. Evelyn Felton (of Stanley), Midshipman of H. M. S. "Albion," has been invalided to England from the Dardanelles; which will delay the return of his mother Mrs. Oswald to Stanley, who we are glad to learn has recovered from her illness.

"Read, Mark, Learn, and Inwardly Digest."

In my report of the naval battle off the Falklands on Dec. 8, 1914, I mentioned that "one German prisoner is stated to have said that Captain Marx who at one time commanded a F. I. schooner, had settled down with the German ship he was on, off Stanley."

I am rejoiced to learn, however, that the Captain Marx whom we knew was not in "the scrap," or in any German and English scrap of the sort; but is still peacefully making his marks on the Patagonian coast where I hope soon to see him.

The Finances of the Falklands.

Culled from the Government Gazette of September, 1915:—

In the Minute by Governor Douglas

Young he said to the honourable gentleman of the Legislative Council, met on the 3 August, 1915.

"This being the first occasion on which I have the honour to meet you in Council assembled, I desire to assure you of my readiness at all times to co-operate with you for the advancement of the colony and the welfare of its people.

"Of the expenditure, £9,766 is consequent on the outbreak of war; viz., For services of volunteers £7,516; Contribution from the Colony to National Relief Fund £2,250.

"On December 31, 1914, the assets of the Colony amounted to £114,083.

"The revenue for the year 1914 exclusive of land sales and receipts under the Stock Ordinance, amounted to £33,795, and the expenditure to £35,499, leaving a deficit on the year's transactions of £1,740. This deficit has for the present been met out of the surplus funds of the Colony."

A Howdah for Stanley's "White Elephant."

The Town Hall was commenced at the end of the year 1912. Up to the present it can scarcely be said to be either use or ornament. Concerning it Governor Douglas Young at the L. Council meeting said:—

"To complete the Town Hall I regret to say that an additional sum of £1,457 is required.

Expenditure on this building to 31 Dec. 1914, amounted to £10,208
On current year estimates provision is made for . . . 400
Still wants to complete the work 1,457

Bringing the total estimated cost of the work up to . . . £12,425
Separate plant for lighting will cost £ 785

"The Council is aware that the original intention of the Town Hall was to provide a large hall with stage, dining and other adjacent rooms, and on the ground floor to accommodate the museum and library, and the Volunteers with armoury, storeroom, canteen, billiard room, etc., etc.

"Further consideration has however been given to the matter, and while it is proposed to leave the upper floor of the building as originally planned, it has been suggested as the building now occupied by the Government Offices is no longer considered suited for present-day requirements, advantage should be taken of the accommodation afforded on the ground floor of the new building, to house the Supreme Magistrate's courts, and the Legislative Council Chamber in one room, the Colonial Secretary's office, the Treasury, the post office, the museum and the library.

"The headquarters of the Volunteers to be provided for in some other Government building."

"Proclamation. His Majesty will not be advised to exercise his powers of disallowance in respect of Ordinance No. 5 of 1915, viz., an Ordinance to empower the summary cancellation by the Governor of leases and licences to carry on whaling operations in the Falklands and dependencies."

A Regrettable Lapsus.

The B. A. HERALD has occasionally recorded the doings of Stanley Girl Guides and Boy Scouts. Some of the latter in the time of expected invasion, were found most useful as flag and flash signallers, despatch runners, etc., etc. But now, while the gentler sex in England are occupied in making combustible shells, fuses, cartridges, and helping in various ways; and all the available boys are being trained to do something for their country, our whilom promising small corps of juvenile helpers have been suffered to lapse almost into oblivion.

Our militant eggs have become ad-dled, patriotic germs become fungoid. The embryo guides, first aiders, nurses, scouts, and what not, have been stunted in growth and development.

No longer do the whistles of the Girl Guides pipe their shrill communications one to another, or the unwary pedestrians trip over their trailing staves,—(now probably turned into broom handles—while the one time Boy Scout knives are exercised to cut names on, hack, and destroy Stanley's wooden buildings, when

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

A Boy Scout's Club room was erected "close" to Government House by Governor Allardyce, and much was then done to encourage them and the Girl Guides in patriotism and helpfulness. Now, few that should do so, seem to take any interest in such efforts. So the youngsters have "lost their first love," and fervour of patriotism, through the want of an occasional stimulus.

An attempt at Boy Scout Resuscitation.

With already more irons in the fire than he can well keep hot, the Rev. M. D. Hobley took advantage of the week's holiday from school, and had a camping out of what Boy Scouts he could muster. They pitched their tent down near the Wireless Station for a few days. Thus it came about that only two choir boys donned their surplices to chaunt at the Cathedral on Sunday, Sept. 26, others of them were occupied "on tented ground" and doing "one good action a day" in relieving wild birds of the trouble of hatching out eggs.

The Rev. Scout Master, after an arduous Sunday's work of taking all the Services in the Cathedral, besides a funeral, and Sunday School, left town by lantern light at 4 a.m., next morning to resume command over, and cheer up his brood of six or seven scouts, to whose mercurial spirits, cold and wet weather was not conducive.

Marriages.

In Stanley Cathedral on Sept. 21, Miss Maud Clifton, and Mr. Pergolis, were wedded by the Rev. M. D. Hobley. The bride wore cream coloured satin, the bridesmaid (Miss Catherine Peck) was dressed in blue velvet.

Obituary.

In Stanley on Sept. 22, there passed away Mary Ann Biggs, aged 80. The widow of the late Mr. William Biggs (who died in June, 1913). The late Mrs. Biggs arrived in the Colony when a girl, and was married on March 20, 1851. The funeral took place on Sunday, Sept. 26, the service at St. Mary's, R.C., by the Rev. Mario Luis Migone, was very largely attended by relatives and friends.

In Stanley, on Sept. 24, died Sarah Grace Parrin, age 18. Less than a month before she had been married to Mr. George Parrin. The funeral took place on Sept. 26, the Rev. M. D. Hobley officiated at Stanley Cathedral. Many relatives and sympathizing friends attended.

In Stanley, on Sept. 26, died at the age of five months, Henry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hanson Dettieff. The Rev. M. L. Migone officiated at the funeral on Sept. 28.

In Stanley, on Oct. 1, Mrs. Owen King (nee Maggie Smith, of Port Edgar), age just within a day or two of 23 years. While preparing her baby for bed, the child held its breath, which so alarmed the mother that she suddenly collapsed, fell, and died instantaneously from shock and heart failure.

IMPORTS FROM THE U.S.

Remarkable Increases

PROBABLE REPLENISHMENT OF LOW STOCKS

A notable increase is remarked in the volume of imports from the United States into Argentina, and the quantity is now said to show some sign of overtaking the deficiencies in stocks suffered since the outbreak of the great war converted so many factories into ammunition depots, and restricted the arrival of many articles of regular commerce.

According to the U. S. Consulate General, in the month of August goods to the value of $3,102,472 gold were embarked for Argentina at the port of New York. In the same month last year before the interruption of imports was seriously felt, the figure for U. S. imports was $957,130 gold. This therefore signifies the tremendous increase of 300 per cent. It is probable that though this great augmentation has taken place, it will become yet greater—especially if, as all indications seem to show, the war should continue for some length of time longer.

before breakfast on the cold morning of August 27 to help land and draw up our end of the sea-cable laid from Montevideo to Stanley. Women and girls also assisted with sailor-like pulley-hauley grunts and ejaculations. The official element was sadly lacking, scarcely one being present on so important an occasion; but the kiddies displayed as much excited interest as though it was the capture of a veritable sea serpent.

Penguin's Eggs.

"Hen's eggs, 3s. a dozen, and come and fetch 'em," seems to be the only reprisal made upon those responsible for the tax, and restrictions upon taking penguin's eggs, which penguin eggs were it not for red-tape hindrances, would furnish an alleviation to the poor who have enough to do to "keep the pot aboiling" on the wages they get, about a third of which goes in house rent and taxes. Such eggs could be got at the many penguin rookeries by the million, and are practically going to waste. Yet Government luminaries at home harp on cultivating economy and thrift during these days of war. For all the profit the revenue derives (£3 only last year), or is likely to get, the egg tax and restrictions might profitably be repealed, and a saving effected in the "Red tape and circumlocution Office."

"Again, What shall it Profit?"

That the Colonists are deprived of taking seals? The skins of which used to bring in revenue. With a deficit of £1,740 on the year's transactions, the monopoly of seal-taking granted some time ago, should be cancelled, unless it can be shown that the Colony is to be benefitted thereby. The monopoly was given to explorers who are more intent on getting to "The Place where Storms are Spawned."

This breeding place, according to Sir Douglas Mawson, can be shown to be Amelie Land. The wind there blows on an average of 50 miles an hour, and during his trip Sir Douglas and his companions registered it as high as 220 miles on their wind gauge. They discovered that it was possible for them to transmit wireless news of the forthcoming arrival of hurricanes to the Australian coast at least 48 hours in advance."—"Wireless World," p. 27, April 1915.)

PRO-ALLY PROPAGANDA

"POR LA CIVILIZATION"

WHAT HAS ANGLO-FRENCH RIVER
PLATE DIPLOMACY DONE TO MEET PAN GERMAN
PROPAGANDA IN S.
AMERICA?

(Contributed).

Number 16 of the pro-ally publication Por la Civilización edited by an Allied Committee in Montevideo leads off with an article on "Propaganda" signed by a Montevidean. The article states that it is a notorious fact that the Germans with that methodical organisation characteristic of them, have established and maintain in foreign countries a vast system of propaganda extending in all directions, and which must attain some result in the sense, if not creating sympathy for their cause (a thing impossible for a cause so antipathetic) will at least retard in part the increasing sympathy of the world for the cause championed by the Allies, viz: that of Civilisation, Right, Justice and Humanity.

At the outset it was by the Italian mails and now by the Dutch mails, there arrive in the River Plate from Hamburg, the home centre of that propaganda, numerous publications setting forth the defence of the cause and interests of Germany, and attacking the Allies, especially Great Britain which is the bête noir of the Teutons.

This German literature is deplorable both in substance and in form. It seems to be concocted by bilious dull-heads and written or translated by individuals who have picked up pigeon Spanish in the backyards of cheap jack stores. Bad as it is, this class of literature must produce some effect amongst those lacking in intelligence and sufficient education to enable them to appreciate events and the leading participants in same with discrimination and justice.

Besides this German printing shop propaganda there are to be found everywhere similar publications in the shape of newspapers, reviews, pamphlets and leaflets which the Germans endeavour to place in the homes to attract general attention so as to leave some impression of Germanism and by which it is hoped to win converts or neutralise unfriendliness.

With very few exceptions, this Teutonic propaganda elaborated abroad is as paltry mentally as that imported direct from Hamburg or Berlin. The German intellect—dull and hazy—fails to comprehend either the shrewdness of the Latin people or the quick perception and subtlety of the South Americans, and on that account they fill the people up with heavy and unrelishable mixtures as "choucroute" with its acrid and repugnant exhalations common to the impregnated atmosphere of German towns.

Then again, this propaganda ever sounds the eternal note of arrogance, which at this hour, when the feet of clay are revealed, moves the derision of those who are at least gifted with some intelligence. German power, German greatness, German science, German 'kultur,' German wisdom, all this, and much more of the same calibre swell the pages of all their publications. These Germans are so stupid and fail to understand the mesure and savoir-faire that it does not dawn upon them how they would propitiate by this naked insolence and monstrous braggadocio.

It is the Kaiser above everyone else who exalts Germany, German spirit and German greatness to the stars of heaven and as his subjects are so subdued they have come to believe him to be a pendant of God, if not superior to God, the result is that German literature fails words sufficiently great and dithyrambic to extol all that is "boche" and to scorn whatever is not German.

Unfortunately meek and pusillanimous spirits exist in all parts and it is they who are forced to believe that Germany is a really tremendous and invincible country. A few months hence will prove very much to the contrary, but, notwithstanding, it is necessary to counteract the effects of Teutonic propaganda and make the masses understand that this pretended German superiority is sheer bluff.

It must be recognised nevertheless, that on the Allies' side—especially the French, sufficient has not been done abroad to counterweigh the objects and effects of German propaganda. It is true that England has conceived the excellent idea to publish a series of most notable pamphlets in various languages, excellently written and translated and which have been profusely distributed in various countries. Amongst these short treatises are many carrying weighty conviction such as those by Chesterton, Beck, Whitridge, Harden, Church, Cook, Ward and Bryce. This publicity is not, however, sufficiently far reaching. It only comes within the circle of persons comparatively well read and who are therefore on the side of the Allies. What is more necessary than impressing the already convinced is to win over the vacillating multitude which yet give credence to Teuton fiction. To attain this end it is necessary to launch cheap local publications to reach the masses and to impress public sympathy by the excellence of their contents.

It is surprising indeed that not only in Uruguay but more especially in the Argentine where British colonies are powerful by fortune and prestige that nothing is being done in this direction. Above all, the inaction and indifference of the Allies in the Argentine as regards propaganda in defence of their cause are incomprehensible and inexcusable. That a capital of the importance of Buenos Aires counting with thousands of British and French subjects with most important and long established associations has not even had a review as Por la Civilización, calls for severe criticism. Well as it may be to be assured of a general latent sympathy and rest in the belief that the cause of the Allies will defend itself on its merits, a practical criterion should make it understood that this intense German propaganda does mischief—takes root—and it is imperative to counteract it. Why? Tomorrow, after the military battles, will be renewed the commercial and industrial rivalry in which the Germans have proved themselves as singularly apt.

The River Plate clientele in its immense majority—confronted with English and French products, and German articles—elect the first two knowing their genuineness and incontestable superiority, but the German articles though trashy are alluring in prices, and this fact coupled with German credit terms supplant their rivals. All this is known by commercial writers, economists, business men, statesmen equally in England as in France, and in spite of this one has not seen during one long year of war, propaganda in an efficacious form or on any serious scale which would deepen the sympathies which already exist and which would create a profound and enduring antipathy against the Teuton adversary. This should be looked to.

With sorrow—terminates this article—we have heard repeated times this interrogation. What has Anglo-French diplomacy in the River Plate Republics done to counteract the effects of German propaganda? We have not known how to reply, because the little we have seen done in these parts has seemed to be exclusively the fruit of individual and private initiative and effort, and what is still more rather by natives than by the English or French. This ought not to be so.

DISCUSSING THE WAR
IN THE FONDA AND ALONG THE QUAYSPUTTING THE CASE FOR THE ALLIES

The westering sun sheds a broad bridge of glowing gold across the murky and oil-stained waters of the river, tipping its grime with iridescent beauty gilding the dancing pennants of the long lateen yards as the fishing boats rock to and fro amid the ceaseless wash of passing craft. A miniature Billingsgate is in progress, there on the quay, and a group of fish buyers are gathered round the twenty or thirty odd boxes of river fish landed by the two swarthy Neapolitans who form the complement of the Isola di Capri, a bluff bowed, half decked craft of some ten tons burthen or thereabouts; her short, stout, mast stepped well forward, the stays on either side draped with nets, eorks, flags, and lines, the tools of Debenedetto's trade. Whilst above all the long yard, whereon is furled the brown tanned sail whose colour is just visible at the head and foot of its folds, creaks pendulous against the mast, covering the whole extension of the boat from the stem far out over the stern in a circular arc that to the imaginative mind recalls the whole history of the sail.

The Isola di Capri lies stern on to the quay, with an anchor down at her bows fast-holding in the blue river mud. Yet whilst watching his fish boxes, Debenedetto also has an eye to the manœuvres of a lack-hulled, powerful looking tug, with a 'P' on its funnel, manœuvres that threaten to bring her dangerously close to the tier of fishing boats and local craft. Maledetti i tedeschi, ejaculates the patron of an island lighter whose long bowsprit came near to disaster. Debenedetto says nothing, but spits significantly. Esos alemanes! ejaculates a hanger-on, looking for the chance of earning a few cents by putting the boxes into a cart, and anxious to show his sympathy with the mood of the moment.

"People of no education, and hard to all who serve for them," said Fortunato, a Calabrian gentleman who spent the major portion of his time in stowing coal aboard the liners of the X. . . . fleet, and whose appearance certainly did not lead one to suppose him any judge of education. Indeed Fortunato could scarcely sign his name; but then he said educazione, which in Italian means a world more than the bare instruction that has come to be the significance of its English equivalent.

"Indeed, they are pigs, perhaps it is because they are always eating pork that their faces become so swinish, their eye so small and bright, their hair so short; just like bristles on the old hog's back." This from the fish buyer, Mariano Forchetto, a Sorrentino. And a chuckle went round the group. For Mariano, commonly known as el gordo, weighed 135 kilos in his vest; and he was not a tall man.

Away across the water sounded the long blast of a syren and a few minutes later small launches jostled each other at the quay steps, packed with toil-stained men from the works on the other side. Laughing and joking they made their way over the cobbles, and up the long narrow street, lined by tumbledown wooden houses and serving as a playground, a meeting place, a receptacle for rubbish, that leads to the hinterland of this southern port. With the crowd go the men from the fishing boats, first seeing all safe aboard, and locking up the hatch of the tiny after cabin. Newspaper boys, shouting Por la Civilización may be had gratis on application to the following addresses:—Uruguay, Casilla de Correos 84, Montevideo; Argentina, Casilla de Correos 735, Buenos Aires.

La Razón, Roma, come towards the river. The talk turns to the war. A few men buy papers, mostly Roma. It is Italian, for one thing; another excellent reason is that it costs but 5 cents. La Unión has but a furtive and limited sale in these parts.

Now is the time when the fondas do a roaring trade. Great bare rooms, tables and stools the only furniture, save for the trestled harrels against the wall. Crimson drippings on the floor, low-ceiled, with wooden rafters black with age and smoke, in one corner a bar of sorts, with anything from a hundred to two hundred men in their working kit talking over the events of the day, one fonda at least that the writer has in his mind's eye recalls the descriptions given of the common rooms in the old inns of mediæval Italy. Go among the tables and snatch some of the talk; so much of it as you can, that is to say, for it is a tangle of dialects, and Spanish of the schools is but little help. The war, the war, and again the war, is the theme on every side. And the apparent success of the German arms are pondered over, lamented, cursed and wondered at. The Kaiser is generally supposed to have the evil eye, his commanders are in league with the devil, and for that reason the Turks, whose antipathy to the True Cross is well known, are able to resist the attacks of the Christian hosts. A strange medley of old superstitions and old beliefs has come to the surface in the southern lands, and high power explosives and the doctrine of whithcraft are by no means regarded as incompatible in the eyes of the average unskilled labourer along the waterfront.

That Germany is in the wrong is generally stated. And the Italians are as determined as anyone to keep up the struggle until she has been forced to admit it. With other nationalities, and Spaniards in particular, German propaganda has been so effective that the story of the Belgian atrocities, the infringement of all rights, is a forgotten page to the average man. Wise in their generation, the Germans have rubbed in the fact that it pays to be on the winning side; that they are winning—witness the progress of their several armies—and although there may be some slight delay in settling with the English fleet, the attacks of Zeppelins and the discord in Great Britain, will in all likelihood cause England to ask for terms long before her fleet ever is forced into action. It is not so much the direct lying of the German propagandist that does harm; it is what he omits to say, and above all, what he suggests. As far as one can ascertain concerted efforts have been made by German agents to train up foremen, stevedores, and so forth, to preach the German cause. These men, Spaniards and Greeks for the most part, are kept coached up in the latest war news, and, above all, in the latest diplomatic news. The value of a prediction that comes true is incalculable when dealing with semi-illiterate individuals. And Germany has been predicting the advent of a new ally in the Balkans for at least a month.

Hitherto the arguments, hopes, and feelings, of the Allies have not been pressed on anyone. In fact, save in the Argentine Press, they have not been attainable without a considerable deal of enquiry and personal trouble. Germany has stinted no money and no pains to state her case. Is it too much to urge that the friends of the Allies ought to do likewise?

AN ECHO OF THE AIR RAID.

His Wife (alarmed): "Oh! Charles, please don't irritate it."

A LOCAL 'APPY 'AMPSTEAD

I have asked about a dozen of my friends if they have ever been to Santa Catalina and always the reply has been, "Where on earth is that? I have never heard of the place." And these friends have been here for years! And also I have asked then, "Have you been to the "Playa" at Quilmes?" Some few have, most of them have not. And yet the "Playa" at Quilmes is to Buenos Aires in some degree what Hampstead Heath is to London.

Who does not know the happy hunting ground of the 'Arries and 'Arriets of dear old London, where "Ye Olde Spaniards Tavern" hangs out its sign with the attraction of having been "Dick Turpin's favourite resort"? Also "Jack Straw's Castle," "Ye Old Bull and Bush," and "The Gospel Oak" are nomenclatures designed to attract visitors to this "Vale of Health." But if the local 'Appy 'Ampstead lacks all this old-world flavour, it has an attraction all its own. Sunday is the day in England, also in Buenos Aires, when the inhabitants of the crowded city make fiesta; and the "picnic" parties both have much the same manner of enjoying themselves. There are no "shows" at Quilmes, and no donkeys; but there are caballos by the score, with the inevitable sheepskins; and the picnickers bring their swings and their concertinas, their guitars and their mouth-organs, and their "eats" and drinks, and behold, all the elements for a grand fiesta. They ride, they sing, they tango, they swing, and they make as much noise as they like, with no vigilante to say them "Nay." The day is one long stretch of pure, undiluted, undisturbed enjoyment. Many parties build their fires, others bring their primus stoves with them, while the less energetic pay their money and take their choice at an open-air restaurant.

The way to Quilmes "Playa" is made by trams, but that statement does not convey the idea at all. As the train stops, those wishing to take the air at the local 'Appy 'Ampstead make a wild rush to the top of the station where a tram is in waiting. They fill it once, they fill it twice, and they fill it a third time—the number of men, women and children "compressed" into that tram being one of the twentieth century miracles. (Those who didn't know enough to make the early rush have to wait for the next time!) The men gallantly gave up their sitting space to the women and children (except in a few cases where a "papa" had a dozen or so of his offspring sitting on and around him in one seat) and they balanced the car by standing in front with the driver, as well as at the back with the conductor. How either did his work in the human crush is another twentieth century miracle. However, the tram eventually arrives and deposits its load under the willows. In our case, some other Britishers who found themselves deposited, addressed us and asked if we could tell them where they were. We couldn't exactly, but we told them we understood the place to be the Playa at Quilmes, the 'Ampstead 'Eath of Argentina. They lost themselves among the buttercups as being more home-like than the dead fish lying in putrid heaps nearer the water, I think, for they disappeared in the direction of the wild grasses and buttons of gold as the French call our buttercups.

We wandered along muddy shores, on which the "ebbing tide" had deposited its load of fish, which day by day remains to rot in the sun, and fill the air with disagreeable odours, and where over each small pool were myriads of insects, which rose in clouds when disturbed. Far away out in the water, people were bathing, horses were dragging their vehicles, washing their feet, as if they enjoyed the "fiesta" as much as the humans. Here and there vendors of different eatables shouted their wares, while a procession of riders galloped wildly up and down the avenues, on their hired "mokes." There are two sides to every question, even the "Playa" question. There is a left and a right—a side for the goats, the left; and a side for the sheep, the right. The goats galloped and shouted, and "fiesta-ed" in their own peculiar way; while the sheep did likewise on their side, only the goats behaved like those cast into the inferno of dirt, and mud, and dead fish; while the sheep spread themselves over the grassy mounds, and demonstrated the difference between the two—the goats and the sheep. The latter arrived by automobiles, and in coaches, as well as by train. They spread their refreshments with much refinement of spirit. They made of their local 'Ampstead as superior a rendezvous as a well-filled hamper could do; the ladies rode the "caballos" in lady-like style, with side-saddle and skirt, again proving the difference to the "other" side, where the girls mounted behind and enjoyed a jogtrot amid screams of laughter. And when the flowing tide came in and covered over the putrefying fish—the most prominent feature of all at Quilmes "Playa" is the dead fish—and brought the boating parties up to the grassy mounds; and when the shouts of the more hilarious ones were growing louder, and the dancing and the playing of "stringed" instruments more familiar, the human sheep, like the Arabs of old, folded their tents and stole away, back to Buenos Aires, where the smells are often worse than those scattered broadcast by the dead of the finny tribe; and most of the British visitors carried away with them bouquets of the little yellow English field-flowers, which are rare among the "Broom, Bracken, and Bramble" of the real Hampstead Heath, but which make of the surroundings of Quilmes "Playa" a golden carpet indeed. In another century some enterprising landowner will "sure" out-Hampstead the English Heath, at Quilmes Playa.

The representative of a Dutch paper describes an interview with Madame Fournaise-Liban, a 71-year-old widow, in her house in Donchery, near Sedan, where in 1870, Napoleon III., had his first interview with Bismarck after the great battle. In the same room, where mementoes presented by both are preserved, there are exhibited six gold pieces given to the old lady recently by the present Kaiser.

In recognition of her bravery and devotion to the wounded, Mlle. Korkeenh, a Russian Sister of Mercy, has been decorated with the Russian equivalent to the British V.C. Mlle. Korkeenh was working in a Russian field hospital in the neighbourhood of Soldau, East Prussia. When the Germans attacked the position of the Russian troops Nurse Korkeenh remained alone in the hospital tending the wounds of private soldiers and officers. Although the hospital was already in the centre of the sphere of the enemy's fire, Mlle. Korkeenh boldly came outside, procured a number of horses, harnessed them, found several vehicles, and, with the aid of the lightly-wounded men, lifted the patients into the vehicles, and drove them away to a place of safety.

WOMEN OF FRANCE

Yvette Guilbert writes to the "Daily Chronicle":—

What a strange idea, my dear sir, to choose me out of all French women to depict in her true worth, for your pages, the woman of my country! How am I to attempt it? And how to get outside of myself sufficiently to be able to trace in all my fellow-countrywomen the thousand shades and phases through which they have passed since the outbreak of the war?

I shall restrict myself to the single point in which we women are all alike—Love, Love of the Patrie; this is the part of our menfolk who have charged themselves with the defence of the soil, of the national territory.

These lovely women of France; what sisters, what kind friends they have been to the men! How great among great women were those who, face to face with the enemy, knew how to tame by their power of will the rage of the invading soldiery. To yonder French women of the villages and towns was due the carrying on of communal existence. Some of them, gathering the community under their management, met in council like men of State, and took the place of the imprisoned authorities, thus protecting the cradle of the infant and the sick-bed of the aged.

There are women of France who have lengthened out the list of heroines of the Golden Legend. Without cannons or rifles, without bayonets or shells, God willed that they might do their duty—their duty as women. Other women less favoured with trials imposed on them by Heaven, had perforce to content themselves with hastening to the battlefield, there to staunch the streams of blood—to tend the thousands of men machine-gunned by other men—of fathers hacked by other fathers, of sons gashed by other sons, of husbands mutilated by other husbands—of brothers assassinated by other brothers—knife in teeth, bayonet on rifle! while, in order to precipitate death—to augment the killing of the fathers of women, the husbands of women—machine-gun and cannon have rained from the earth and from the sky bullets, shells, and bombs, attacking human motherhood, by mowing it down like grass.

For each man that is dead there are four women at least who are mourning. And my heart of a Christian woman turns with equal emotion towards all my sisters whom this war is garbing in long black veils, and who, in the medley of devotions, think of nought else but of these who are coming back from the front, their eyes torn out, their arms and legs smashed and mutilated. They greet, panting with love, enfevered with motherly devotion, the soldiers of the guns, those of the mitrailleuses, those of the rifles, those of the bayonets—all these bold killers, heroes of fabulous stories of courage and bravery; and a little of that red glory leaves its stain on their garment.

They breathe that glory, and become drunken with the last fading mustiness of the powder of death. New Saint Veronicas, they preserve the imprint of the face "of the new Gods" on the white linen of their aprons. What hearts these women must have—or, I should rather say, how many hearts they must have—to expend such a wealth of love. For every woman has four hearts—the heart of a child, the heart of a bride, the heart of a sister, the heart of a mother. As for a man, he has ever in reality but one heart—the heart of a warrior.

And yet when our men folk come home to us and say, "Wives, sisters, we have driven the enemy from the land; we are the makers of victory!" and when those other men over there go back and say to their wives: "We are beaten, but we were heroic!" on that day all the women, without exception, will forget and forgive these sacrifices of the children of women. And while we women acclaim the conqueror, the women of the conquered will console them; but all we women alike feel in our souls that, if men can cover themselves with glory only

At a Red Cross meeting in London recently presided over by the Lord Mayor, subscriptions amounting to the astonishing sum of £87,455 were announced. This is believed to be the largest sum ever raised at a single gathering for any charitable purpose, and it brings the joint fund of the Red Cross Society and St. John Ambulance Association to over £1,400,000.

One of the finest charities of to-day is that in operation at St. Dunstan's, Regent's Park, where soldiers and sailors, blinded through the war, are being taught to begin life over again. The instructors employed are themselves blind, so that they have a peculiar understanding of the difficulties confronting these men of ours—never such heroes as now when they are facing not death but life in darkness, and facing it with such wonderful cheerfulness and courage. Braille reading and typewriting are taught, and also carpentry, boot repairing, mat and basket making, massage and telephony. It is found that blind people become exceedingly skilful at massage, and can compete with experts on their own ground. Just now the opening for massage is simply unlimited, so that the occupation should prove a really paying one. Poultry-farming and market-gardening are taught by the blind expert, Captain Webber. Through ingenious arrangements of gates, pens, railings, coops, etc., the blind poultry farmer is enabled to run the whole business himself, catch any bird he wishes, transfer the birds from one yard to another, collect the eggs, etc. It sounds magical, doesn't it? There is a good stretch of water on the premises, and here rowing is taught—an exercise which appeals especially to the blind as it enables them to feel that "they are conducting other people instead of being themselves conducted." Chief credit for this whole splendid undertaking belongs to Mr. C. Arthur Pearson, who is himself blind.

There are several decorations that can be worn by women, and one of these is the Ribbon and Star of the Order of the Shekat (Order of Compassion). It is a Turkish decoration. Turkish women seldom receive it, but Lady Conan Doyle received it some years ago, as did Mrs. Golet, a well-known American. Perhaps the most coveted of all orders for women, certainly so far as Roman Catholics are concerned, is the Golden Rose, which is bestowed upon pious daughters of the Church by the Pope. It may only be conferred once in each year, Queen Victoria of Spain being one of the very few recipients of the decoration.

The powerful German Socialist daily paper, "Vorwärts," which seems to bear a charmed life—in that, in spite of numerous suppressions as a result of too much truth telling, it rises each time unafraid—has created much amusement in England by its attack on a scheme now before the German people for conscripting women workers.

It has been discovered that German women are in need of more discipline, "more Potsdam" as one leader frankly and unblushingly called it. So it is proposed that they are to be trained (in barracks, actually!) in batches of 350,000 a year in such subjects as domestic economy, hygiene and the care of children, and this under the equivalent of a company sergeant and some of it in public!

through the aid of death, women know how to create glory through life and human love. And may it perhaps not be that we women are the true heroines of war, and of peace, too, in the sight of God!

Land of Lilliput.

Conduc'ed by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

Do you know I have just read about some people, who by painting their bodies, can render themselves invisible. It sounds like a fairy story, does it not?

In many fairy stories we read that the giant possessed a coat which, when he put it on, rendered him invisible; and how Jack, or some other wonderful giant-killer, got possession of this coat, and by rendering himself invisible, rid the world of the giant. Well, this story is not a fairy story, although it is about dwarfs—for they are very real; and they live in Africa. A man of science, who has already made many wonderful discoveries, has recently returned to England from a three years' trip in the Congo territory. Now look that place up on your map, and you will know that there is a forest called Ituri there about which nothing much has ever been found out.

Dr. Christy, the traveller, who went out for the Belgian Government three years ago, must have been greatly surprised on his return to find that Belgium, as he left it, no longer existed, but instead there was a battlefield of blood and misery! Dr. Christy spent eighteen months out of the three years with the Bambuti dwarfs, who are very shy, and go about quite naked. It is these people who paint themselves across their bodies with red and make themselves invisible. And the doctor also found the okapi, an animal peculiar to darkest Africa. The dwarfs organise great drives in the forest, and catch the animals by means of nets; but Dr. Christy shot one and collected four. It will be interesting to learn later on all the wonderful discoveries made by this skilful man, who was the only European on this three years' journey, his European assistants having had to go back to civilisation on account of sickness. What a story he will be able to tell, and if he can make himself invisible also, I wonder what he will do about it, don't you?

Those of you who have come to Argentina from London, have of course travelled by the tube railways of that city. Have any of you given a thought to the manner in which traffic is made possible there? By day and by night there is being pumped into these tunnels a river of pure air, not ordinary air as we breathe it every second, but air containing ozone, this being an altered form of oxygen; and being acted upon at its creation by electricity, it receives a property which oxygen does not possess, it being so strong that it instantly kills germs. By itself naturally it would be dangerous to humans; but being pumped into the used-up air, it is health and life-giving. The tube railways go as deep as 250 feet below Hampstead Heath, so you may think how necessary it is to cleanse the air used up by humans in their passage to and fro!

So the railway companies pump in a river of fresh air. They have a powerful electric plant, and with this they pass enormous volumes of air under the influence of electric currents, turning it into pure ozone, such as is present, for example, in the sweet air that comes to us after a thunderstorm. The air thus ozonised is forced, through an elaborate series of pipes, to every part of the railway. Great pipes run along the floors of the platform, and from these rise other pipes which pour out a constant stream of life-giving air. There are currents constantly flowing through the booking-halls, in the lifts, along the corridors, and through the tunnels. The pure air enters the ordinary air under pressure, and at certain points the currents of air travel with the strength of little gales. The effect is admirable. Not only does the good air come blown in upon us like a sea-side storm; it kicks out the air which has already been breathed and become unfit for further service. The exhausted and poisoned air is forced out under the pressure of the incoming volume, and finds its escape to the open atmosphere above through a myriad outlets.

Describing the system, a London writer says:—"Ozone in itself is dangerous, but combined with ordinary air it is as life to us. We can tell from the peculiar smell that the tube atmosphere is full of it. Unlike oxygen, from which it comes, it possesses a characteristic odour, and its name is taken from the Greek word ozo, which means 'I smell.' The odour is not pleasant, but we shall all tolerate it if we remember that it is a signal to our noses that the air is as pure as on the mountain-top. Day and night this river of pure air streams through the tube railways, and so long as we are in it we may scorn the fog entering from the streets overhead. A fog reaching upwards of a mile from the ground represents a deadly weight of 3000 million tons upon London; even a slight fog, reaching not higher than the top of St. Paul's, means six tons of poisonous fog to the square mile. The ozone in the tubes, however, makes war on the fog and destroys its deadliness. But in doing so it loses its own activity, and becomes ordinary oxygen again, and that is why the electric plant must be kept continually at work, creating ozone from ordinary air, so that we may have a sweet atmosphere to breathe down in the wondrous heart of mighty London."

And now for your weekly story, which is called

"The Golden Key."

With love from

EGERIA.

THE GOLDEN KEY

(By G. M. FIFE, in "The Weekly Scotsman.")

Little Jeannette was a herd girl in a French village. She had a sweet face and a kind heart, but she had one fault which grieved her grandmother, who was called Mere Moisson, and the ploughman, Jacques, who was always her good friend. She was very lazy about learning her lessons in the little school taught by the good cure.

It was a warm day, in mid-June. The mountain flowers were all abloom, the air was alive with the hum of the busy bees gathering their stores of wax and honey for winter use. Gorgeously-hued butterflies and moths were flitting hither and thither like detached fragments of the rainbow.

Jeannette had driven the cows down to some rich pasture, where a little mountain stream twined its winding way, gurgling and murmuring, to the great river that rolled in majestic volume through the fertile valley below. The good cure had told her once that the great river was fed by the little mountain streams, and that without their waters it would soon become small, and dry up in the heat of summer, and so it was with the little good deeds, they all went to help to swell the volume of the world's goodness, and that even small children could contribute towards the total just as the little mountain runnels helped to form the great river.

In Jeannette's mind, as in the minds of the ancient Greeks, every stream and woodland had its presiding deity, but with her they were all fairies.

Having seen her four-footed charges safely browsing, the little maid sat down on the bank of the brook and listened to the sweet tinkling music of the cow-bells, the varied songs of the birds on bough and bush, the hum of the queeting bees, the purling tones of the mountain rill, and thought of those "little folk" who peopled the chambers of her busy little brain.

How it happened she could never tell, but suddenly she heard a tiny voice speaking into her right ear, in the most musical tones she had ever heard, bidding her welcome to Fairyland.

She turned round and beheld the most beautiful little lady imaginable; more lovely than her fancy had ever pictured. Long hair—like filaments of gold—fell in luxuriant profusion over her shoulders, and shone with a wondrous lustre in the sunshine. A long flowing robe, made from the corolla of the white lily, ornamented with dewdrops like diamonds, depended from her shoulders and enveloped her form, while her wings, like filmy mother-of-pearl, were beautifully iridescent. Her countenance was smiling and sweet to gaze upon, while her voice was as the music of the night-ingle.

Speaking to Jeannette in low musical tones, she said: "The Fairy Queen has sent me as the bearer of a fairy gift to you, and to offer you the fulfilment of any wish that you may express."

Jeannette curtsied as grandmother had taught her to do to Monsieur the Cure, and thanked the fairy messenger.

The latter took a small golden key, which she carried in a case, and handed it to Jeannette, who again curtsied and thanked her.

"Now," said the fairy, "you have the golden key; let me hear your wish, so that it may be granted."

Jeannette thought hard for a moment as to what she would ask her. She was not a selfish little girl and she wished to please grandmother and the good cure, so she thought she would ask to see the fairies who would help her to read, write and cipher, as they wished.

When she made known her wish, the envoy of the Fairy Queen said:—"Follow me." So saying, she led Jeannette, who had forgotten about her cows, by devious roads, where beautiful flowers grew and little birds of the most wonderful plumage flew about trilling out "Chirrup, chirrup," while fireflies and glow-worms lighted up the dark parts of the road, until they came to a high, forbidding-looking gate that barred the way.

"Ah," said Jeannette, giving expression to her inward thoughts, "we shall never get that big gate opened." But her fairy guide said, "You have the golden key; put it in the lock and turn it, and the gates will open."

Jeannette did as she was bidden, when, lo and behold! the great gate opened as easily as the little latch gate at the farm, and wonderingly she found herself in a large chamber.

"This," said her guide, "is the chamber of the 'thirty-six' fairies whose aid you seek. Now, look at the password on the key, and repeat it after me."

Jeannette looked, and saw the golden key bore one word engraved upon it, "Docilis." She had not the slightest idea what it might mean, but she repeated it after the fairy, as directed. Immediately, as if by magic, twenty-six little fairies came skipping out of twenty-six little doors on the right of the chamber, and ten little fairies out of the ten little doors on the left.

First, the twenty-six advanced and bowed to her, then the ten came forward and made their obeisance.

Suddenly, as with one voice, they sang:—"We are the servants of her who holds the golden key."

Jeannette could hardly contain herself with delight. "Tell me," exclaimed she, "one of your wonderful fairy stories."

Bowing politely to the stranger, the twenty-six fairies began to group themselves into twos, threes, and fours, each group saying one word, and then rapidly changing into other groups, constantly dissolving, and reuniting.

The story was about a king who had heaps of wealth, and everything he touched turned to money; but he was not happy, and neither were his people.

SOME WOMEN AND MANY THINGS

An ex-suffrage prisoner, Miss Nina Boyle, who took so strong a part in the Women's Freedom League, is now chief of the Women Police Volunteers. Officers of this organisation, in uniform, patrol parks and gardens, and watch proceedings in the police courts. One of the works it has in hand now is the protection of animals from cruel usage.

It is pleasing to see that there are a few literary ventures on the market beside war books. The fascinating subject of the early records of Australia is being dealt with by a woman writer, Miss Ida Lee (Mrs. Charles Bruce Marriott), F.R.G.S., whose book will shortly be announced.

All the wise men and doctors in his kingdom were called to find out the cause of the king's unhappiness, but only one very wise person could tell him.

He told the monarch that his heart had become metallic, and no longer felt for his people.

"Oh," cried Jeannette, "how sad for the king and his people! I wonder how much money he had?"

The ten fairies on the left, who had not taken any part in telling the story, now advanced, bowed, and said, "That is our part," whereupon they formed themselves into rows, and named the sum of the king's riches.

Jeannette was delighted, and asked for more and more stories, till her desire for them was satisfied, when she thanked them very much for their goodness.

They again cried out, "We are the servants of her who holds the golden key."

She wondered what were their names, that she might tell grandmother and the cure, so she made another curtsy, and said: "May I have the pleasure of knowing your names?"

The leader of the twenty-six stepped out and said: "Spell the word upon the golden key."

Jeannette pronounced the letters "Docilis."

"That," said her fairy friend, "means willing to be taught."

Jeannette blushed, till her face was in a flame, and felt ashamed as she remembered her reluctance to learn when the cure wished to teach her.

The twenty-six fairies advanced and bowed, then, throwing aside the cloaks they wore, they cried out: "We are the letters of the Alphabet." The ten came forward and exclaimed: "And we are the Arabic Numerals." Joining in chorus they shouted: "All knowledge lies in us."

Jeannette gave a start, and rubbed her eyes. The words were still ringing in her ears, but as she looked about her she found she was still seated by the side of the little gurgling brook, the cow-bells were tinkling, the bees were humming, and the birds singing as when she had sat down after driving the cows to pasture.

Had she been dreaming, she asked herself, or had the fairies taken her away to fairyland and then carried her back again? She would ask Jacques.

She drove the cows back to the farm, for the milking hour was near, and she seized the earliest opportunity of questioning Jacques about her adventures in the realms of Fairydom.

Jacques listened gravely, and told her he was always certain she was a fairies' child, and now he was sure of it. No doubt they wanted her to be a good scholar, therefore she must learn all she could.

Mere Moisson and the cure were greatly astonished at the change in Jeannette as regards her lessons. Her diligence was as great now as her indifference had been before, but it was not till long afterwards that they heard the secret of her visit to fairyland, and the story of the golden key.

VICTORIA SAILORS' HOME

The Victoria Sailors' Home concert last evening was decorated with a galaxy of stars. The constellation consisted of Saturn, Neptune, Martell (three star), Mars and Venus. Mighty Jove sat at the piano, having temporarily laid by his thunderbolts, and all the Olympian deities had for the nonce assumed green Pierrot costumes, giving a distinctly "Grotesque" flavour. Under the heavy coating of white paint and blackened eyebrows, the company was quite anonymous. The programme was as follows:—1. Opening chorus, "Where are the lads of the village to-night?" the Constellation; 2 song, "Jack's the Boy" and "Egypt," by Neptune; 3 violin solo, "Salut d'Amor" and "Traumerei," Saturn; 4 song, "Oh, to-morrow" and "When I woke up in the morning" Martell (three star); 5 cello solo, "The Old Folks at Home" and "Home, Sweet Home," by Venus; 6 "The Powder Monkey" and "The Veteran's Song," by Mars; 7 "I'll make a man of you" and "When the boys come marching by." After the interval followed the Second Part. 1 Song, "Mary Ann, she's after me," and "The Mince Pie"; 2 cello solo, "Intermezzo" (Cavalleria Rusticana), and "Ave Maria," Venus; 3 "Wire in, my lads" and "Cuckoo," Martell (three stars); 4 violin solo, Selected Saturn; 5 song, "William, James and Mary," and "I was a good little girl"; 6, "The boys of the Brigade" and "Blow, blow, thou wintry wind"; 7 "Rule, Britannia." God Save the King. The concert was an excellent one, and as may be seen, the programme afforded a pleasant change from the drawing room sentimental ditties. Mrs. Frank B. Peach arranged the lighting, dresses, stage effects and mechanical effects, and produced the concert in an altogether admirable manner.

IN AID OF THE CHILDREN

CHARITY DANCE AT QUILMES.

There is no suburban district of the capital that has done better, been more persistent or more to the fore in all patriotic, Red Cross or charitable functions as has the district of Quilmes. Small as the district is, it is by no means deficient in its energy and earnestness whenever the patriotism is wafted to the breeze.

On Oct. 15 things were somewhat changed. It was not patriotism that had a call but charity—charity to the poor little ones—and once again success attended the efforts and arrangements, and British folk were once again to the front.

A dance had been arranged, and Mrs. Pizaro Lastra had energetically worked in making the function a success on behalf of the poor, and after all her energy had been expended she was unfortunate enough, through an accident, to be unable to enjoy the fruits of her efforts. Mrs. Robinson, however, did everything that was materially possible to take Mrs. Lastra's place and the result was success.

If consideration is given to the fact that a special train was arranged for on behalf of the numerous guests to and from Buenos Aires, and that the price per ticket was only $3, it can be gathered that to make a success of the function much energy was entailed. Amongst the large number present were: Mr. and Mrs. Pott, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. and Mr. Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. Hooper, Mr. and Mrs. Cater, Mr. and Mrs. Day, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Robinson, Miss Maruja del Campos, Miss Angelica del Campos, Miss Ruth Robinson, Miss Day, Miss Woods, Mr. Barry Hoare, Mr. Pott, Mr. Wolff, Lawrence, Gorden, Mr. O. H. Pulston, Dr. Pizaro Lastra, Miss Lastra, Miss Hooper, Miss Florie Hoare, Mr. B. C. Joyce, Mrs. Giraldez, Mr. L. Pacheco, Otamendi, Arraga, Castellano, Mr. Osborn, Mr. Patterson, Mr. Gater Cabral, Cabrera, Cicheros, Ralph Molino, R. F. Valenzuela, Mr. and Mrs. Grassick, Mr. Garcio Cabral and a host of others.

BELGRANO "DOLLAR" CONCERT

LAST OF THE SERIES.

With the exception of a special extra concert to be given on November 6 in connection with the Sweet Pea Show, the final dollar concert of the Winter Series was held at St. Saviour's on Oct. 14. The hall was crowded, and there was no seating accommodation for late arrivals, which might have been expected from the all-round excellence of the programme. Short as the programme was, one could not have discovered anything more pleasing or more artistic.

Mrs. R. H. Thomson, whose cold is still troublesome, sang a delightful melody of Lohor's, and followed with a violoncello solo. Her performance was highly appreciated, and both items deserved all the applause they received.

Mr. Charles Gabb could not have been in better voice, and the songs chosen by him are such that suit his voice to perfection. His reception was splendid, and his encore rendering of "I hear you calling me" most excellent.

Perhaps, as on one occasion previously, Sanderson's song "Until," was taken too slowly, but this was the only criticism that could be expressed.

Amongst the delightful items given last night were two songs by Miss Gallacher, and although both were beautifully sung, perhaps the closing one, "Believe me if all those endearing young charms," was the more pleasing. Miss Gallacher has a charming voice, which has the art or gift of a greater fascination whenever heard anew. It was a disappointment to her audience that no encore was forthcoming. She was accompanied by Mrs. Jessie Pamplin, and the combination was most pleasing.

There were two items during the evening, which were entirely new and original. The first of these was a dance by Miss Dorothy Stuart Small to the music and words of "The Rosary," sung by Mrs. Thomson. The conception of the interpretation of this exquisite song was good, and Miss Small is to be congratulated upon the originality of the composition of this, and her interpretation into motion of the song. The other original item was the closing one, a humorous sketch, very well done by Mrs. J. Rugeroni and Mr. Ellis Griffin. Mrs. Rugeroni could not have rendered better her attempt at the composition of a drama. Her impatience with her husband (Mr. Griffin) at his "absurd" questions, her seriousness over the composition and method of expression could not have been bettered. Mr. Ellis Griffin, too, was at his best, and his manner of demanding explanations on awkward and most inexplicable situations in the composition of the drama, was most humorous.

SEAMEN'S MISSION

TEA OF CONGRATULATION TO BAZAAR HELPERS.

On October 14, at the Seamen's Mission, the ladies by whose assistance the recent Bazaar at Prince George's Hall was made so conspicuous a success were entertained to tea.

The hall had been made gay with flags, and a few palms achieved marvels in decoration.

In addressing the assembly, the Rev. H. Westby Brady, Chaplain of the Mission, expressed the most cordial thanks to the lady helpers for their splendid effort. The result is nearly $13,000, or, to be meticulously accurate, $12,722.50 after deducting $823 for total expenses. The result is most gratifying, and Mr. Brady confessed that a great weight had been removed from his mind. He attributed the result entirely to the ladies, modestly disclaiming any share thereon.

Miss Mitchell subsequently spoke, thanking Mr. Brady on behalf of the Women's Association and the Girls' Society. There were a few musical items by Miss Dorothy Small and others. Besides the Chaplain, there were present the Rev. Mr. Sanderson, from Bahia Blanca, the Rev. Mr. Mills, the Rev. Mr. Somerville and the Rev. Mr. Rickett, from La Plata.

ST. ANDREW'S SCOTCH SCHOOL

CONCERT IN AID OF RED CROSS AND HOSPITAL FUNDS.

Nobody amongst the large audience at the Scotch Church on Oct. 16 at a concert given by the former pupils club of St. Andrew's, had any idea that things went amiss. A regular chapter of accidents occurred, and yet so good was the general management that no hitch of any kind was noticed. Although it was a disappointment that Mr. De Riose was taken seriously ill, that Mr. Davies was unable to play his solos on the cello, and a few other such matters, the audience had put before them a concert of general excellence, and few noticed how upset things were due to this unfortunate contretemps.

The concert last night was given in aid of the Red Cross Funds and in aid of the British Hospital. It was not only the purposes for which the concert was given, but its own general excellence which attracted attention. The hall was full, and it would be difficult to choose one item as a speciality before its fellows.

If this would be done, the dancing of Miss Small should demand first place. "Les Millions d'Arlequin," a dance, was exceptionally well done and artistically rendered. It is not every member of an audience that can appreciate the poetry of motion, but it may be accepted that this dance was rendered to perfection and is unquestionably one of the best of good things ever done by Miss Small. Her interpretation was good, her idea of the necessary movement for such a dance was just. Daintiness, coquettishness, were rendered to the very movement of a finger tip, and her audience burst into an immense and deserved applause at the conclusion of a most beautifully rendered piece of poetic motion. Miss Small gave her dance with breadth and comprehension, an unusual thing away from professional circles. It was excellent, and the encore accorded—all too brief—was very choice, but nothing to compare with Drigo's work.

Miss Muriel Marr was singing and in perfect voice. It would be invidious to praise any special item, because all were good, and last evening Miss Marr excelled herself both in her solos and in her duets with Mr. Neill.

Mr. Victor Reid sang some ragtime ditties which were fully appreciated and encored. Mr. Llewellyn Hawes selected Grieg and Rachmaninoff for his piano solos. Mr. F. Uteda's violin playing has greatly improved, and he will no doubt become a shining light in time to come. Mr. Colwen was good and most entertaining with his light songs, and received his mead of applause and encores.

In general, the concert was a most enjoyable one, well organised, successful, and some of the items were exceptional. Miss Briggs was a singer greatly appreciated, her natural and unaffected rendering of two charming songs brought forth a volume of applause.

Miss Agnes Ireland, Miss Miller and Mrs. White were the ladies who were responsible for the accompaniments.

DEPARTURE OF PRESIDENT

DR. VILLANUEVA REIGNS IN THE CAPITAL.

Dr. de la Plaza left Retiro Station on Sunday night at 10 for Cordoba where he will remain at his country seat until about November 4. A distinguished company were present to speed the President on his holiday journey including the Vice-President Dr. Benito Villanueva, the Cabinet Ministers, the Governors of the Provinces of San Juan and Mendoza, the Argentine Minister to Chile, the Municipal Intendente and several other functionaries. H.E. the President is accompanied by his Private Secretary.

Dr. Villanueva was at his Presidential task yesterday by - p.m. as the position of interim Chief of State is no novelty to him.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

The scene of activity which now prevails in hundreds of factories in the United Kingdom, where the munitions of war are being turned out in limitless quantities, is well suggested in the first of our pictures this week. Amid the whirr and clang of machinery and steel, many men in khaki uniforms labour to produce the means to end the war. These are British soldiers who have been brought back from the trenches, because their services as skilled machinics are of more value to the Nation than their capacity as trench fighters. The second and third pictures require little explanation. They show respectively enemy forces crossing a river, at which they are expert, and enemy forces plundering a factory at which they are also expert. One of the most extraordinary pictures of the war is that which depicts French soldiers equipped against gas attacks. The spectacle of men masked in this way would frighten most people. There is a breezy appearance in the picture of a British column marching from its billets to the trenches at the break of day. On his recent visit to Italy General Joffre watched some of the operations of the Italian army against the Austrian positions, and was presented to the King. The last picture again reminds us that the war is being waged in other parts of the world than Flanders and the Dardanelles. In the Cameroons in Africa the British forces have had considerable success against the Germans.

NEW PORT WORKS

THIRD ANNUAL CONCERT.

Nothing could have given greater pleasure to a very complete audience than the concert given on Oct. 16 by the several employees of the New Port Works. From start to finish the whole proceedings went with a swing, which showed how good were the arrangements and the items given.

As most of these were humorous, from start to finish the audience were in an uproar of amused delight. It would be impossible to notify or select for special mention any one item amongst those given. They were all good and entertaining.

The great hit of the evening was the final sketch rendered by Messrs. Myerscough, Burgess, Cope and Creeber. They out-Tated Harry Tate in a motor sketch, which was screamingly funny and very well acted. The whole concert was splendid, but special mention should be made of Mr. Myerscough in his motor business. What he does not know concerning a motor and its works, ask his "son," or if you don't believe, ask from where the black eye came.

It was a touch which secured screams of laughter and applause from the audience.

The programme was as follows:—

1. Piano selection, W. Potts.
2. D. Brazier, "We're all waiting for a girl."
3. J. Creeber, "Winds that blow from the South."
4. F. Cope, "It's been a nice day."
5. J. Brennan, "Irish Eyes are Smiling."
6. H. Williamson, "Silk Hat Tony."
7. J. Kelly, Hornpipe Dance.
8. A. Myerscough, "Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers."
9. W. King, "Flight of Ages."
10. W. Burgess, "Bang went the chance of a lifetime."

Part II.

1. W. Potts, piano selection.
2. F. Cope, "For months and months."
3. W. King, "Tell her I love her so."
4. A. Myerscough, "Geography."
5. J. Creeber, "Eileen Alannah."
6. W. Burgess, "She's proud and she's beautiful."
7. J. Brennan, "Turna De Survienta."

A LONDON LETTER

TO THE BRITISH PATRIOTIC COMMITTEE IN URUGUAY

(Exclusively Communicated.)

London, September 13, 1915.

WAR TAXATION.

After a vacation of about six weeks, Parliament has just resumed its sittings. It has some important domestic work to do, including the passing of a bill to enable it to prolong its own life for the duration of the war. Probably, however, its chief business will be concerned with finance and taxation. There is no intention in England of imitating the German idea of putting off all war taxation till the close of hostilities in the hope that the enemy may then be made to pay. For one thing, such pretences are not necessary in this country. Taxation has not yet exhausted its resources, as it seems to have done in Germany, and consequently the Chancellor of the Exchequer is absolved from the necessity of inventing pretexts for not resorting to it. Certainly there will be no gambling on the result of the war, but rather a determination on the part of all classes to meet as much of the cost as possible out of current revenue. Not only is heavy taxation expected, but, remarkable to relate, it is actually desired, and has indeed been urged on the Government by deputations of business men. It is a characteristic trait of the Englishman, and perhaps an ominous sign for his adversaries, that he should be so resolved on keeping his campaign on a manageable and clearly defined financial basis.

Despite occasional attempts to exploit the demands of the war for sectional purposes—a weakness natural to all political sections—it is not expected that the next taxes, whatever they may be, will involve any striking departure from England's existing fiscal principles. Large incomes and war profits promise the easiest and most fruitful yield, and it is pretty certain that those sources will be drawn upon freely. Imports from abroad are threatened, though more with the idea of limiting the demand for certain articles of luxury than of adding to the national revenue. Presumably the same articles, if produced in Great Britain, would be subject to the same burden, since the object of any such taxation would be industrial and social rather than fiscal or political. From this point of view, the Budget may prove to be of considerable international importance.

THE CONSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

Conscription has been vigorously debated on the platform during the recess, and will, no doubt, occupy some time and attention in the resumed Parliamentary debates. Meanwhile, it is of interest to note that the Trade Union Congress, representing the great body of organised labour throughout Great Britain, has pronounced against any departure from the voluntary system under existing conditions. What this means is that the leaders of working men, in the absence of a demand for compulsion from Lord Kitchener or the Government, refuse to sanction any unauthorised agitation for a change of system. Doubtless an intimation by the Government that conscription had become necessary would at once command support, but it is evident that the working classes have no intention of anticipating or hastening such a contingency. On the other hand, their support of the Government's war policy is as determined as that of any class in the country. A year ago, there was some talk among their leaders of an international strike against war. Then came the German invasion of Belgium with its attendant horrors, and instantaneously we witnessed a complete revulsion of feeling on the part of our internationalists. Some of the very men who would have stood up at last year's Congress, if there had been one, as strong peace advocates, were on the platform this year in soldier's uniform. "People who talk about peace to-day," said one of them, "are traitors to their country."

WORKERS AND THE WAR.

Yet with all this working class fervour in support of the war, compulsory service, as has been said, finds no favour in those quarters. Why is this? One reason has been noted, namely, that the Government have made no sign. Another reason is the prevailing belief that under the voluntary system as many men can be enlisted as may be required, even though millions more should be necessary. Most cogent reason of all is the need of concentrating the country's energies on the production of war munitions and equipments. Unquestionably this is the need of the moment. How many million men are already in arms or under training is supposed to be an official secret, but it is no secret that the number is of vast magnitude, or that the workshops have still much to do before they can claim to have made complete provision now and in the future, for its needs in the field. Thus, when Mr. Lloyd George visited the Trade Union Congress he made a speech with not a word about recruiting, whether compulsory or voluntary, a speech in which his eloquence was devoted to the single aim of spurring on the workers to an increased output from the arsenals. On the whole, those are encouraging signs, for they suggest, first, that the recruiting problem is no longer acute in a practical sense, and, secondly, that the munitions problem is being tackled with an energy which must make itself felt throughout all the Allied armies.

MURDER BY ZEPPELINS.

If anything were needed to give a stimulus to recruiting, the recent air raids on England would supply the want. For every woman and child slaughtered in those blindfold and haphazard expeditions it is computed that scores of able-bodied men are added to the British forces in training. In a military sense, therefore, the balance is entirely with the Allies. No military damage seems ever to be inflicted, and, on the other hand, the British army gains recruits and the temper of the British people is hardened against Germany. We see the same principle of almost automatic retribution at work in the sphere of Germany's submarine warfare. If there had been no war at sea against merchantmen and other non-combatants, it is not at all likely that the defensive and retaliatory measures devised by the British Admiralty would so soon have reached such an extraordinary pitch of effectiveness. War vessel would have fought war vessel, and inventiveness in new methods of destruction would probably have been slow and tentative, with the result that Germany's fleet of submarines, old as well as new, might still have been largely intact for legitimate purposes. To her attacks on unarmed ships and their crews and passengers she owes the discomfiture to her undersea craft, which is steadily unfitting her for any hope of successful attack on armed vessels. Even in war, an observance of the rules of the game is often the best policy.

THE DUMBA INCIDENT.

Feeling between America and the Central Powers is not likely to be improved by the Dumba incident. In this country, the promptitude of President Wilson's action caused general surprise. A long and tedious course of diplomatic correspondence had been anticipated, and doubtless this was an expectation also complacently held in Germany and Austria, following the precedent of the submarine negotiations. But, as Americans here point out, there is a difference between the two cases. Although Germany has equivocated and blustered in her replies to President Wilson's successive

YOUR COUNTRY'S CALL

BY AN AUSTRALIAN MOTHER.

(On sending her boy of nineteen into training for the War.)

That prize you wrung from life, with pain and tears,
Mother, your country claims. It is not yours.
Be silent. Yes, I know you bartered health,
All maiden's vanity, all woman's wealth.
Wove in one strand each asset you have won,
Laid at the feet of God, and bought—your son,
Deeming yourself made rich. To build him fair
You toiled and anguished, selfless, in his care,
Joyed in your sacrifice, that he might grow.
That thing of pride, your son. Now he must go.
With all those hopes, that help to make his worth,
Crowned with your highest self, he must go forth.
Where? Why? Don't think. Just smother up the pair.
Give him up quickly for his country's gain.
Give, those strong young limbs, those merry smiles,
That voice that thrills you, all those tender wiles,
With which he wins you, and delights you so.
Tradition calls him, and his country's woe.
Give him up proudly. You have done your share.
There may be recompense—somewhere.

Notes, she has always professed a certain willingness to make reparation if proved to be in the wrong, whereas Austria, or rather the Austrian Ambassador, seems to have scorned the usual forms of diplomatic propriety and insisted quite openly on a right to exercise direct control over Austrian-born American citizens. Probably the action of the President was quickened by the fact that one of Dr. Dumba's agents was himself an American citizen travelling through England with guarantees of personal neutrality from his Government. In other words, not only was America to be made subject to foreign influences in her industrial affairs, but, if possible, her good relations with England were to be brought into jeopardy by the same trick. With this calculation in mind, England is doubly appreciative of President Wilson's swift and crushing repudiation of the offender.

THE DARDANELLES CAMPAIGN.

Good reports of the Dardanelles campaign continue to filter through, and not all of them from friendly sources. Thus we have the testimony of a German officer engaged with the Turks to the extreme severity of the fighting, to the astonishing success of the British landing at Suvla (due, this witness bitterly complains, to the carelessness of his Turkish friends), and to the enormous casualties on the Turkish side. Two things are evident from this communication—one, that the relations between the Turks and their German officers are not improving, and the other that some of the heaviest fighting of the war has fallen to the Allied troops in Gallipoli. One gathers, too, that the Turk, with all his martial qualities, has failed to convince the Germans that his heart is in this particular struggle, which obviously means that, sooner or later, the Turkish obstacle will be swept aside. It is instructive to note that these impressions are confirmed by Lord Robert Cecil, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who has just been stating in public that the Allied armies in the Dardanelles are within a very little way of success.

IN THE TRENCHES

"LIVING LIKE RABBITS UNDERGROUND."

The following extract from a letter written by R. A. Talbot, now fighting in the trenches, will be of interest to Mr. Talbot's many friends in the Argentine. The letter is dated August 26, 1915.

"We have been in France now some time, and have been in the trenches for the past fortnight having been under fire all the time. We have had—killed and—slightly wounded." (Here the censor had intervened). "So our casualties have been practically nil, though I must admit we have been in a very quiet portion of the line. The trenches are wonderful places, and one is almost as safe there as in London, unless one has exceptionally bad luck, then one might get killed anywhere. The enemy's trenches are situated at a distance of from 40 to 400 yards from our own trenches, segun the portion of lines one is in, and at times it is difficult to realise that the much hated "Boches" are so near. The work in the trenches is tiring and nerve racking, and it is difficult to get much sleep there, although they give us a rest from trench life as often as possible."

"Our fellows treat the whole affair as an amusing picnic, and as for myself, I have laughed more during the past fortnight than I have ever done during the same period before." (Ed. note. R. A. T.'s laugh is a thing once heard one never forgets). "We live like rabbits, underneath the ground, and I find my height rather a nuisance in the trenches. The thing to dodge in the trenches is the gun fire, and it is amusing to watch how quickly we take cover when the shrapnel comes over, shrapnel is more or less harmless, as it gives one time to take cover, whereas the whizzbangs, which are small shrapnel, give you no time whatever being simply a whizz and a bang simultaneously."

The funniest little demon is the sausage, which is thrown from a trench mortar, and ascends in the air twisting and turning like a German sausage, and when it reaches its extreme height it drops absolutely perpendicularly, giving one about 20 seconds to clear. It requires careful judgment as to where it may fall, and you can imagine the look of consternation on the face of the man when he discovers that through bad judgment, he was running into a sausage instead of away from it, and what a marvellous sprint he did when he found out his mistake, as these shells consist of extremely high explosive.

Then we get the high explosive shells called "coal-boxes" which catches you bending with a lump of shell about as big as a good coal lump, then there are the genial "Jack Johnsons," which are quite beyond my powers of description. These latter two classes of shells are very liable to catch you on the hob, as you get no warning of their pleasant company. We live better in the trenches than out of them, though it must be perfect hell in the trenches, in wet weather. Besides I have noticed that there are plenty of the companionable bichos attendant on all warfare. I trust I am not boring you with this very meagre description of the very pleasant attentions the "Boches" give us. This part of France resembles the Boca in the varied and remarkable smells we encounter, as a matter of fact the smells abound wherever one goes. We have had delightful weather here latterly, and we are really and truly thoroughly enjoying ourselves at the present moment. We speak French with a peculiarly English pronunciation and accent, but quite a lot of the natives here have picked up a little English. So we get along fine, although some of the English as used by the native girls was never taught at Oxford or Cambridge. I have just received a letter from X—who has been now 10 weeks in the Dardanelles. I fancy he has had enough of trench warfare, and would not be sorry to get back again to England."

Sports and Pastimes

THE TURF

PALERMO

GRAN PREMIO NACIONAL.

It was a matter of considerable disappointment and discomfort to the huge crowd that attended the races at Palermo on Sunday that the weather completely broke down. It was the day of days on which the Argentine St. Leger was down for decision, and it was cruel fate that such an immensely important event could not have been run in better weather.

All the entrants turned out for the great event, in which Ocurrancia was made favourite. Owing to the rain it was decided to run the race a quarter of an hour before the scheduled time, and when the betting boxes closed down many thousands of people, who were unaware of the arrangement, thought the race was going to be postponed. The betting board when the last figures went up, was the object of much attention, and considering the importance of the event, much surprise was expressed at the smallness of the total figures. Ocurrancia was made a hot favourite, as was only natural, but Ocurrancia failed, and failed by the narrowest of margins. What a wonderful race it was! Perhaps the most gruelling event ever seen at Palermo. Packoy made the pace a cracker, with Palanta second and the favourite third. So tremendous was the pace that every effort of Palanta at the commencement to catch Packoy was useless. He travelled the first mile in 1.36! and it was this that knocked the stuffing out of every animal in the race except Ocurrancia. The track had not been damaged by the rain, but was certainly on the heavy side, which only makes Packoy's performance the more wonderful. There can be no question that both Arcuri and Torterolo rode one of the most wonderful races of their careers, and the finish was the most sensational and most inspiring sight. Each animal was ridden clean out, and the manner in which the field was strung out at the finish only showed how they had been knocked out of time by Packoy's pace-making. Coming down the straight the roar was deafening. Slowly, very slowly, Ocurrancia crept up, would she do it? Half a length—a neck, and they flew past the paddock stands, a head, a short head, and the race was over. Packoy had won!

It may be added, that although a loser, Ocurrancia proved herself a wonderful runner, but not as wonderful as Packoy on the day. After the race Packoy cracked up, and is now in the hands of the "vet," and being carefully watched. It is not yet known whether his condition is serious or not.

The other horses in the race were almost forgotten. Melik secured third place, and Diamant close up fourth.

The programme for the other events could not have been a better one, and until the rain ruined it for the last two races and wholesale scratchings occurred, was perhaps one of the finest of the season.

Ermita ran away with the first event, and made all the running. Her win put the public in a good temper but their hopes were sadly dashed when Marinera came out in the next race and made all the running, and slammed the favourite Meliza. Camboata, a debutante, ran a fair race into third position. This result only shows what a disgraceful exhibition Marinera put up last time out. Of course the excuse given was "change of jockeys." In the third event Estro had a comfortable win over Fandango and Fneas. Pico de Oro the favourite, ran fourth.

It was difficult to understand why this latter should have been made a favourite, although second last time out he ran a "fading" race all the time, so that when the distance was increased, one would have considered that he hardly deserved public favouritism. Estro won from point to point.

Solis, a red hot favourite, cantered home in the event before the classic, and replenished some empty purses. Tresor surprised by running second and beating Campesino.

The running of Diablo was only fair, but another outing or so should see him winning again.

After the classic, the deluge. The losing of Ocurrancia, the downpour, the condition of things in general took the heart out of the public, who began to look unhappy and bedraggled. Not so, however, the Duc de Rovigo, who won his race in a hack canter, and was the cause of making young Carabaja a winner for the thirtieth time.

It was a wonderful thing that this event did not end disastrously. It was touch and go for Bastias on Repique, and Mingo on Perjura. Repique fell, and at a most dangerous stage in the race, and nearly brought down Perjura. The accident happened thus, Murana on Mansilla was leading, with Repique second and Perjura third. Somehow Repique touched Mansilla's hind leg and over he went in front of Perjura, who was thus thrown clean out of the race. Bastias was only shaken. Murana was suspended, and yet it is hard to say whether the fault was his. Pedro Costa was another jockey that was suspended until November 15, for holding a heated argument with Cardoso at the balances whilst weighing in.

Losing on Ocurrancia, nearly losing his life on Perjura, losing a shoe on Grey Eyes in the next race, fairly put the tin hat on Torterolo's run of bad luck.

It was an easy win for Last Reason in the seventh event, and this gave Arcuri his third win. Grey Eyes struggled gamely, and easily ran Stagno down. By this time the track was in a shocking condition, and all in favour of the mud-larking Maraschino in the last race, who ultimately won with extreme ease from Bolin and Prologo.

It was the weather and nothing but the weather that ruined the prospect of a great day of good racing and exciting sport.

It will be a long time before the classic event is forgotten, and a long time also before such a gruelling and hard run race will be seen at Palermo, but all enthusiasm was knocked out of the racing in general by the weather's sorry behaviour.

SHATTERING AN IDOL

Packoy's Great Victory

THE GRAND NATIONAL OF 1915

The Grand National of 1915 will not be forgotten for many years to come. Only by a narrow margin did it escape sharing the fate of the Argentine Derby, which was twice postponed because of bad weather; and only by inches was a definite decision reached after a battle between the two greatest three-year-olds in the country.

Contrary to general experience during the current season, the weather on Sunday was deplorable. A dull morning gave place to a wet and depressing afternoon, and even though the attendance was heavy, the spectacle at the Hippodrome was uninspiring.

Whereas on former occasions the dust of the Palermo road has been stirred by countless motors and carriages, on Sunday the picture was gloomy and almost dispiriting. The volume of traffic was large, but the absence of sunshine destroyed that feeling of holiday-making which is no unimportant factor in the enjoyment of a classic race-day. Everything was more mechanical and more commonplace than one has a right to expect on the day of the year.

PADDOCK IMPRESSIONS.

The scene in the paddock failed to enthuse, and the spectacle usually witnessed in the members' enclosure was absent. It is true that a greater number of ladies attended than on the majority of days, but the parade of wonderful gowns shimmering in the light of the sun was a thing remembered of other days. It was not given to us on Sunday, consequently we were at Palermo to witness the racing. There were no side attractions.

In the preliminary events the public experienced the usual rebuffs and very few successes. Solis and Ermita were the only strongly supported candidates to score winning brackets, and the dividends returned were inadequate to compensate for losses sustained in other contests.

The first incident of importance was the crash of heavy brass and the thud of drums which heralded the arrival of the President of the Republic. The Presidential entourage, which under normal conditions might have been interesting, suffered from the counter-attraction of a heavy shower of rain; consequently the volume of public applause was small and challenged unfavourable comparison with the reception accorded to Britain's ruler at

Epsom on Derby Day. It was at this point, however, that enthusiasm became generated. The opening of the "tote" on the big race of the day led the public to believe that at last something was about to happen, and the prospects of the contestants were eagerly discussed. Would Ocurrancia win? Was there anything capable of defeating the phenomenal filly. If so, what?

PUBLIC FAITH IN OCURRENCIA.

The appearance of the favourite, followed by Picacero, and the grey, Palanta, was greeted with a tornado of applause. If less of a picture than Melik, who followed a little later, she was nevertheless an impressive-looking filly; and a memory for her past performances more than justified the popular belief that she was the certainty of the afternoon.

Meanwhile heavy betting was in progress, and the posting of the second totals revealed the fact that nearly 6,000 tickets had been invested on the probability of Ocurrancia continuing her sequence of classic victories.

Then more rain fell, and it was hurriedly decided to start the race a quarter of an hour before the advertised time. This decision was not known to many of the public, and the consequence was that large groups tried in vain to speculate on the race after the "tote" had ceased operations.

When the starters went down to the post, a tense silence seized the majority of the crowd. All interest was centred in the competitors. Packoy was on the rails, with the favourite and her stable companion, Palanta, in the centre. Capullo, Decidida, and Passi-mal showed some disinclination to face the barrier, and were eventually only persuaded to do so by the application of the whip.

THE START.

After a brief delay the field were despatched to a perfect start. Packoy at once went to the front, followed by Palanta, Ocurrancia, Passi-Mal, Placero, Capullo, Decidida, Melik, and with Diamant—the outsider of the party—last.

The race was a gruelling one from the outset. The leader travelled with the perfect ease of a machine, and was not called upon for an effort until a thousand metres had been traversed. Then Englander asked Palanta to close up with Packoy. The filly responded gamely, but made no impression on Arcuri's mount. Acosta, on Passi-Mal, essayed a similar move, but in a few seconds dropped away beaten. Meanwhile Diamant and Melik were improving their positions, and Capullo was running well. The second favourite, Picacero, had not been called upon for an effort.

OCURRENCIA'S EFFORT.

Until the fourteen hundred metre post had been passed, very few people believed in the ability of Packoy to maintain his position at the head of the field. On nearing the home bend, however, he slightly increased his lead over his adversaries. It was at this juncture that Palanta died out of the fighting line. Englander had performed his mission and left the way open for the favourite, who moved into second place. "Ocurrancia! OCURRENCIA SOLO!!" The shout, at first spasmodic, then almost general, and finally as from one throat, rent the air. Torterolo had awaited the opportune moment and was now in pursuit of the leader. The two animals came into the straight ahead of the field, and at the popular stands the filly had closed with Packoy.

A SENSATIONAL FINISH.

Then ensued a battle of giants. Arcuri was straining every nerve to maintain his position. Torterolo sat grimly and asked his mount for her utmost. She was barely half a length behind, and appeared to be improving her position. The combatants passed the paddock stands almost locked together, and the favourite was now

GOLF

SAN ISIDRO GOLF CLUB.

Play over 36 holes was indulged in at the San Isidro Club links on Sunday for the Central Argentine Railway Cup. Mr. G. F. Rae succeeded in an easy win. Only 17 players out of the numerous competitors returned cards, which showed Mr. Rae a winner by 7 strokes over Mr. C. H. Jukes. Mr. H. K. BASEBALL

BUENOS AIRES v. FRIGORIFICO.
ARGENTINO.

A considerable crowd of spectators which gradually thinned into insignificance presented itself at Talleres on Sunday afternoon to witness the game between the Buenos Aires and the Frigorifico Argentino Central teams.

The umpire, Tom Smith, had no sooner given the signal to commence, when, as Fate would have it, there fell a volume of rain that took all the eagerness out of them, and caused the match to be suspended till next Sunday. The teams were composed as follows:—

Buenos Aires.—Briggs R. F., Hendrie C. F., Houston 2nd B., Noonan S. S., Smith C., Dawson 1st B., Yuthill L. F., Answorth 3rd B., Tuero P.

Argentinos.—Davidson R. F., Irish C. F., McEnelley 2nd B., Hitlin S. S., Herrod C., Rehmer 1st B., Kemp L. F., Mehara 3rd B., Hayes P.

within a neck of the leader. Tortorolo still rode desperately, though quietly, while Arcuri on Packoy spurred and whipped his mount in an anxiety to compel the utmost that was in him. Meanwhile the human mass on the stands became almost demented. "Ocurrancia! Ocurrancia!!"

The roar continued, and then commenced to die away. Twenty yards from home the favourite was asked for her final effort. For a moment she faltered, and then went on again. But it was too late. By the narrowest of margins Packoy passed the judge ahead of the filly. "2-7-5-1." The numbers were posted, and the great crowd became silent. Another public idol had been shattered. Ocurrancia had failed by a head. Two and a half lengths away Melik was placed third, just in front of the commoner, Diamant. But no one had seen them; all eyes had been centred on the colossal struggle which had just ended in so dramatic a manner. For the second year in succession, Tortorolo had failed after a desperate finish to win the great prize of the season. Arcuri had set his seal on his fame by winning a grand race in a masterly manner. The band was crashing out the wildest and least appropriate of music; rain was commencing to fall heavily. Interest in a great day had ended.

LAWN TENNIS

FINALS OF THE TOURNAMENT AT BELGRANO.

Nearly all sport on Sunday was seriously spoiled by the weather, and the finals of the Open Tournament at the Belgrano Athletic Club were sadly interfered with by the rain.

Miss Inez Anderson was successful in the Ladies' Singles, while Mr. L. H. Knight won the gentlemen's singles.

The tennis was of a high quality, and although both Miss Anderson and Mr. Knight won their matches, they were by no means run away affairs.

Miss M. C. Goni was successful in both the "mixed" with Diego Cerboni as her partner, and in the Ladies' Doubles with Miss Mackenzie.

The prizes were excellent and well chosen, most of them being silver cups. Mrs. Seward presented these, and at the close of the day's play, Mr. W. E. Seward made a short speech, in which he drew attention to the play and congratulated those who had been successful.

The details of play were as follows:

Gent's Singles, Class "B."

E. W. Thomson beat John McKechnie, 6-4, 6-1.

Gent's Doubles Handicap.

BUENOS AIRES L.T.C.

H. H. Woodgate beat L. Jenkins, 6-2, 6-3.

B.A.L.T.C. v. LA PLATA.
ARGENTINE LEAGUE.

The match was played at Palermo on Sunday, and owing to the fact that La Plata turned up short, they of necessity lost 3 matches by default.

The weather was most unfavourable, and the supremacy of the home players so marked that play was not particularly well enjoyed. Buenos Aires won all the matches played, and together with those forfeited ran out winners by 7 matches to nil. Details of play are given below:—

Woodgate and Goni beat O. Hirsche and E. Lawrence, 6-1, 6-2; beat J. Hirsche and D. Maxwell, 6-2, 6-1.

Russell and Turner beat J. Hirsche and D. Maxwell, 6-1, 6-2.

G. Keen and Medici beat O. Hirsche and Lawrence, 6-1, 6-4.

VILLA URQUIZA SPRING
TOURNAMENT.

In this annual tournament being held at Villa Urquiza, only three matches were played on Sunday, and all calculations were completely upset by the weather. The matches played were:—

FINALS OF THE SPRING
TOURNAMENT.

In spite of the shocking weather the Spring Tournament of the Olivos Lawn Tennis Club was concluded on Sunday afternoon. The finals of the mixed doubles had to be postponed. At the close of play Mrs. C. E. Baines presented the prizes.

Miss Perkins won the Ladies' Singles, and was presented with a racquet and a set of balls. The same prize was given to Mr. Bonorino as the winner of the Gentlemen's Singles.

Mrs. Pratt and Miss Perkins won two pretty silver vases for their doubles success. Mrs. Pratt also secured second prize of a silver bowl in the Ladies' Singles.

Mr. and Mrs. Parsons presented a manicure set for the winner of the ladies in the Mixed Doubles, which will be played next Sunday. Mrs. C. E. Baines and Miss A. M. Haines were responsible for the tea.

GASCON LAWN TENNIS CLUB.

The programme arranged for last week-end was not entirely carried out owing to Sunday afternoon's rain. Fair progress was made in the Men's Singles, in which event G. C. Crispin just managed to beat J. H. Kelly after a very determined struggle.

Details of play were as follows:—

Men's Doubles.

Robinson and Pentreath —4/5 beat Morris and Mitchell, —1/5, 6-4, 6-2.

Men's Singles.

E. W. Mills —1/5 v. J. L. Henderson —30, stopped at 1 set each.

Ladies' Doubles.

Misses Dawson scr. beat Misses Nelson and Yorston —15, 6-3, 6-4.

PORTENO (4) v. TIGRE (0).

Played on the ground of the former on Sunday. Tigre were outclassed from start to finish. In the first half Garati scored for Porteno, but in the second half, Garate, Amengual and Escarre scored. The goalie, Calzetta, had bad luck in falling on each occasion, owing to the slippery nature of the ground. The teams were as follows:—

Tigre.—E. Calzetta, E. Hamerer, A. Dallarnelina, Juan Cerrin, M. Lestrada, A. Heisinger, E. Rulio, F. Cazaneo, A. Martin, N. Cassinerio, J. Cassinerio.

Porteno.—J. J. Rithner, E. Volenghi, C. Izaguirri, P. Rithner, M. Garati, B. Amengual, O. N. Beltramini, R. Gonzalez Escarre, Vicente F. Abullin, E. Gahyhanro, J. F. Ayalen.

DEFENSORES DE BELGRANO (1) v.
QUILMES (1).

After a hard fought game, played on Sunday, on the ground of the first named, the result was a draw, each team succeeding in scoring one. The following turned out:—

Quilmes.—Pearson, Cenitti, Brown, Reid, Pollini, Durante, Rodriguez, Sinclair, Raggi, Crundall and Grassick.

Defensores de Belgrano.—Rodriguez, Sacco, Molinari, Piruselli, Rota, Giuseppi, Giupalli, Bissio, Rubio, Fourcade, Giolidori.

Mr. Haslar was the referee.

From start to finish the game was most strenuously contested.

In the first half Piruselli scored for the homesters, and up until a few moments before the close, this looked as though it would be the only goal scored. Raggi, however, succeeded in equalising just before the whistle blew. The ground was on the soft side, and the ball slippery and heavy, which was not conducive to the best play.

BOCA JUNIORS (3) v FLORESTA (0)

On Sunday, on the Floresta ground, the visitors succeeded in gaining a comparatively easy victory of 3 goals to nil. Colla was the hero of the game, and scored twice with beautiful shots. The remaining goal was from a free kick taken by Colomena for "hands" in the penalty area.

The game was a scrambling one, and the weather most unsatisfactory.

TE AGUILA ES EL MEJOR

RIDDLE OF THE ORIENT

THE TURCO-GERMAN PLAN

EXPLAINED BY EMIR EMIN ARSLAN

(HERALD Special Interview)

"If Germany can gain access to Constantinople and provide the Turks with ample ammunition, the efforts of the Allies to force the Dardanelles will be practically futile," said Emir Emin Arslan, former Consul General of Turkey and presently Director of the new literary review La Nota, when interviewed by a HERALD representative yesterday.

Emir Emin Arslan, who in his official post has made a thorough study of the question, recently sacrificed his diplomatic connection with his country because he declined to submit to the alien control of Turkey's Teuton overlords.

Bought by German Gold.

"German gold, more than anything else, is at the bottom of all the mischief that was perpetrated in the Balkans and the Orient," he said. "The sentiments of the people in Turkey, which were for neutrality, were gradually corrupted by 'muckraking' journalism, directed, openly or secretly, by German propaganda and capital.

"Those who know the German policy," he continued, "their diplomatic subterfuges and intrigues, will cease to wonder at their political triumphs.

"In the Orient, the public feeling was keenly against participation altogether in this war, especially contradictory to forming a union with Germany; but, unfortunately, the populace is only a 'tool' in the hands of the military dictators, and neither the Young Turks nor the old régime that flourished under Abdul Hamid are strong enough to counteract the formidableness of the army, who control the political situation in Turkey. They are, consequently, forced jointly to become subservient to the autocratic dominance of the 'iron law'.

"This power, which the militaristic potentates of Turkey usurped, became still greater when Germany managed to buy all the leading Turkish newspapers, impregnating their theories and polluting the minds of the commons by ignoble exaggerations and untruths.

"The social and moral conditions of Turkey are in a chaotic stage, and, should they conquer or fail, seditious strife will surely ensue.

"If Turkey evolves victoriously, it is safe to predict that Egypt would be added to its domains, besides various other territorial concessions in the Balkans; but if Turkey fails, then European Turkey may consider itself effaced from the map of Europe, for Turkey would have sealed with its own hand its death-warrant."

When asked for his opinion about the intervention of Bulgaria and the probable effects it would have in determining the victory on one side or the other, the Emir brushed his forehead, and, in a voice that trembled with emotion, said:—

Bulgaria's Treachery.

"Bulgaria, after having long obscured her dark projects, has finally decided to assume the rôle of Brutus in fouling one that most was kind to him. She has become traitorous to Russia, to whom for a long time she was indebted for her existence and independence, ignoring the fact that when under strained circumstances she was always sustained by her mightier neighbour.

"Then the resignation of Venizelos, Chief of the Greek Cabinet, and the King's resolution to maintain neutrality, are unquestionably a new disappointment for the Allies.

The Failure of Greece.

"If the Allies have failed in gaining their 'coup d'Etat' in Eastern Europe, they have been yet more unsuccessful in forcing the Dardanelles, mainly because Venizelos was unable to comply with his promise of sending 50,000 soldiers, and because the King objected to following the policy of his Prime Minister.

"It was understood that, were Bulgaria to declare war against Serbia, Greece would honour her treaty and would protect Serbia. This she has failed to do, for when the King found that he had to contend with a powerful Germanic 'diplomatic move,' he refused to follow the bold resolution of the Prime Minister, and the latter was consequently obliged to resign.

"Thus German gold and subterranean tactics triumphed again. Failing to succeed by the same stratagem in Italy, although much labour was expended for that purpose, she gained her ends in Turkey and Bulgaria.

The Turco-Teuton Plan.

"If Germany can send 500,000 soldiers against Serbia, as she boasts of being able to do, accompanied by 500,000 Bulgarians and 200,000 Turks that are posted at Adrianople, then Constantinople should be reached, and with the Turkish Capital in possession of the half a million Teutons, munitions supplies could be assured to such an extent as to enable the Turco-German armies to fortify their position to an extent as to make it almost impregnable. The Allies' expedition in the Orient would thus entirely miss its mark. Besides, the Teutons will have facilities for raising provisions throughout Asia Minor as far as the Euphrates, and consequently develop into a menace to Russia.

"The Turks, after a possible failure by the Allies in the Isthmus of Suez, could easily throw 300,000 soldiers into Egypt. The seriousness of this latter possibility is obvious, for it would constitute a grave menace to communication with India."

In conclusion, the Emir said with great animation:—

"It is difficult to prophesy the outcome of this war. Of one thing, however, I am positive. The Orient will never tolerate in times of peace any Germanic control or 'kultur'. The Oriental people, due to their moral and religious environments, cannot brook the autocratic philosophy of Nietzsche or others of his school. The Eastern element is a pacific one, endowed with delicate sensibilities which it is difficult for the European or American to understand. They are warm of nature, but, unfortunately, have been guilty of too much complacency, inasmuch as they have permitted leaders to take advantage of their faith. This has caused a stricken financial condition to exist, and should this day Germany withdraw its monetary assistance, Turkey would be evolved in a most embarrassing financial situation.

"There is, besides, a mutinous feeling that is lately springing up against the army, and many protest meetings have been held which are carefully suppressed by the military officials."

MILDRED CHAMPAGNE

AMERICAN LADY JOURNALIST

REPRESENTS 42 NEWSPAPERS WHILE ON TOUR THROUGH SOUTH AMERICA.

The celebrated young American authoress, Miss Mildred Champagne, who lately arrived on the steamer Verdi, and who is now residing at the Plaza Hotel, divulged various interesting opinions dealing with Social questions in general and American Art in particular, in an interview with a "Herald" representative on Oct. 16.

With that charming simplicity, which is as rare as it is appealing, Miss Champagne was reposing in a Morris arm-chair when the HERALD representative called.

She wore a very neat but pretty pink silk blouse, bright tan shoes and white kid gloves that fondly nestled on her lap, while her hair which is of a light golden hue was fastened by a rose, lending to her expressive countenance, a perfect semblance of harmony.

Her sojourn in Argentina will most likely occupy a period of two months and during that time she hopes to make an extensive trip in the interior. Then she will make a tour throughout the other Southern Republics.

Her purpose is to gather writing material with the view of penning a series of articles relating to the social, moral and artistic conditions of Latin America to be published by the various newspaper organs which she represents.

Besides acting as special correspondent for the "Boston Post," she also represents a syndicate consisting of forty-two newspapers and magazines.

Miss Mildred Champagne possesses to her credit the authorship of several highly literary plays that are distinguished from the recent sensational dramatic productions by their elevating tendencies and noble aspirations. She has gradually assumed a place in modern American literature that bids well to become unrivalled.

Her fond ambition to establish in Boston a theatre co-operating with a School for the dramatic training of stage aspirants free of tuition charges, to students of proven talent, met with deserved recognition, and the "Mildred Champagne Theatre," in Boston, now in the process of construction, was the result of her activities.

She very early demonstrated unusual ability and a strong leaning towards the humorous; and at the age of fourteen wrote a play which was produced with marked success.

Her first well-known plays are "The Middle Class," "Dear College Days," and the most popular success ever brought out in Boston "The Education of Beatrice."

Her later works are numerous incorporating the well-known production "The Mexican," a drama in three acts of great force and psychological strength which first saw light on the boards, last summer, at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston, and which will soon make its appearance in New York.

This last literary effort deserves special consideration in view of the fact that it contains a vivid representation of life in Mexico, typifying the Latin customs and attitudes with a vividness that has attracted the attention of the greatest critics.

Its realism is striking and can only be accounted for by the fact that the authoress lived and wrote for five years in her own "hacienda," becoming the friend of many Mexicans. In this way she gained the opportunity of learning their actual characteristics.

She speaks Spanish fluently as well as French and German and has travelled extensively, having toured the world twice.

Besides her linguistic propensities, Miss Champagne is also an accomplished musician and a composer of popular songs, including "Love makes the World Go Round" and "The Mexican Serenade." The latter was rendered with admirable effect in the moonlight scene of "The Mexican."

She has contributed a number of articles on the Mexican situation which were printed in leading magazines and periodicals.

Her latest book "Love," a psychological treatise on love and marriage is creating a sensation in the book world, and is being translated into French, German and Spanish.

In this connection the name of Mildred Champagne is a household word because of her clever and sympathetic pen and keen sense of humour.

She has for several years been connected with the "Boston Post," through whose columns she has endeared herself to veritably millions of readers because of her insight into domestic problems and those things which lie nearest the heart.

Mildred Champagne's Social clubs, which are distributed all over New England, are another testimony to her ministering influence in bringing happiness to others.

At these clubs, young people who are lonesome and have no social opportunities to meet each other, rally beneath the banner of good fellowship, under appropriate and sympathetic environments.

Social entertainment such as dances and card parties are given throughout the winter, and Miss Champagne and her staff of social directors see to it that all the ladies and gentlemen are introduced to one another and partake of the club jovialities.

"To its imposing emblem the ensign 'Stranger' is an unknown expression, for the 'password' that leads up the staircase towards the threshold of that massive home, which embodies the sentiments of purity, love and kindness is 'Open to All,'" said Miss Mildred Champagne in her tender, liquid voice.

"The whole world is invited to be cheered by the glowing hearth near which wholesome gaiety abides and learn the teachings of the highest morality which is 'Love' in its every human conception."

The training frigate Presidente Sarmiento entered the North Basin yesterday morning after completing her tenth voyage of instruction.

A large crowd witnessed the arrival of the school ship, whose commander, Captain Miranda, hastened to report his arrival to the naval authorities.

CHAOS IN CONSTANTINOPLE

The Early Days of the War

AN AMERICAN VISITOR'S STORY

"The sensation of living in Constantinople at the outbreak of the war was a feeling remote from any assurance of security," said Mr. J. Soler to a representative of THE HERALD, yesterday.

Mr. J. Soler is an American citizen, engaged in business at 478 Corrientes.

He happened to be in Constantinople on a business trip when the war broke out, and remained there for a considerable time; consequently being enabled to learn the actual situation in Turkey's capital.

"The first symptom that something extraordinary was occurring was when the reserves were called upon. Greeks and Armenians as well as Turks were ordered to join the army. They were dragged practically from their hiding places to serve their dearly hated country.

The only means of escaping was by paying a bonus of 43 Turkish liras,—which is equivalent to $193— for exemption. But few were able to escape through such means. A little while after, the situation became still more acute, for the penalty of death was placed upon desertion. Clearly the Christians had no expedient. They must either hide in obscurity and consequently die of want or if they were caught suffer the penalty of death. Besides a decree had been formed making every house in Constantinople subject to be searched if any suspicion was entertained regarding its inmates.

It was however quite obvious that the policy which the Turkish officials were adopting was more for forcing the exemption prices from the Christian population, while contenting themselves mainly in securing the enlistments of Mohammedans.

"From the start Germany was in control of the destinies of the unlucky Ottomans. Not altogether without opposition for strifes between German and Turkish officers occurred quite frequently.

"In Enver Pasha and Talaat Bey, Minister of War and Minister of the Interior respectively, Germany had staunch vassals; whom she could count upon to fulfil her desires. From the very first days of the war, the censoring of news was ordered by German officialdom.

"Then came the Goeben and Breslau diplomatic stroke that rivetted the relationship between Turkey and Germany still more firmly. This was without a doubt the outcome of one of the most subtle diplomatic machinations conceivable. Baron von Wangerheim, the cool, keen minded, Ambassador of the Kaiser at the Sultan's Court, had achieved his masterpiece.

"Here were two splendid fighting craft of the Kaiser's fleet, after one of the most sensational escapes in the history of naval warfare, desperately in danger. The German ambassador, shrewdly perceived that the only means of having them in Turkish waters without risk of internment would be to sell them to the Turkish government. The die had been cast. The signs were set for war.

"When Germany and Turkey united after this incident," continued Mr. Soler, "men high in authority were against such blind folly. England's promise that Turkey's neutrality should be safeguarded and her territorial rights upheld was ample enough.

"The Sultan and the Heir apparent it was then persistently rumoured in Constantinople were opposed to Enver and his warlike dictums. Their influence, however, was powerfully overridden by the war party who carried the day with a high hand.

"Enlistment, whether compulsory or voluntary and German training went on at a frenzied pace. Money was seized on any pretext whatever, such as in special war taxes and in the hunting out of the old delinquencies. Merchandise of all kinds was seized and transported to the army camps for various purposes.

"There were many interesting rumours in these days. One was that when the poor Sultan was asked to declare war, he begged off pitifully, protesting:—"You know every time we have tum-de-de-tum" (referring to the beat of the recruiting drum) "we lose a piece of our territory. There was tum-de-de-tum in 1912 and we lost Tripoli; there was tum-de-de-tum in 1913 and we lost Macedonia, now there is tum-de-de-tum again, and this time we may lose everything."

"No account of these stirring times is really complete without mentioning the heroic part played by Mr. Morgenthau, the American Ambassador," remarked Mr. Soler, with great fervour.

"When the break with the Entente Powers had been completed the American Ambassador, had procured from Talaat Bey, the Minister of the Interior, the solemn promise of a train to convey the embassies and many French, English and Belgian refugees to the outer world.

"He was at the station about an hour before the appointed time of departure attending to all the details in person. For several weeks this was his practice.

"By that time the anxiety among the English had become intense, and they had flocked to the station in far greater number than had been expected. The embassy staff, also, were there in full force. Just as the bustle was at its height, the announcement came that no train would be allowed to leave that night. This order was issued by the military authorities.

"The consternation that followed was indescribable. Added to the usual crush and disorder of a crowded Turkish railway station the announcement precipitated a veritable panic. There was but one hope,—Mr. Morgenthau. His genial and reassuring personality was everywhere in evidence.

"Without a moment's delay he called up the Sublime Porte by telephone and speaking to Enver Pasha warned him that unless the train left, Turkey was in danger of losing about the only friend that still remained to her. This had its proper effect. The train left at the appointed hour.

"Then the Germans endeavoured to arouse the Mussulman world against the Allies.

"Every effort was made to appeal to the Islamic imagination. A monstrous parade of the "Faithful" was announced; but before it had lived for more than a few hours it had dwindled into a disordered march of a few thousand Ottomans; however it was still a memorable spectacle.

"The march was typically Oriental, a wild, disorderly, huddled rush, with bright banners brandishing in the air, covered with crescents and holy calls to war against the infidel.

"Side by side with these grotesque designs, the colours and emblems of the Teutonic empires fluttered," continued Mr. Soler.

"But the demonstrations did not have the effect intended. The object of stirring the Islamic population to frenzied enthusiasm for the war, had not been attained.

"When the winter approached, ships of the Allied fleet had kept strict guard over the entrance of the Dardanelles. At last the long expected blow came. Tons of metal were hurled upon the Turkish forts. Great fear began to be experienced in Constantinople, which became moderated only, when the disaster to the Bouvet and other vessels was announced.

"This somewhat had the effect of reassuring the Turks. For the first time since the declaration of war a sense of relief was experienced by the Turkish people.

"Soon many reports of serious friction and even open dash between Turkish and German authorities cir-

CANADA IN WARTIME

The Spirit of a People

IMPRESSION OF A Y.M.C.A. SECRETARY

After an absence of two years, Mr. B. A. Prichard Jr., well known in this city for his work with the Y.M.C.A., arrived a few days ago from Canada to resume his activities with the Association.

The impressions that he has formed in the northern clime are quite interesting.

"When I arrived in Montreal, the central city of Canada," he said, "I was struck by the number of men donning khaki. It appeared as though the city was overflooded with soldiers.

"In my secretarial capacities in the Montreal Y.M.C.A., I had the occasion of witnessing various militaristic incidents, and many were the times when wounded officers or soldiers came, very often supported on the arms of their friends, to have a little chat with the officials regarding blood-stirring events in the war.

"Though the streets are thronged with vehicles and people, they have assumed a somewhat mournful air of quietude. Everyone seems to have determination stamped all over—a determination that is penetratingly solemn and earnest. The patriotic spirit in Canada is highly marked, and has enveloped almost every sphere of activity."

The universities, Mr. Prichard alleges, are sending out recruits for the purpose of filling up the gaps caused by the numerous deaths in the Princess Patricia's Regiment; and wherever a Patricia hero is observable—and these are few and seriously wounded—murmurs of admiration reverberate freely, and they are pointed out both by child or elder as an object for respect.

Recruiting sergeants can be seen everywhere. In the parks and in the thoroughfares, large posters written in French and English call in no uncertain tone for the younger generation to enlist.

Mr. Prichard then remarked that the Montreal Y.M.C.A. lost 300 men and half a dozen of the staff who enlisted, while several of the remaining officials are drilling.

He also mentioned that in many cases financial concerns have been severely affected by the war, especially the railroad companies, who were obliged to suspend their construction works; while the small trades have received a shocking blow, from which they will not easily recover.

This coupled with the first serious attack of the English by land as well as by sea caused a practical breaking down of the Turkish spirit and rumours that the English had already proved victorious spread through the city like fire.

"Enver and his party, however, had splendid confidence in their success. To restore the public confidence they staged a spectacular scene crowning the Sultan, as Ghazi, or Victor.

"The Sultan obsolete, and practically in a state of inertia and lethargy, was conducted after the ceremony in a carriage from his palace at Dolma Baghche to the great Mosque of Saint Sophia.

"A military escort followed the carriage, accompanied by thousands of Turks. In carriages just behind the Sultan, were the members of the War Ministry, Chief of whom was the Sheik-ul-Islam.

"The object of the whole display, it is quite apparent, was to inspire the waning faith in the efficacy of the old Ottoman machine, religious and secular.

"The one entirely inconspicuous feature of the parade was its very centre, the Ghazi, the Victor, the Sultan himself."

THE MEAT TRADE

More Tonnage Withdrawn

BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S DETERMINATION

Any hope that the stock dealer might have had that the British Government would meekly submit to the inflation of meat prices must by this time be nearing vanishing point.

It has been a noteworthy fact that from the time when local prices first soared upwards, every endeavour has been made to force them to a lower level. The first step taken by the British Government was to withdraw a great amount of tonnage from the Plate service and thereby to reduce shipments. This was followed by a still larger withdrawal for the present month. It is now stated, not only that the whole of the available space on the Nelson steamers has been requisitioned, but also that the Secretary of State for War is engaged in negotiations with the Canadian authorities for the supply of meat for the use of the troops.

These facts are significant. It has already been pointed out that once Argentina's prices attained absurd heights, her monopoly would be gone. That is precisely what is happening. A profitable margin is enabling other meat-producing countries to enter the field, and the only problem which it appears must be solved in those cases is the provision of the requisite tonnage. This solution is entirely in the hands of the British Government. By assuming control of the bulk of the world's refrigerating steamer space, she is able to send vessels whither she will. If prices rule high in one market, she can automatically suspend the greater part of operations in that market by despatching the vessels elsewhere. The extent to which exportation from Argentina is being reduced is emphasised by the fact that a well-known meat freighter—the Star of Ireland—is now in port and is to leave with a cargo, not of meat, but of hay.

Apart from the desire to take advantage of exceptional circumstances, one view held by local dealers is that Great Britain is running short of live-stock, and that the demand for meat will increase after the war. The Live-stock Census for England and Wales this year effectually dispose of that theory. According to a recent issue of the Live Stock Journal, the figures are:—

Cattle, 6,064,000 head, an increase, compared with last year, of 186,000.

Sheep, 17,522,580, an increase, compared with 1914, of 263,000.

Pigs, 2,420,030, a decrease of 61,000 head.

Horses, 1,287,180, a decrease of 112,370.

In the light of the foregoing information, it is of interest to dwell upon the difference between the operation of a genuine endeavour to cope with a demand, and reckless speculation and inflation of prices.

"LA PRENSA'S" BIRTHDAY

THE 46th. ANNIVERSARY.

On Oct. 18 La Prensa recorded the 46th anniversary of the foundation of the paper by the late Dr. José C. Paz, but, owing to recent bereavements in the families of the proprietors, the occasion was not formally celebrated.

THE HERALD extends its congratulations to its contemporary. La Prensa has become a power in the land; its success is well deserved, and there is no one who will not wish that its future may eclipse in brilliance the splendid record of the past.

CAMP NOTES

(By Our Agricultural Editor.)

The sales of non-pedigree animals at Palermo were well attended, and a satisfactory selling trade was experienced, especially for Shorthorns. The values ruling for sheep were only moderate, considering the good quality of many of the animals passing through the ring. In conversation with many camp visitors in town during the week, all were unanimous in predicting a very bright future for land owners in this Republic, though the locusts are already making their appearance in many districts. The Show was responsible for attracting a large number of well-known camp men to town, including Mr. Thomas Watson, "El Retiro"; Mr. Alex. Bruce, "San Ramon"; Mr. W. Forbes, "Tatay"; Mr. George Matheson, "La Belen"; Mr. George Grant, "El Durazno"; Mr. Mullins, "El Ancalu"; Mr. Thomas Bett, "Santa Narcisa"; and Mr. George Lawson, "Cabaña Azcue-naga."

Mr. David Charles, manager of the Messrs. A. and E. Aguirre's large sheep property in the South, left by yesterday's boat for Las Macetas, Puerto Deseado. He reports wool buyers in that region to be very active, and remunerative prices are being offered for this season's clip.

Mr. Johnston, from Innes Indart, F.C.P., reports camp prospects most favourable in that district. The sowings are all looking most promising.

Mr. George Matheson, of "La Belen," who has on many occasions been a most liberal subscriber and enthusiastic collector for patriotic objects, has during the course of his brief visit to town secured over seven hundred dollars from camp and town friends, which has been handed over to the Treasurer of the River Plate No. 2 Aeroplane Fund.

Mr. James Sidey, so well-known here as a partner in the firm of Messrs Sidey and Poels, is expected to return to this Republic about the middle of next month. Mr. Sidey, during the time he has been in Britain, has acquired many exceptionally well-bred animals, several of which have already been sold by the firm at very satisfactory prices. His many friends in this Republic will be glad to learn of Mr. Sidey's contemplated return, as there is no more deservedly popular man in the trade.

"Sunbeam's Pride," the stock bull of the Messrs. Goñi, and sire of this year's Champion at Palermo, is reported to have died on October 10. The death of this notable sire, at a comparatively early age, will be a distinct loss to the breed, apart from the immediate loss to his owners.

The exceptional demand for the "criolla" class of steers for canning purposes has awakened considerable interest in the purchase of Corrientes and Paraguayan cattle, though the present time of year is unfavourable for the successful accomplishment of this object. With the advent of the warm weather, with its accompanying swarms of insect pests, cattle are so disturbed that they rapidly lose flesh, and under such conditions would be of little use for the purpose intended. With the increased demand for canned meats the forthcoming season will see considerable interest being awakened in tapping the large supply of useful canners in these distant regions.

With the opening of the new railway from Puerto Esperanza Matto Grosso to San Paulo, a vast area of good cattle country will be opened up, and will be the means of stimulating the cattle business in that vast extent of good cattle country. Regular shipments of Brazilian beef are being weekly placed on the London market. As Brazil is a far better cattle country than many people imagine, the regular supply of Brazilian beef on the London market will be the means of inducing the investment of North American capital in its development. The cattle, even in the State of Matto-Grosso, are a strong superior class of "criolla," and with the introduction of some good Hereford sires, and a system of grading, will before long be recognised as an important factor in the exportation of dressed beef.

Mr. J. Lalor, the well-known cattle salesman, has compiled the following list of prices obtained by animals sold by him during the week at the Liniers market: Bueyes mestizos, especial, from $200 to $250; bueyes especiales, from $75 to $200; bueyes gordos from $130 to $150; bueyes buena carne, from $100 to $125; novillos mestizos especiales, from $220 to $250; novillos mestizos, from frigorificos, from $180 to $210; novillos gordos, from $135 to $170; novillos, buena carne, from $100 to $125; vacas mestizas excepcionales, from $145 to $165; vacas especiales from $130 to $140; vacas carne gorda, from $105 to $120; novillitos, mestizos especiales from $100 to $120; novillitos carne gordo from $90 to $100; vaquillonas mestiza especiales from $110 to $120; vaquillonas mestiza gordas from $90 to $105; vaquillonas carne gorda from $80 to $90; Terneros grandes especiales from $45 to $60; terneros mamones especial, from $30 to $40.

COLLYNIE SALE.

The annual sale of the bull calves at this world-renowned property, belonging to Mr. W. Duthie, was held on Oct. 12, when 26 head gave an average of £348. The highest price of the day was 1250 guineas, while a very handsome white calf is reported to have been sold for the Argentine at 525 guineas.

SHOW AND SALE OF NON-PEDIGREE STOCK.

The exhibition and sale of non-pedigree stock has passed, and in many ways one is at a loss to understand the purpose which this show is supposed to serve. In this Republic one gets so accustomed to the usual expressions about developing this, that, and all sorts of propositions that it is somewhat obscure to me the meaning of this show or what it is supposed to "foment." It does not appear to be in any way desirous to encourage the bringing out of cross-bred animals and showing them in competition, adjudicating upon their breed points, when their being "Non-Pedigree" brands them as being only exceptional or chance specimens, probably in many cases selected from a large number of similar cross breeds. I visited this show on several occasions, and could not describe the horse classes as otherwise than decidedly poor both in numbers and quality, with no outstanding specimen that could justify this show of cross-breeds. The show of Shorthorns was fair, and a good selling trade was experienced when they were submitted for auction, considering that they were non-pedigree animals, though possibly many buyers were of the opinion that the typical Shorthorn character of several exhibits, warranted the assumption that they were possibly as pure-bred as supposing their pedigree had been authenticated. The Champion bull shown by Señor José M. Imaz was a fairly good specimen, but was well sold at $4500, a good price for a bull to turn out in a rodeo. Many others were selling at from a thousand dollars to three thousand, quite exorbitant figures for non-pedigree animals, considering that their only recommendation was their typical forms and their being fed for showing. The exhibits in the Aberdeen Angus classes were all shown by

Señor Carlos Guerrero, whose excellent specimens of this beef producing breed were well brought out, which would in no small way tend to popularising the "Doddies" more in this country, where their exceptional qualities as beef cattle are only beginning to be recognised. The older bull was undoubtedly a splendid symmetrical beast, carrying a great wealth of flesh, with a very small bone. Mr. A. St. Clair Simpson has every reason to be proud of the good class of cattle he showed, and which were admirably prepared and shown in splendid bloom. Such worthy specimens of the breed, and well brought out, undoubtedly constitute one of the best advertisements for the "Blacks," as "seeing is convincing." The entries for milking cows were very numerous, and many good class of dairy cows were to be seen. Several breeds were represented, the Holstein being quite numerous, as also the Shorthorn cross. Individual specimens of the latter breed were evidently a very profitable class of dual purpose cow, for milk and with a good square, deep frame, which would mean their throwing a big growthy calf to eventually become a weighty steer, which is a great contrast to the progeny of many dairy breeds, which are a slow growing undersized class of cattle. The show of milk cows was commendable, and likely to stimulate purveyors of milk to study the results of the trials and profit by the experience gained in breeding the best strain of cows and selecting them according to their performance at the pail. By this selection all the valuable milkers would be retained for milk and breeders, while disappointing performers at the test would be eliminated from the herd as unprofitable dairy animals. The entries in the sheep classes were not numerous, but comprised several pens of very good quality Lincolns, which were none too dear to their purchasers at the somewhat low values ruling.

SALE OF IMPORTED SHORTHORNS

On October 15, in the presence of a large number of interested spectators, the Messrs. A. Bullrich and Coy. disposed of a small but select lot of imported bulls, the property of Messrs. J. and I. Rawes. A very handsome and well developed roan realised $9,000, while the average for the six animals sold was $3,750. Trade could only be described as fair, considering the quality of the animals sold.

Following the previous consignment, 18 splendid and beautifully prepared bulls imported by Mr. Joseph Shepherd were next put up for auction. Young active bulls of very good breeding, they were well bid for by the public, and gave the satisfactory average of $2,670 for all animals sold. The splendid condition in which these animals were shown was very favourably commented on by many admirers round the ring.

BRAZILIAN BEEF INDUSTRY.

Perhaps the most important result of the war, coupled with the depreciation in rubber and coffee, has been the establishment of an entirely new industry in Brazil. Cattle have always abounded on the high lands in San Paulo and Matto Grosso, and until a few months ago these were turned to comparatively small advantage, the cattle being driven long distances down to the coast and there slaughtered to supply the local market. Six months ago, however, large refrigerat-

RIVER PLATE DAIRY CO., LTD.ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL YEAR.

The annual report and balance sheet of the River Plate Dairy Company Limited, which were presented to the general meeting of shareholders on September 30, have been published in pamphlet form by the company, and furnish an interesting record of another successful year.

The paid up Capital of the Company is $500,000 gold. The profit for the last financial year amounts to $141,353.40 gold, and the amounts passed to Reserve Accounts at the meeting of September 30 now bring the Reserve Funds up to $190,485.14 gold represented by:—

Fondo de Reserva Legal $ 29,045.66
Fondo de Depreciación 125,000.00
Fondo de Reserva Especial 36,439.48

The Fondo de Depreciación now amounts to $100,000 gold.

The Company was formed in July 1908 with an authorized Capital of $500,000 gold of which $250,000 gold has since been subscribed, and the authorized Capital has been increased to $1,000,000 gold.

The object of the Company was to acquire the business of Reynolds and Co. formed in 1901 by Mr. Henry Reynolds, Messrs. Runciman and Co. being sleeping partners.

The original Directors were:— Messrs. Robert Inglis Runciman, President; John R. Moss, Vice-President; M. Lelshman Runciman, Secretary; Henry Reynolds, Director; Carlos M. Rivero Haedo, Managing Director; and the present Board of Directors is composed as follows:— Messrs. John R. Moss, President; Henry Reynolds, Vice-President; M. Lelshman Runciman, Secretary; Carlos M. Rivero Haedo, Managing Director; J. Dodds Watson, Director.

The dividends paid are as follows: 1st. year 8 o/o, 2nd. year 9 o/o, 3rd. year 10 o/o, 4th. year 12 o/o, 5th. year 12 o/o, 6th. year 10 o/o, and for last year a dividend of 10 o/o has been declared.

The Company are proprietors of 3 butter factories, the Progreso Factory in Buenos Aires, established in 1901, the Victoria in Rosario in 1904 and the Central in Basavilbaso in Entre Rios in 1905. The Company also has 55 Creameries situated 13 in the province of Buenos Aires, 28 in Santa Fe, 12 in Entre Rios and 2 in Cordoba.

The total of butter churned in the seven years has been 17,697,213 kilos.

ing factories were established on the borders of the two states and within touch of the pasture lands, and these factories, with their material at hand, are now in active operation. Exports of frozen meat have been made to the United States for some little time past, while in July last a trial shipment was made to the European markets. Recent advices are to the effect that well over 1,000 tons of meat are on the way to this side, while one factory alone is known to have contracts in hand to the amount of 5,000 tons for delivery within the next few months. The f.o.b. cost of the meat is £45 per ton, say, 4 7/8d. per lb., so that this single contract involves a sum of nearly a quarter of a million sterling, and as the export of meat from Brazil is still in its early stages, it will readily be seen that the prospects offered by the new industry are very promising.—From "The Meat Trades Journal."

THE GARDEN AND ORCHARDHINTS TO AMATEURS.

(By THE RUSTIC.)

In continuation of our article on the above subject which appeared in Sunday's issue of THE HERALD, we propose giving each week a list of the seeds to be sown at the time, and also hints as to what cultural methods should be followed in gardens and orchards. As we believe there is considerable interest on the part of our amateur gardeners, we have made arrangements to open a correspondence section under these columns and hereby invite them to write for information, addressing their correspondence to "The Rustic" care of this office, and the replies will appear in the same section.

The following seeds may be sown in the open:—asthers, balsamine, cyclamen, carnations and sweet Williams, cosmos, coxcombs, crysanthemums, dahlias of several varieties, foxgeranium, gypsophila, sunflower, heliotrope, convolvulus, margherite, pelargoniums, peonia, piretrum, primulus, mignonette, stocks and wallflowers, nastertiums, etc. The variety of seeds to be sown in beds or under cover is very limited owing to the advanced stage of the season, and therefore it is not necessary to give names.

There is yet time to plant the bulbs of cactus dahlias, flags, etc., which will flower in the late summer or beginning of autumn. These should have been taken out of the ground when the first frosts came in, and once the leaves had dried down should have been stored in dry and ventilated places. If they had not been taken out of the ground, and provided care is taken not to hurt the young sprouts, it is possible to produce their multiplication by separating carefully all the bulbs and planting them apart. This not only has the result of invigorating the plants and producing handsome flowers, but it also prevents degeneration and loss of character in the variegated specimens, besides increasing the number of plants. It is a necessary practice to take the bulbs out after the season is over and should be borne in mind for the coming season, but care should be taken that they are stored away carefully in open boxes and laid on dry straw. Among the bulbs to be planted are Indian shot, amarillis, St. Joseph, lilies, callas, dahlias, narcissus, etc.

The cares of the garden are many. As mentioned in our last article, the garden should be kept free of weeds, the beds all cleaned and paths, etc. also. All shoots growing up from the roots should be removed and the appearance of the aphids must be watched carefully. These will be found clustered in the under part of the young leaves and around the young shoots and buds. They are of a light greenish colour when young and turn darker green or black when older. It is hardly necessary to give a description of this insect, as it is so well known. It can be successfully destroyed, as already mentioned, by pulverisations with piretrum, but in large gardens this method would become rather expensive, so that the use of tobacco juice would be more practical. Tobacco juice can be purchased in any quantity at all florists and iron-mongers, and should be applied as follows: To 100 litres of warm or hot water add 3 litres of tobacco juice, pouring the former in gradually and stirring all the while to dissolve well. To this solution add 1 kilogram of potash or ordinary washing soda. When making smaller proportions of this solution, it is not always possible to add the exact amount of potash or soda, and therefore it is advisable, once the solution has been allowed to cool down, to take a tender shoot from the plants to be pulverised and dip it into same, and if after five or ten minutes it has withered and turned black it is a sign that the caustic is too strong and the solution should be further diluted and a proportion of tobacco juice added. This solution should be applied with a sprayer. The ordinary brass piston sprayers can be used, but they are very wasteful even if the smallest flower is used. There are on the market some practical sprayers which can be obtained for $4 or $5 and can be very useful for small gardens. The essential point in spraying is to produce a mist, and not a shower, which will fall as well under as above the leaves, as most insects are to be found under the leaves. It is perhaps not known that the aphids have a great enemy in the larvæ of the ladybird—my-lady of nursery rhyme fame. This larva, which has the flat shape of a sole, rugged and striped orange and black, travels all over the plant, seeking for the aphids, and eats them up by the dozen with apparent relish.

As the weather is getting hotter, special attention must be paid to watering. It is advisable to water as late in the afternoon as possible, so that the plants do not receive the hot sun of the whole day to come whilst they are wet. But as this is not always possible, the bigger plants (trees, shrubs, etc.) may be watered in the morning or during the day, leaving the smaller bed plants and those in the nurseries for the evening.

The transplantation of small plants from the hot-beds or nurseries to their definite places in the ground can be continued, and, of course, only with those which have not commenced to flower, for, although it is often done, plants which are in flower will not stand transplantation with success. Exception is made with those plants which have been sown one by one in small pots, in which case by carefully taking them out of the pot with all the earth around the roots, and carefully watering them when placed in the ground, they will not suffer. The sweet-peas, chrysanthemums, cactus dahlias, etc. which have grown up sufficiently high need tutors and supports put to them.

In the orchard we will find most of the fruit trees have finished blossoming and by now we can tell, more or less, what kind of crop we are going to have, provided no late frosts, hail, locusts or other plague come to destroy them. In orchards which by their extent make it worth their while, the ground should be harrowed or superficially ploughed up to within, say, one metre of the trunks. Disc harrows or No. 20 Collins plough will do the work very well, and if the trees are planted in regular lines, cross ploughing can be practised. There are some special ploughs disposed in such a manner that the discs spread out to right or left of the shaft, and I have seen these used in orange plantations, where the low and spreading branches of the trees make it impossible for the ordinary plough to pass. In smaller plantations, hand labour can be employed.

It is a general practice to sow vegetables or alfalfa, etc. between the rows of trees, but it is by no means the right thing to do, as it prevents the working of the ground, and also all these other vegetations sap up the richness out of the soil. Alfalfa is specially so, as the long and powerful roots of this plant choke up the roots of the fruit trees. It must be borne in mind that the roots of all trees spread out under ground, covering the same surface that the foliage does above ground, so that trees planted at 6 or 8 metres apart practically join their roots.

Peach, apple and pear trees suffer from the aphids, but more especially the two latter, and for this reason they should be pulverised for this insect. In the case of the peach, the early American varieties are very severely attacked, and the fruits suffer considerably, whilst the leaves often fall off altogether at the time when they are required most to protect the fruit from the strong sun.

The apple and pear trees are attacked by the woolly aphid, which not only affects the leaves and fruit, but also the base of the young branches, forming woolly clusters round them (hence its name), but it also emigrates to the roots, crippling them. Once it has taken a firm hold, the only remedy is to destroy the whole plantation and begin afresh.

The best remedy for these aphids is the kerosene spray. This is rather difficult to prepare, and can be replaced very successfully by the tobacco juice, but, of course, success can only be obtained by repeated sprays and careful observation as to the result of each application. Plagues and diseases cannot be cured by one application of the remedy. The preparation is made up as follows:—Put about 5 litres of water to boil in an open pot capable of holding about double that amount, and when boiling add little by little 250 grs. of ordinary soap previously cut up into shaving. Stir all the while, with the pot on the fire, until the whole of the soap is dissolved. Do not have the fire too strong, as the soap will boil over, but keep it actively boiling. Once the soap has dissolved and the water has boiled for a few minutes, add 9 litres of kerosene or paraffin oil, stirring continually, and then allow to boil for 10 minutes. If properly made, this solution will take a frothy and cream appearance, but if it "cuts" it is useless. This solution must be diluted when it is to be applied, in the case of the woolly aphids to the proportion of 60 litres of water to the amount prepared as above, and is applied to the plant with a pulveriser or sprayer.

BLOODSTOCK SALES

HARAS EL CARMEN AND YAMAHUIDA

LARGE ATTENDANCE ; POOR PRICES

In spite of a large attendance, even a crowded attendance, at the Palermo sales on October 15, there were few buyers, prices were poor, and some truly ridiculous bargains were realised. It is not easy to account for the general weakness of the sale, because some sound and good horse flesh was offered, some good and racy stock and, as usual, some poor, some good. There can be no doubt that some of the buyers must have shaken hands with themselves over some of their bargains, and, whether charged to the account of the war, the crisis, the shortage of money or what not, there is no doubt that the sale of Druid stock was a failure so far as prices were concerned.

HARAS EL CARMEN.

Prices ranged just over £150, and only one colt under the hammer fetched a decent price, and even this one was cheap. Barman, by Druid out of Bonita III., a full brother to Bolin, was knocked down at $11,000 to Sr. Diego Alvear.

He was a decent colt, of a good and likely built, but cheap; in fact, a bargain, as were certainly 70 per cent. of the stuff sold. However, such is the way of some auctions, and one could only envy certain buyers who got excellent stock knocked down to them for a song.

There were many attractive animals in the sale, and it was not always the best that fetched the money—that is what little money there was going. The sales completed were as follows, and most disappointing:—

Nacar, by Druid out of Normandia by El Amigo (full brother of Nondina) cheap at $4,000 to the trainer Pedro Pais; a well built colt, with a shade of weakness in the quarters.

Duval, by Druid out of Dina by Orbit, to the Stud Provincial for $1200, cheap at the price, but only a fair specimen.

Iole, by Druid out of Isolina, $3500 to Sr. Benávidez.

Balcan, by Druid out of Brusca by El Amigo, a good colt of the sire's type, and sold cheap to Sr. Sibourd for $6500.

Ermua, by Druid out of Estoica, bought on commission for $3500; slightly on the coarse side, but well set and plenty of bone to build upon.

Farolito, by Druid out of Frisa, withdrawn.

Cabaret, by Druid out of Clara, to the Stud Celina for $4,000; a likely, well built colt and inexpensive.

Alpataco, by Druid out of Alina (related to Aventurero and San Marcos), one of the best colts on offer, with good bone and quarters, compact build, and good head and back. The type of a stayer, but a shade weak in fetlock; sold for $8000 to the Stud Tandil—a reasonable bargain.

Fratello, by Porteno out of Fatima, to the Stud X for $6500; a thoroughly good and likely colt, and exceedingly cheap, a certain winner.

Basque, by Porteno—Broza (the mother is a full sister to Brigola), a well cut and well set colt, to the Stud Montiel for $4500.

Number One, by Porteno out of Novalesca by Druid, to Sr. Celery for $7000. A fairly built, well stamined colt, tough and good; will stand plenty of work, and looks pacy. The price was low.

Eventful, by Porteno out of Effie by Druid, almost a replica of the former except in colouring. A bargain at $2500, to the Stud Tandil. A slight narrowness of quarters.

Alnidon, by Porteno out of Altea (half-brother to Aventurero), for $3500, to the Stud Beausoleil. Well boned, rather short bodied, well set legs and strong, with full driving quarters.

Volca, by Aji out of Valtina, a heavy colt, strong in bone, powerful, but poor in general; $2500, to the trainer Jauregui.

Dario, by Aji out of Denia, a good colt, but withdrawn at $800.

Arloing, by Bridge of Canny out of Aleta by Druid, a ridiculous bargain at $700, to Sr. Enizarne.

FILLIES.

Alefris, by Druid out of Alca, a nice filly and likely, well let down, with good bone, cheap at $3200, to Stud Carnival.

Milita, by Druid out of Mensagera, to the Stud Caseros for $5000.

Certaina, by Druid out of Fisca, for $1700 to the Stud Rancagua; rather a poor sort.

Fifia, by Druid out of Fuga, withdrawn; a very nice filly.

Fabiana, by Druid out of Foc (full sister to Griten), well built, stagey filly, well let down but seemingly poorly blooded or crossed, $1200, to Sr. Celery.

Aprés Moi, by Druid out of Avena; the best and cheapest filly in the sale, well boned, good quarters, low built, with good eye and shoulders, a typical stayer and very cheap at $5500, to the unknown X. X.

Boleadora, by Druid out of Budhista, a fair filly and well priced at $3000 to the Stud Pilai.

Abea, by Druid out of Avida (who is full sister to the mother of San Marcos and Avicenia), a racy filly with fair bone and well set quarters; possesses a peculiar propelling action, likely to be useful, $6000—reasonable—to Sr. Antonio Sibourd.

Diabla, by Porteno out of Duchess, ordinary, for $3500 to the Stud Chiton.

Auvergne, by Druid out of Aroma, a filly with plenty to build upon, rather weak quarters but well let down. She was withdrawn for lack of bids.

Again, by Porteno out of Alda, rather poor but with good bone and poor head, $1400, to the Stud Salto.

Baleyeuse, by El Amigo out of Branca, a poor but powerful filly and sold cheap?

Napolitana, by El Amigo out of Nelly, sold to the Stud Azul. A very poor sort.

Ranucha, by El Amigo out of Ravie, a coarse filly, strong in the leg; withdrawn at $700.

HARAS YAMAHUIDA.

Mister Ros, by Lancaster out of Miss Spendthrift, a colt not true to blood, with "colour weakness," poor back, but strong and attractive, $5000, to Sr. Cabrera.

Vucelencia, by Lancaster out of Pretty by Diamond Jubilee, a well-boned, lightly built colt, fast but unfit for grinding work, $1500, to X. X.

Aveline, by Lancaster out of Aigrette (Blair Athol blood), a skinny, light-boned useless filly, $900, X. X.

Roshanara, by Lancaster out of Turtle, a coarse built, ordinary filly; withdrawn for lack of bids.

La Gironde, by Rio de Oro out of Jauja, a fair but too lightly built filly, $2500, to Sr. Casino.

La Marne, by Rio de Oro out of Coco, one of the cheapest bargains at the sale, well built, good bone, fine quarters and well gathered movement, exceptionally cheap at $900, to Sr. Rigos.

La Manche, by Rio de Oro out of La Agraciada, a poor filly and expensive at $1100, to X. X.

Correntada, by Rio de Oro out of Mentha, a weak quartered filly, with poor back and expensive at $4000, to X. X. American blood and much overrated.

Monday, October 18.

HARAS LAS ORTIGAS.

There was a large attendance at the sale of yearlings in Palermo yesterday afternoon, and in spite of shortage of money, bidding was in general brisk. Some good prices were realised for Diamond Jubilee colts, but some of the colts were sold at exceptionally cheap prices. Throughout the sales this season prices have not been strong, and considering the class of animals put up to-day the average price was low.

Probably because the particular colt, one, named Saca-Chispas, was a brother of Smasher, he fetched a high price ($26,000), and was bought by the Gran Muñeca Stud. The colt was certainly a good one, well boned and built and looked strong and powerful, but it is a question whether he was not expensive, considering the present offers and prices being paid.

The Diamond Jubilee sales create perhaps the keenest interest amongst the bloodstock buyers, but all this season buying has been erratic. Some extraordinary bargains have been realised, while on occasion some high or even exaggerated prices have been paid. It is possible already to point to some ten colts and fillies which have been sold at absurd prices, which is all the more remarkable considering the shrewdness of certain purchasers. More will be said on this subject at a later date, when a general summary of bargains will be remarked upon.

To our minds the best stuff sold yesterday was a colt called Robin Hood, by Diamond Jubilee out of Rydal Fell, full brother to Radiant, and unless some unforeseen contretemps occurs, apparently better. He was a fine colt indeed, and most typically a race horse, with good strong, unexaggerated quarters, strong shoulders, good back and eye, with bone and clean limbs. $20,000 was paid for him by the trainer Orezzaoli.

The best filly sold and a most attractive one, was Mucha Sal, by Diamond Jubilee out of Melilla, a full sister to Melik and Mustafá. Pacily built, a shade light, but with enough to work upon. This filly is sure to be heard of again.

Red Star was another good one, and bought very cheap by Israel Cuna for $6500. A full sister to Red Bonnet, Red Jacket, and Juez de Paz, she was nicely limbed and a typically Diamond Jubilee filly. Caracas, a sister of Chucker Out, sold for $1100 to the Stud Montiel, was another good one, but expensive, and gave the impression of weak bone, she however was born on November 13, and has therefore some time to spare in building up to age.

The sale of the fillies was quite keenly contested, and Greenan stock excited sufficient bidding. There was some good stuff auctioned, but even here, although a good average was maintained, prices were low.

Apart from those specially mentioned above, the following were sold:

Colts.

Arenales, by Diamond Jubilee out of Alhaja (full brother to D'Artagnan), $12,500 to Señor Mon Rese. A good colt, but somewhat coarse for the breeding and expensive.

Visionario, by Diamond Jubilee out of Violin by Isinglass. Cheap at $7000 to the Stud Talisman.

Cosaco, by Diamond Jubilee—Cleopatra. A very good looking colt withdrawn.

Weyler, by Diamond Jubilee out of Wedge, $9000, to Rufino Coll.

Atila, by Diamond Jubilee out of Abadia. Fairly good colt at $6000, to the Stud Talisman.

Montahlan, by Diamond Jubilee out of Mahua. A bargain at $4500 to the Stud Gran Muñeca. Certain to be heard of again.

Mercenario, by Diamond Jubilee out of Minuit. (The mother is a sister to Melgarejo), sold for $6000 to the trainer Gazcon. A fair specimen of his blood.

Pegal Mal, by Diamond Jubilee out of Pega Pega. A bargain at $4000 to the trainer Thomas Conde. A nice colt with stamina.

Richmond, by Greenan out of Blanca, well bred with good body and bone, and inexpensive at $5000 to the trainer B. Islas.

Lamento, by Greenan out of La Certosa, poor, at $5000 to the Stud Tucho.

Tolbaic, by Greenan out of Tragica. For the breeding weak and coarse,

A FINE SALE

Tuesday, October 19.

The exceptional quality of horses sold yesterday afternoon at Palermo was remarkable and none the less so were the prices paid. Cyllene, Pearl River and Polar Star were the sires. Seventeen colts were offered in the early part of the sale and fetched the high average of nearly $10,000 apiece. There was a large attendance and bidding was keen. The highest price paid was $20,000 for Charm by Cyllene out of Charmazel a full brother of Charming. This colt was cheap at the price, being an almost perfect specimen of a race horse. Grand limbs and quarters, well let down, with good back. He will undoubtedly be heard of again and was a most valuable purchase. He was bought by Sr. Atucha, the owner of Packoy.

Jack Johnson commanded the best price for Polar Star's. He is out of Parva, who is sister to the mother of Energica and Aguerrido. Jack Johnson is full brother to Paul Pons. He is a well built, leggy customer, with powerful quarters and fetched $16,000 from the Stud La Posta.

Of the Pearl River stock, Caseros was bought by the Stud Caseros for $2500 to the Stud La Celina.

Wealthy, by Greenan out of Wealthy Water, poor colt at $2500 to Sr. J. C. Poel.

Mystery, by Diamond Jubilee out of Madonna Lily (by Martagon, full brother to Madeline.) A good colt but rather light in build, withdrawn.

Raspail, by Le Sancy out of Rosa Bonheur. A fine colt, well boned, strong and a certain winner. The cheapest colt sold at the sale, the $3500 to Señor Martinez.

Miramón, Le Sancy out of Memoir by Diamond Jubilee. A bargain at $2600 to the Stud Salteño. A raw looking, coarse colt, but with such build, quarters and bone, that make for a certain improvement. Was neglected in the bidding for unknown reason. A valuable purchase.

Delater, Licaon Nougat and Autocrat. The first two by Diamond Jubilee, and the other by Le Sancy were withdrawn. The last named was the best.

Fillies.

Molinera, by Diamond Jubilee and Martagon Lily. A fair specimen, $2500 to the Stud Salteño.

Piedad, a well-bred Diamond Jubilee, was withdrawn.

Como Luz, by Diamond Jubilee out of Cellaret. (Half sister to Moscato, who is a well known horse in England), $3200 to Edmund Frazer. This filly was built with clean limbs and good bone, was strong and there was plenty to work upon. A likely customer.

Etiqueta, by Diamond Jubilee out of Elastica, (the mother is a sister of Siete y Medio), an exceptionally strong filly and cheap at $6000, to the Stud Concordato.

Rouquiza, by Diamond Jubilee out of Raferagh, sold to Juan Tortorolo for $10,000. A fine filly, with good quarters, promise of muscle, clean eye, and good bone. Slightly on the short side.

Critica, by Greenan out of Caprice for $5000, to Señor Carlos Bustos.

Epinette, by Greenan out of Edda. A poor sort, $1700 to the Stud Salteño.

Fragoletta, by Greenan out of Fast Fanny. A peculiarly built, but promising filly, sold for $10,000 to the Stud Campana.

Egalite, by Greenan out of Eva, sold for $5200 to the Stud Branco, (half sister to Siete y Medio), and of similar build, a nice filly, but expensive.

Several others were withdrawn for lack of bids. Some will be sold privately, but others will come again under the hammer.

$14,000. He is by Pearl River out of La Verde and a fine colt.

Other Cyllene colts were as follows:—

Marken by Cyllene out of La Haya, half brother to Rotterdam and Sam Weller, a peculiar coloured but likely looking sort. Well let down and of good bone. He was on the expensive side at $12,500 to Sr. Gomez.

Cœur de Lion by Cyllene out of Flanqueadora (Robert the Devil blood), a fair specimen of a Cyllene, but a shade on the coarse side with only fair back. Sold for $8000 to Sr. Carmelo Cardoso.

St. Emillon by Cyllene out of Al-billa by Gay Hermit (Galopin blood) a magnificent, beautifully bred colt and a pacy looking customer. Rather lightly built, but with good quarters. Sold to the Stud Don Gonzalo for $12,000. Was cheap at the price.

Serpol by Cyllene out of Serpia by Kendal (Galopin blood), a fair specimen and well bred, but light in structure and only fairly attractive. He fetched the good price of $8,500 and was bought by Sr. Picabea.

Marco Polo by Cyllene out of Colombla by Gay Hermit, a beautiful and attractive colt, a shade light of bone, but well built with fine quarters and splendid head. A most likely customer. After keen bidding was sold to Stud Montiel for $17,000. He is a full brother to Carabela.

Other colts by Polar Star were:—

Kurri by Polar Star out of Bayoneta. Full brother to Trabuco, a clean cut, well built colt, with plenty to work upon, strongly boned with fine shoulders, sold cheap at $13,500 to the Stud Provincial.

Radium by Polar Star out of Promise by Gay Hermit, a likely and well framed colt, sold at $8,500 to the Stud Pegaso.

Espartal by Polar Star out of Simper, half brother to Espadanal, a fair colt, but weak in bone, sold at $8,000 to Stud El Marino.

Others colts by Pearl River:—

Ricordo by Pearl River out of Helena by Gay Hermit an attractive, well built and good colt, cheap at $6,500 to Sr. F. Telleria.

Saint Cyr by Pearl River out of Stray Saint, a very fine colt of peculiar colouring, strong in bone, with grand quarters and body; the best of the Pearl River's withdrawn.

Diakos by Pearl River out of Teropila, a poor unattractive colt, but strongly built, sold at $6,000 to the Stud Guadalupe.

El Gato by Pearl River out of Criquette, a fair colt with plenty to build upon $5,000 to the trainer Luis Casino.

Maranon by Pearl River out of Amazona, a good quality colt with fine quarters, fair back, good bone, rather on the light side and cheap at $6,500 to the Stud Los Yuyos.

Ruisenor by Pearl River out of Marla Ines by Gay Hermit; a poor specimen and deficient in bone, sold at $3,700 to Sr. G. Goyeneche.

Kakay by Pearl River or Polar Star out of La Niña by Kendal (Hermit blood), a useful looking colt and more the type of Pearl River than Polar Star, attractive well let down, good quarters and inexpensive at $5,500 to Sr. A. Lema.

Trojana by Cyllene out of Partienla (a full sister to Energica). The nicest and cheapest filly. Fine quarters, with plenty to work upon, and probably with plenty of stamina sold for $10,600 to the Petite Ecurie.

Friedland by Cyllene out of Bere-zina a fairly attractive filly, but deficient in bone sold for $5,000 to the Stud Newmarket.

Marne by Cyllene out of Gironde (Galopin blood). Gironde is a sister of the mother of Mouchette, a bargain

ROSARIO NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Rosario, Oct. 19.

Proposed Patriotic Society.

There has been a growing desire in Rosario to bring together all the members of the British community into harmonious working association one with another, and a serious effort is to be made to mark October 21st, Trafalgar Day, by the inauguration of a new institution to be known as the "British Patriotic Society of Rosario." The proposal, already mooted, will be laid before the general meeting of the Patriotic Committee to be held at St. Bartholomew's Hall, Calle Urquiza, at 9 p.m., and if it is approved—as most assuredly it will be—the whole matter will be referred to a Committee for further consideration and report.

The objects of the proposed Society are as follows:

(a) To deal with the affairs of the British Community in Rosario and District.

(b) To form a bond of union between British subjects in Rosario and District.

(c) To promote the interests and welfare of British commerce.

(d) To provide opportunity for social reunion.

(e) To make arrangements for the proper celebration of National Festivals or events.

Golf: Camp Cup Competition.

The "Camp Cup" presented by Mr. Stephen L. Cox, was played for on Sunday, the 17th, for the first time. In spite of the weather which spoilt all play in the latter part of the day, there was a record number of entries—24. The cup was won by the donor, Mr. Cox, with a score of 84—12, equals 72 net, which constitutes the record for Rosario in the last three years. The conditions of play were three rounds medal play, choice of score of holes for two rounds, otherwise known as an "Eclectic Competition."

I am asked to remind members that a general meeting of the Golf Club will be held in the Britannia Hotel, on Saturday, Oct. 30, at 9 p.m. The saloon as usual has been kindly lent by the proprietors.

Railway Pension Scheme.

This month sees the first of the deductions to be made in connection with the Railway Pensions Scheme. It is currently reported that contract men are to be exempt from payment, and also provisional men; this will remove some of the objections to the measure. It does not remove the contention that the scheme has failed to receive all the consideration which should precede the introduction of so wide a piece of legislation. Only to-day a figure man was remarking to me how much simpler it would have been to make the necessary calculations had the half month's salary, which the measure exacts as a sort of entrance fee, been payable in 25 instead of 24 monthly quotas. The monthly quota would then have been 2 per cent of the gross salary, and there would have been a saving of many tons of paper and many miles of lead pencil at $8,000 to the Stud Chapadmalal.

Locanda by Cyllene out of Locandiera, a well built attractive filly; fair quarters and clean cut; cheap at $6,000 to the Stud La Fé.

OTHER FILLIES.

Mimi Pinson, by Pearl River out of Manon, half sister to Massenot, a good soundly built filly sold for $5,500 to the Stud Ranagua.

My Dream by Pearl River out of Espoir. A grand type of filly, fine quarters, well let down, a good mover plenty of bone, fine head and eyes; certain to fill the public eye later, sold very cheaply for $7,500 to the Stud Pangeo.

throughout the length and breadth of the land. But why do mental arithmetic when you can find a longer way of doing it? It would, I suppose the Government thought, be a departure from the true railway tradition!

News from the "Glasgow."

A further letter of thanks from Capt. Luce, of H.M.S. "Glasgow" has been received by the President of the British Patriotic Committee, in acknowledgment of gifts of clothing, fruit, and reading matter forwarded from time to time.

British Patriotic Committee.

A general meeting of the British Patriotic Committee, to which all British residents are invited, will be held in St. Bartholomew's School-room, Calle Urquiza 1534, at 9 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 21 (Trafalgar Day), for the following purposes, viz.:

To receive the Treasurer's report, and read and approve the audited accounts up to Sept. 30, 1915.

To elect officers for the Executive Committee for the ensuing year.

To authorize the transmission of further funds to London for the "Prince of Wales' Fund," and to consider the advisability of devoting a portion of collections in future to the "Red Cross Fund."

To consider the desirability of giving to the British Patriotic Committee of Rosario a more definite constitution and, if approved, to remit to a Committee for study a project which has been drawn up to this end.

It is hoped that the British community will take note of this, and make it their duty to attend.

I deal elsewhere, at some length, with the proposals in the last paragraph of the agenda.

The Markets.

The wheat market during the week has been nominal, an odd transaction or two having been noted in January wheat round about $10.50, but very little real interest shown either in buying or selling. There has been another general rain throughout the cereal belt; in some places precipitation was higher than it has been in any storm for six months. It must be considered very favourable for the growing crops in their present condition, especially as it has been accompanied by a higher temperature, such as we should now be having in order to bring things on normally. But for the presence of locusts in huge quantities up North, prospects for the growing crop might be considered quite glowing. Maize has been a steady market with a fair amount of business at improving prices, but it is evident that trading is narrowing, as is only natural to be supposed, after the free deliveries which have been made. Some stations are already beginning to show signs of depletion of stocks. Freights have ruled firm at 70s. for open charter, and steamers are hard to get at the price.

A Strike.

The stevedores, nursing an old grievance regarding their pay, and, I understand, a new one arising out of their being called on to work an extra half-hour daily, decided to attract attention to themselves by the coal-miners' method. They had very little success. "Blacklegs" were rushed down to the wharves on motor cars, and work was carried on by them with but a minimum of interruption. Three or four of these gentlemen were injured in a bit of a mêlée at the foot of Rioja, but as due notice had been given of the strike, the police guards had been doubled and the situation never really got out of hand. At the same time it must be indicated that the strike would have been more successful from the men's point of view had there been more ships in harbour; and one prophesies in good and a numerous company if one foretells that later on there will be really serious trouble, on a much bigger scale.

Rosario City Mission.

The annual report of the Rosario

City Mission, which, as reported last week, held a successful Sale of Work the other day, is a record of really sound work, the need for which has been emphasized of late by the increasing amount of poverty within the Municipal limits. At the close of a recent month the Mission had on its books 79 families with 301 children, including 42 families of widows, ten families who had been abandoned by the father, four old women, 23 poor families with the father sick or incapable of working; and 21 families receiving free lodgings; with a school roll-call of about forty pupils. The heaviest outgoing during the past financial year was $5,164.36 for bread and flour; so that readers who help this good work may know that they reach the primal needs of the very poor. The proceeds of the sale organised by Miss Studert were to help to wipe out a deficit due chiefly to a Municipal call for paying, a petition for exoneration having fallen on deaf ears.

A "White Dance."

The members of St. Bartholomew's Club are arranging a "White Dance" (College at Casilda, and to Frank De to take place in St. Bartholomew's Schoolroom on Wednesday, Oct. 27, commencing at 9 o'clock. Gentlemen's tickets $5; ladies $3. This dance will give many people an opportunity of enjoying a dance, who although they may be fond of this particular form of exercise, declare that they cannot face the discomfort of evening dress with stiff shirt and collar in the hot weather. Evening dress is not de rigueur, although I presume it is not to be excluded. The proceeds of the entertainment are to go to the fund for supplying Christmas presents for our soldiers and sailors. Tables will be provided for those who wish to "bridge" over the intervals between refreshments.

La Sociedad Rural: Debts Reduced.

For lack of a quorum the meeting of the Rural Society called for last week could not take place, it is to be held on Monday, 25th. According to the report of the Society the debt which in October, 1914, amounted to $367,432, has been reduced some $20,000, being now only $48,611, and this although Government support has been on a much less lavish scale than formerly. Reference is also made to the Exhibition held recently, saying that although the number of exhibits were smaller, the sales totalled some $5000 more than in 1914. In speaking of the Exhibition of maize, maní, and cotton held in this city and in Casilda, thanks are given to Señor Constancio Larguia, to whom the Society owes a debt of burg, Director of the Agricultural gratitude, and to Don Silvio Spangenberg, agricultural engineer.

DR. ROMULO NAON

U.S. ARGENTINE AMBASSADOR'S HOLIDAY.

It is expected that Dr. Romulo S. Naon, Argentine Ambassador to the United States, will shortly arrive in his native land for a rest after the strenuous labours of his post. Dr. Naon and his family are expected to embark at New York on November 13 and, may be expected here about December 5.

Previously to his departure Dr. Naon expects to complete his work on the question of Mexican pacification in which he is considered to have achieved marked success.

He will probably remain here about three months, returning at the end of that period to the United States and his post.

COUNTERING GERMAN PROPAGANDA

FRIDAY, October 15, 1915.

The announcement that a committee has been formed to undertake the work of countering the active German propaganda in Argentina should give a great deal of pleasure to those who realise the importance of the work. To ourselves the development is highly satisfactory, because despite our alleged anti-English character, we may justly claim to have inspired the formation of the Comisión de Propaganda Pro-Aliados. It is something in the nature of an interesting coincidence that we should be to-day commenting on the formation of this body, because on reference to our files we find that it was exactly twelve months ago, or on October 15, 1914, that we published our first article calling attention to the active German propaganda. From that day consistently we have strongly urged the formation of a semi-official body that would undertake the duty of disseminating information calculated to check the campaign for the Germanising of Argentina. We brought the matter under the notice of the British Minister and also made representations in official quarters in England, always urging that the German campaign to win the sympathy of the people of this country should be met vigorously.

There is to-day fortunately no great need to point out the importance of pro-Ally propaganda. Practically every business man in Buenos Aires and every British resident in the outlying centres of the Republic know the effect which the German propaganda has had upon the people at large. It is now generally realised what a mistake it was to believe that this propaganda could have no influence on the mass of the people, who were sympathetically inclined toward the Allies. With the inception of the war the Germans started a vigorous campaign and literally flooded this country with circulars, newspapers and other reading matter designed to win the people of Argentina to their cause. This campaign, as everybody now knows, was engineered from Germany itself, had German official support and doubtless was financed by the German Government at least to a very large extent. In addition a determined effort was made to capture the Press in Buenos Aires. To what extent this attempt succeeded we have no means of stating exactly, but that it did succeed in some degree nobody can doubt. Furthermore the Germans established La Unión to plead their cause in the language of the country and this journal has unquestionably proved a valuable aid to German interests.

Against all this activity the cause of the Allies had very little championing. For some time the official attitude toward the German propaganda was, to say the least of it, disheartening to those who recognised in what great danger the cause of the Allies stood through the unrestricted and unanswerable efforts of the Germans to malign it. The popular idea, when THE HERALD first took the matter up, was that the German campaign would break down under its own weight so to speak and that the obviously exaggerated statement of the German point of view was in itself the best antidote to its malignant influence. It was in combatting this idea that we encountered the greatest opposition, for it could not be recognised by some people that though charges made by the German Press Bureau were obviously (to English people) false, and that the Germans did not hesitate to indulge in deliberate fraud and forgery, the unscrupulous and malicious nature of the propaganda was not necessarily obvious to the Argentine people. The idea appeared to be general that most of the German propaganda was too absurd to call for reply or explanation.

Fortunately this country has not been placed in a position to decide between the German and the anti-German causes, otherwise the effects of this unchecked campaign of misrepresentation must have been apparent. We do not say that the people of Argentina would decide in favour of Germany, but there can be no doubt that Germany has secured a great many sympathisers in this country, which she did not have at the beginning of the war and which she would never have obtained had the Allies been as active in countering her propaganda as she has been in promoting and conducting it. We have only to turn to the very recent history of Europe to see what results have followed Germany's vigorous campaign. She almost achieved success in Italy and certainly gained it in Bulgaria. Turkey, which had every reason to be grateful to Britain and France, was completely won over to Germany's cause by a clever campaign started long before the war began. The most striking instance, however, is furnished by Greece. Within the week we have read that German propagandists directed by a certain high official of the German bureau succeeded in undermining M. Venizelos. The people of Greece were no more in favour of the German cause than were the people of Argentina twelve months ago, but by obtaining control of the Press of Athens, by the expenditure of large sums of money and by spreading broadcast German views, these propagandists succeeded in getting Greece officially at least on the side of Germany, when possibly by a little propaganda on the part of the Allies she would have been fighting by their side to-day.

Now that the Comisión de Propaganda Pro-Aliados is formed, we think it is the duty of the British people to assist in every way possible to further its usefulness. At the moment the organisation is merely developing its plans, but the time will come when a tremendous amount of work has to be done and then the Comisión will need the assistance of everybody interested in this work. We are very glad to note that the British Patriotic Committee has given its co-operation, but a great deal is still required of the mass of the British residents of Argentina. We believe that the work of the Comisión will strongly appeal to our readers and we urge them to ally themselves with the central organisation. Funds will be needed to some extent and when the Comisión is in a position to give some idea of what is necessary to finance a vigorous campaign, we know that our readers will come forward and assist. In the mean time they can do a great deal of good by undertaking to distribute literature and provide lists of names for circularising purposes. In outlying centres we believe it would be a good idea for small informal committees to be formed to co-operate with the central body. However, the campaign has yet to develop and we are sure that it will secure the sympathy and practical support of everybody. For the moment it is, we repeat, highly gratifying to know that an organised effort is to be made to place the cause of the Allies fairly and squarely before the people of Argentina so that they may judge for themselves between pro-Germanism and pro-Allyism.

THE DECLARATION OF GREECE

SATURDAY, October 16, 1915.

The Government of Greece has declared its intention not to go to the aid of Serbia, but to remain in a position of armed neutrality. Whether this declaration has much or little import depends entirely upon whether the declaration of the Government, is really the declaration of the Greeks as a nation. This distinction has to be made in the case of the Balkan nations and particularly in the case of Greece, because in those countries there is always the probability of a people being totally at variance with a government. There is every reason to hope that this is so with Greece, and that the decision of the Ministry is not irrevocable. Until little more than a week ago we had no indication that the people were not almost unanimously for war, and little has transpired since to cause us to doubt that they are still intent on siding actively with the Allies, certainly seeing that Serbia has been attacked and threatened with extinction.

We were all aware of course that there was a pro-German party, headed by the King himself, but with M. Venizelos still in power, and apparently retaining the entire confidence of the majority of the people, it was not thought that the decision of Greece would be in any doubt when the crucial moment arrived. It is indeed, still very difficult to conceive that there should have been such a violent change in Greek national sentiment as to swing the nation from an enthusiasm for the Allies' cause to an opposition to it. M. Venizelos himself has given us no indication of such a change, and in his recent declaration he appeared to demonstrate conclusively that Greece would be found in her right place at the right moment. Nobody reading that declaration could doubt that the ex-Prime Minister was speaking for the country against a political conspiracy which had only temporarily succeeded in placing Greece before the world as a country untrue to her faith and false to her professed friendship.

What has since transpired is certainly mystifying and the only explanation of the situation is that which we have suggested. In other words the extraordinary volte face has been made by the government only, and not by Greece as a nation. Whether the nation at large will follow the Government, or whether the people will repudiate the pro-German party's decision, time alone will tell. Unless M. Venizelos has hopelessly lost his sway over the people, or has been converted to the idea of neutrality, the real attitude of Greece is still to be determined. We do not believe he has changed, but there is a grave possibility that the people have, and that the success of the German propagandists is greater than we have been permitted to learn. To be just and fair to the Greeks we could not very well denounce them if they had altered their views. There is every evidence that M. Venizelos has had very little support from the Allied diplomats, and the failure of the latter has caused intense disappointment not only in Britain but in France. It is also quite clear that no serious efforts were made to counteract the vigorous press campaign which the Germans waged. M. Venizelos appears to have been left to fight his battle for the Allies quite alone, and if in the face of German intrigue, and bribery, and the wholesale subordination of the press, the people have gone against him, then neither he nor they can honestly be blamed. The fault is entirely that of the Allies themselves.

However, we are inclined to believe that Greece is not irrevocably committed to the attitude decided upon by the Government, and even were this belief not well founded, it will probably be found that the Teutonic alliance will commit some blunder that will undo the mischief which

RETALIATION, NOT MURDER

SUNDAY, October 17, 1915.

The orgy of murder which has more deeply dyed the already blood-stained hands of the Kaiser and his responsible ministers has apparently not satisfied the brutes in Berlin, and, from latest reports, it would appear that Germany is preparing for yet another Zeppelin raid on London. This intimation will occasion little surprise. Germany has threatened from the first days of the war that she would indulge in a campaign of "frightfulness," she has stated over and over again that giant Zeppelins would raze London to the ground, and that the real inwardness of war would be brought home to the meanest English homestead. If the spirit of bravado which characterised the German threats be liberally discounted, there nevertheless remains the fact that Germany has not hesitated to utilise every means at her disposal to wreak upon the non-combatant Britons the spleen which has filled her soul since Britain entered into the war for civilisation and humanity. Most people expected that this would be the Teuton policy and expectations have been fulfilled. On this point, then, there is little reason for comment. At the same time, however, the reality of the Zeppelin raid has engendered a feeling of rage which is not easily overcome.

When the first Zeppelin visited England and waged war on the aged horse and the defenceless hen, the general attitude of the British people was one of amusement. That incursion, however, was but a prelude to others much more serious, and recent visitations have resulted in the wholesale assassinations of sleeping women and children.

Naturally, this state of affairs cannot be allowed to continue. The Briton has a genuine objection to the slaughter of innocent non-combatants, and even were war against non-fighting males necessary, he would be reluctant to participate in such a campaign. When women and children, however, are involved, the prejudice against operations not consistent with those to be undertaken by civilised gentlemen is intensified, and the probability is that the agitation in favour of reprisals will need to be strongly supported before a majority of the people of Great Britain and her dependencies are convinced of its advisability. Nevertheless, reprisals are necessary.

Apart from the system of underseas warfare, Germany has embarked upon many operations which have placed her beyond the pale of civilisation. The first of these was the extensive use of poison gas—a policy almost unprecedented in recent warfare. The horrors of the use of chemicals and burning liquids against honourable foes have been too often described not to be familiar, and thanks were freely uttered that Bri-

Teutonic craftiness has created. The Allies may not be strong in winning active support, but at least their methods have the virtue of not creating enemies. This cannot be said of the methods of the Germanic confederation. There is a brutality, and disregard for sentiment about Teutonic conduct that is inevitably bound to create bad blood. The least manifestation of the bullying spirit toward Greece will bring that nation into line with the Allies. Furthermore Bulgaria is in herself a danger to Germany's schemes for the quiescence of Greece. The Bulgars are by nature brigands and raiders, and already there have been indications that they have no respect for the rights of their neighbours and no scruples about foraging over the borders. It will require little of this sort of conduct to convince Greece that she is better off in direct enmity to such a crew, than she is as their nominal friend. Just what lies in the future, so far as the Balkan situation is concerned, no one can tell. We have to wait and see.

THE BALKANS CAMPAIGN

WEDNESDAY, October 20, 1915.

The Balkans campaign, which can now be said to have started in earnest, will furnish students of the war with a most interesting subject. In practically all other theatres of the struggle there is little or no movement, and certainly no opportunity or occasion for the display of strategic skill. In Flanders, in the Dardanelles, and on the Austro-Italian frontier, the armies are kept to their trenches. Occasionally there may be attempts to advance or to force a fight in open country, but after the experience of a week or two ago, when the Allies in France and Flanders made their determined effort, it should be quite clear that for many months, and almost certainly throughout the approaching winter, the character of the war will not change. This may not prove true in the case of the Russo-German campaign, because it is not unreasonable to suppose that a Russian offensive of some magnitude will be developed when conditions favourable to the Russian arms—that is, the accumulation of ammunition and the advent of cold weather—obtain. It is, however, only in the Balkans that mobility may be expected, with its attendant display of strategy of the highest order.

Germany's purpose in the Balkans is both military and political. She aims at relieving her ally Turkey, and at the same time preventing the formation of a Balkan alliance hostile to her and her allies. To be strictly accurate we should speak in the past tense in connection with Germany's political purpose, because it has been accomplished, as in fact it had to be accomplished before she could safely embark on her military enterprise. It is not necessary at this moment to go deeply into the political aspect of the campaign, or to trace the reasons for Germany's success. By ways and means which we may denounce, but which nevertheless gave Germany what she wanted, she won Bulgaria to her cause, put Greece into a neutral position, and now has Rumania on the horns of a dilemma. All hopes of a formation of the old Balkan alliance tain had not descended to such depths as had her enemy. In course of time however even Britain has discovered the necessity for adopting the use of gases in her attacks on the German positions. The defenders understand no other weapon.

The introduction of poison gas as a British weapon has been enforced; to-day the German Zeppelin campaign necessitates the adoption of retaliatory raids. Sir A. Conan Doyle, in common with a large section of the London Press, has pointed out that the only hope Britain has of compelling the Teutons to use their aircraft solely for military purposes lies in the commencement of active campaigns against undefended German cities. The German people, apparently, approve of the murder of Britain's non-combatants. The only thing to be done, therefore, is to emphasise the unnecessary brutality of such a view. That can only be done by means of aerial raids. If the German Government is incapable of following any humane course except when it is intimidated, then such intimidation must follow. The cry for aid from the peoples of those towns near to the French frontier would speedily lead to a revision of the policy of murder which has been the stock in trade of the Teutons ever since they trampled Belgium under foot. It is no pleasant task to wreak vengeance upon innocent German women and children, but it must not be forgotten that our own people's lives are of much greater importance to us. Anything that can be done to save them must be done; and, unless we are greatly mistaken, the only method of doing so is to exact three-fold revenge for every murder that may be committed by a German airman. The adoption of this policy would speedily make Zeppelin raids on unfortified towns a horror of the past.

vanished long ago. Greece may join Serbia and fight, and Rumania may do the same, but temporarily at any rate Germany has triumphed politically over the Allies. The campaign has passed from the political to the military stage.

With the active assistance of Bulgaria, Germany hopes to be able to fight a way through to Turkey, and establish a line of communication along which she may send reinforcements and munitions as they are wanted. She evidently proposes to operate in the Balkans just as she has done in Poland and in Northern France, and use her established and developed communications to throw her weight wherever it is needed to withstand pressure. Possibly she believes that if she can help Turkey, she can drive the Allies off the Gallipoli Peninsula, close the campaign against Turkey, and so be free to concentrate all her force against Italy, or Russia, or France, finishing each campaign in turn, and finally triumphing, or preventing the Allies from scoring a distinct success in any one direction. The military and political plans of the Allies, are of course, directly opposed to those of Germany. What they aim at elsewhere can be discussed later. Their immediate object in the Balkans is to prevent Germany and Austria linking up through Bulgaria with the Turks. The contest is not merely one of force, but of the highest strategy.

The first move of the Austro-German forces is to get control of the railways leading through Serbia and Bulgaria to Constantinople. Mere road transport through Bulgaria would not be of much use to the Teutonic alliance in helping Turkey. Fortunately for the Allies, the main lines, along which the Austro-German forces must advance from the Danube pass through Serbia for a considerable distance, and in their course through Bulgaria approach so far south as to offer every opportunity to the Allies to "get astride" them, to use a military term. Once these railways are in the hands of the Allies, and are defended from the very best positions that can be selected, Germany's plans will be entirely upset. She may do with Rumania what she did with Belgium—toke the shortest way to her objective, and disregard such a trifle as a nation's neutrality and integrity—but if she waits to do this, she will be too late even then to accomplish her object.

At the moment the Austro-German forces have not yet linked up with Bulgaria. They have been checked by the Serbians who are making a determined stand in the Morav valley, and are keeping von Mackensen from joining forces with the Bulgarians. Meantime the British and French forces are striking strongly at Bulgaria evidently with the intention of smashing her while she is still out of touch with her allies. The sudden dash on Strumitza indicates the intention on the part of the Allies to gain possession of the railways as they pass through the southern part of Bulgaria, and possibly to strike deep into the heart of the country. If the report of the landing of forces at Enos and at Varna be correct, it also looks as though the Allies, including Russia, have resolved on an exceedingly bold stroke, and that no less than the cutting off of Turkey from the rest of Europe by taking up a line across the narrowest part of the Balkan peninsula.

Whatever may be the real plans of the Allies, it is undeniable that they have every prospect of upsetting Germany's plans and are displaying great boldness and activity in their movements. In many ways they have all the advantages of the new campaign. Serbia, as we pointed out some time ago, is still a fighting power of great strength, especially when a defensive campaign is being conducted in the mountainous country that lies in the way of the contemplated Austro-German advance. Britain must have strong forces available for the campaign, and Italy is also in a position to send large contingents. The element of surprise is absent, and there

"MUDDLE THROUGH!"

THURSDAY, October 21, 1915.

Sir Ian Hamilton has been recalled "to confer with the Government"; the officer commanding the disastrous landing at Suvla bay has been superseded; Sir Edward Carson has resigned owing to differences with his colleagues on the conduct of military operations in the Mediterranean; meanwhile, the British public are asked to view apparent Teuton-Bulgarian successes in the Balkans with equanimity pending the development of the Allies' plans. Such is the latest chapter in the British Government's conduct of affairs in the Near East.

Without wishing to emphasise the deplorable ineptitude of the two successive Cabinets responsible for the prosecution of the war, we assert unhesitatingly that when the history of the Dardanelles campaign is written it will show that the mismanagement of the whole expedition has furnished the most flagrant example of Ministerial incompetence recorded since the days of the Walcheren debacle.

With the eyes of the nation centred on the Western Front and on the recurring Zeppelin raids, too little attention has been bestowed on the operations against Turkey. One hundred thousand casualties are reported, and the British Expeditionary Force, despite its appalling sacrifice, is still on the toe of the Gallipoli Peninsula. This is no reflection on the regular army and on the gallant Colonials who have willingly given their lives in the service of the Empire; but it is a serious indictment of those men whose capacity for muddle is almost unprecedented.

Why has Sir Ian Hamilton been recalled? Is it really because of a desire for a conference, or are there other reasons? The reply will be awaited with some interest; especially in view of the fact that the Suvla bay commander has been deprived of further opportunities for the useless waste of life. Why has Sir Edward Carson resigned? We are not admirers of Carson, who, even in the days when Britain was fighting, half-armed, against a Teuton foe, threatened to bring about another Ulster crisis. Nevertheless, the announcement that a strong man has left the Ministry because of disagreement with colleagues on the conduct of vital operations is disquieting. Coupled with the appeal of Lord Milner for the abandonment of the Dardanelles campaign, Sir Edward Carson's resignation may be of great significance.

Pending the actual happening of events favourable to the Allied arms, the British people are asked to suspend judgment. No serious objection can be taken to the refusal to disclose secret plans, but the public can be forgiven if they show a little impatience at the manner in which they are treated by their servants in the House. Too often have promises of offensive operations and important successes been broken, not because of defects in the fighting qualities of the troops, but simply because of the incompetence of the Government. We have had the ammunition scandal, the Admiralty muddle, and now we have the Dardanelles fiasco. In view of all this, how can the people be exhorted to "Trust their Leaders"?

Little need be said on the present situation on the Gallipoli Peninsula. But if Lord Milner's appeal was without justification, then there is every reason in favour of his being confined as a public danger. The unfortunate part of it is, however, that the facts which have been allowed to filter through would appear to indicate that is every reason to believe that the new phase of the war has been carefully prepared for by the Allies. As this new conflict develops we believe it will be found that Germany has on this occasion undertaken a task far beyond her capacity to carry to success.

BRITISH AGED AND INFIRM FUND

The committee meeting of the British Aged and Infirm Fund was held on Oct. 18, at 750 Calle Moreno, the following members being present.—Mrs. J. Monteith Drysdale, Rev. J. W. Fleming, D.D., Messrs. Hope Gibson, F. P. Simpson, J. Bramwell, N. F. Tribe, and James Begg, (in the Chair).

Sir Reginald Tower, Dr. McLaughlin and Mr. Logan advised inability to attend.

The following officers were appointed for the year:—Chairman, James Begg; Vice President, Rev. J. W. Fleming, D.D.; Secretary, Noel F. Tribe; Treasurer, F. P. Simpson.

The Treasurer gave notice that subsequent to the General meeting the following additional subscriptions had been received:—Mrs. Lisowski $12, Mrs. Cunningham 5, Mrs. R. N. Mackenzie 10, James Hardie 50, D. 100, T. S. Lough 50, J. A. Wilson 5, S. H. Puleston 12, W. Field 20. Total $264.

The pension list and estimated expenditure for the current year was drawn up and two new pensions were agreed to. The sums voted exceeded the income from investments by about $2,500. Part of this would be covered by the regular subscriptions and the balance would be met from the special appeal surplus.

THE CATACOMBS OF ROME

LECTURE BY DR. McLAUGHLIN.

Wednesday, October 20,

The pleasing personality of Rev. Dr. Wm. P. McLaughlin, was again in evidence last evening. This time in the role of lecturer at the Y.W.C.A., where he gave an animated discourse, "The Catacombs of Rome," accompanied by coloured illustrations.

During the lecture, some of the views, rich in their descriptive and scenic merits, transferred to sight-seer through the corridors of the Golden Palace of Nero, to the weird and gruesome dungeon where St. Paul was confined and eventually lead him through the Arch of Triumph, where victorious Titus with his Roman and mercenary legions destroyed for ever the grandeur of Jerusalem.

Dr. McLaughlin deserves much credit for his study of the subject, and his instructive method of rendering it, added to the interest of the scenes.

BRITISH AIRMEN KILLED

London, Oct. 15.

Flight Captain Askwith and Lieutenant Hardy have been killed through a defect in the machinery of their aeroplane caused it to fall while travelling from Glamis Castle to Montrose.

everything is not so happy as the hired optimists of Westminster would have the nation believe. From day to day the political situation increases in seriousness; charges are levelled at the heads of people holding responsible positions; the conscriptionists cry aloud of a great danger confronting the Empire; and the "good party men" assure everyone that all will be well if we wait sufficiently long.

Mr. Horatio Bottomley, even though his antecedents do not commend him to all people, has stated that the Coalition Ministry is tottering to a fall, and the Daily Express says that revolution in Britain is not improbable. We decline to take so serious a view of things. Nevertheless, we have little confidence in the capacity of the present Government either to weather a crisis or to lead the Empire to victory. A change is necessary, and that change must come soon: there is no longer time to experiment on the ancient, and now valueless, lines of "muddle through."

Public Opinion as expressed in the Argentine Press.

PUBLIC MEETINGS IN PUBLIC PLACES

(La Prensa.—October 14).

In view of the measures adopted by the Chief of Police, arranging for a species of rotation among the various political parties who wish to make use of the public plazas for their meetings, the Municipality has announced that it too wishes to make itself heard in regard to the damage that such meetings are apt to cause to the property of the commune. And as La Prensa remarks, the fact that the plazas are for the general benefit of the city, and call for the expenditure of several thousand dollars after these public meetings, is good reason for the authorities to take the matter up, without however doing anything to check the right of public meeting.

This is a constitutional right, and on previous occasions La Prensa has found it necessary to draw attention to attempts on the part of the police to limit this function. The present case does not come under this heading, but it is as well to record the fact that whilst in this Republic no meeting can be held, even in an enclosed place, unless the police have been duly advised and their permission had, in France even the simple formality of previous advice is dispensed with. The democratic customs of this country have led to the choice of the plazas for public meetings, and although the legitimate interests of the citizens in general have forced the authorities to limit certain practices in large towns, such as the street processions, save on stated days, no real check to the constitutional right has been applied. The true solution of the problem is to follow the example of certain European cities where meetings are allowed only in specially named sites. The laying out of a plaza or two, without the customary garden adornment, would obviate every difficulty.

BUENOS AIRES AS IT IS

(La Nación.—October 14).

Taking up the theme of the Intendente's last edict, La Nación states that a stranger forming his opinions from official sources would be apt to believe that he had come to a sink of iniquity and corruption wherein the coming generation was being ruined. An actual stroll through the city would on the other hand show him a vast agglomeration of people very quietly disposed, with a night life that whilst possibly it might alarm a timid old lady from the provinces would not cause a newcomer from any city of southern France to lift an eyelid. Wine, women, and dice, the temptations of the writer of sensational feuilletons, are not to be found to anything like the extent that the head of the commune supposes.

Alcoholic excess, which in any case will not be combatted by closing down the bars at stated hours, is far from being a problem of importance in Buenos Aires, as the police returns abundantly show. Moreover, continues La Nación, this temperance is not confined to the outlying taverns, but also characterises the regular frequenters of the cafés and restaurants in the centre. A visit to any of these establishments is sufficient to show what a ridiculous campaign this is on the part of the Intendente, who must either expunge from mythology the old figure of Silenus or imitate Lycurgus when he gave orders that the vines were to be rooted up. In so far as the fugitive feminine element is

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

(La Prensa.—October 15).

In regard to matters municipal public opinion has already summed up the situation, remarks La Prensa, and is asking insistently how long the present state of affairs is to go on. It is not a case of the personal honesty of the various functionaries being in question, that is admitted, but honesty is not the only necessary qualification for individuals appointed to control the affairs of a great city such as is the Federal Capital, a city of individuality, having its own traditions. The critic notes, again and again, acts and edicts that show a lack of administrative sense and unwise appreciation of the various needs of the community. Comment on these errors goes unheeded, the final result being that the Intendente's department, and the Municipal Commission, go on their own way, the world forgetting, if not by the world forgot.

Buenos Aires has had many experiences of municipal administration; progressives, time-servers, masterful men, and men who sought to leave behind themselves some lasting monument of their work. But, declares La Prensa, it never had anything quite like its actual administration, which has no character whatsoever. This is abundantly proved by the record of what it has done, or rather, left undone. The only important matter that has been through its hands was the municipal budget, and that was not handled successfully. Of its other affairs the less said the better. Then came the series of measures calculated to reform, customs inherent in every Latin capital, measures that have been laughed out of existence almost as soon as they were promulgated. Had they been part and parcel of a vigorous policy of progress they might have had some chance of acceptance, but as things are they have merely provided the general public with piquant phrases that, as La Prensa says, are sufficient to overthrow a government.

It calls on the municipal authorities to take due note of this phase of mind. Frankly charges the commissioners with a systematic neglect of their duties. The Municipal Commission is equally liable with the Intendente, and the silence of the former does not free its members from participation in the blame. It was not worth while to dissolve the former Municipal Council merely to this end. Moreover responsibility also attaches to the government, which has promised the municipality sound administration. It ought, concludes La Prensa, to express its displeasure at the general disorganisation; in short, the situation is unendurable, and such measures ought to be taken as are necessary to restore the prestige of the nation's capital city.

concerned it could scarcely be more unobtrusive, whilst its guilty gaiety calls rather for pity than for reprisals. The few cabarets are little better than ordinary dancing halls where tedium reigns and the only scandal lies in the unsatisfactory economical habits of the frequenters. As for high play, the crisis and the very limited number of persons in the various clubs, is proof that it does not exist. In short Buenos Aires has progressed notably, scandals and brawls are rare, and the city as it really is, is much more agreeable than the imaginary city as sketched by the Intendente in his puritanic zeal.

THE TAX ON JUSTICE

(La Nación.—October 15).

In the Tribunals of the Province of Buenos Aires, says La Nación, there has been an appreciable decrease in the number of law suits during the year. Were the times normal this fact might lead one to suppose that the public were living peacefully and tranquilly without complications or disagreements necessitating recourse to the civil courts. Unfortunately the reason for the decrease in litigation must be sought elsewhere, and investigation proves that the cause lies in the excessive cost of justice as a result of the new tax created by the Government replacing the costs formerly collected. The new tax has had the rare virtue, in the first year of its application, of convincing litigants that any private arrangement whatsoever is preferable to a recourse to the law courts where between costs and taxes and fees the sum under dispute is often wholly absorbed. Where an appeal to the Law courts has been unavoidable, the contestants have found it advisable to take their case to the Federal Capital where the course of justice is much more rapid, and indisputably cheaper. Thus the only loser as a result of the imposition of the new tax is the Provincial treasury.

The ill-conceived tax was calculated to bring in some $600,000 paper per year, a sum which it will undoubtedly not produce. Moreover the tax is intimately bound up with the stamp law which represents to the treasury an income of over six million dollars paper. Up to the present the amount collected from both sources shows a deficit of some two million dollars. If to this be added the tax on legacies calculated at $2,260,000 paper, we arrive at close on $10,000,000 as the amount of taxation weighing directly or indirectly on the cases to be ventilated in the provincial law courts. This figure says La Nación is enormous, and the facts require the careful study of the Government in order that the Provincial Governments may avoid the contradictory results which they have obtained by ill-conceived taxation in the past.

BEGGING IMMIGRANTS IN LA PLATA

(La Prensa.—October 16).

Begging has become a nuisance of unprecedented magnitude in La Plata, remarks La Prensa, and it calls for the immediate intervention of the authorities, especially since it is noticeable that the beggars are not Argentines, but Syrians, evidently professionals come here with the express intention of exploiting the land, since their appearance has been sudden and they show a complete ignorance of all national customs. La Prensa does not however think that they have been landed at La Plata, but have congregated there from the provinces. Had they been new arrivals, in all likelihood they would have stopped in Buenos Aires.

In any case the presence of this band of Syrians is a clear proof of the argument so frequently sustained in the columns of La Prensa concerning the need for a more efficient control of Argentine immigration. It is safe to say that on landing they described themselves either as traders or day labourers, and that they were manifestly either unfitted for work or not over interested in seeking it. Add to this the fact that they belong to a race that does not adapt itself, either in speech or manners, to local conditions, and one cannot be surprised that they should feel the full effects of the general crisis, the more so since they possess the fatalism and want of initiative so characteristic of the oriental races. Well-informed persons are aware that this class is always the readiest to take to beggary as a means of existence, foisting themselves on the charity of the passer-by on the slightest excuse. The La Plata authorities will do the country a good turn if they give these persons some reasonable assistance, and at the same time submit them to a close interrogatory as to whence they came, their previous employment, the length of their stay in the Republic, and such other data as may be of utility in solving the problem of separating the useful from the unserviceable immigrant.

RUSSIA AND BULGARIA

(La Nación.—October 16).

The naval invasion of Bulgaria by the Russian forces, which is said to be imminent, will derive, says La Nación from the two principal ports on the Black Sea, Odessa and Sebastopol, both being Russian naval depots. In Odessa are vast stores of provisions, whilst Sebastopol possesses notable strategic advantages. Bulgaria, who was forced to give up Silistria after the Balkan war, has now a coast line of less than 100 miles on the Black Sea, though in that short distance there are two good ports: Varna, a railway terminus, and Burgas, some 50 miles to the southward, linked up by rail with Adrianople. The first-named has some 40,000 inhabitants, and has been besieged by Russia several times, whilst Burgas has but 8,000 inhabitants and is relatively insignificant.

It is clear that the immediate attack will be on Varna, distant but 250 miles from Sebastopol, and the expedition will have no novelty for the Russian arms. Undoubtedly, says La Nación, the Russian fleet dominates the Black Sea. It has already destroyed several Turkish cities, to say nothing of Turkey's maritime trade in those regions. From Trebizond, Sangulack—which has been bombarded on various occasions—to the forts of the Bosphorus the Russian navy has shown its predominance. Latterly however Russian advances speak of a German submarine, apparently of the latest model, sighted off Sebastopol. At the same time it might be only U 51, the boat that sank the Majestic and Swiftsure, but in any case one submarine is not likely to make any great difference to a maritime expedition against Bulgaria. The chief obstacle will be the Varna forts; Burgas on the other hand is practically unfortified, though it is probable that powerful if hastily devised defences have already been thrown up, whilst the lesson of the Dardanelles has shown how difficult landing under such circumstances may be. A message from Bucharest states that the bombardment of Varna has already begun, adding that a squadron of submarines, brought overland, left the port ere operations began. If this be true, then the difficulties of the Russians are likely to be increased.

"LA PRENSA": ITS 46TH ANNIVERSARY

(La Prensa.—October 18).

Forty-six years entirely devoted to the principles laid down by its founder, Dr. José C. Paz, marks today's Prensa; principles based on high ideals and a firm patriotism, which time has shown to have been beyond all question a sound foundation, La Prensa being to-day an indispensable factor in popular Argentine life. It is indeed this loyalty of its public that has made the paper what it is to-day, and that despite the stormy years of its beginning when personalities, backed up by bravado, or oligarchical domineering ruled in the journalistic world.

The methods employed by La Prensa broke away from the old models. Idle phrase-making and polemics, wherein

AGRARIAN CREDIT

(La Nación.—October 19).

The agrarian pledge law has, says La Nación proved opportune and profitable for producers at a time when the general restriction of banking credit had led to their facilities being reduced. There are nevertheless valuable possessions that might be used as a basis for further transactions, but lack of confidence has prevented any steps being taken to this end. Thus the winegrowers of Mendoza have again and again asked the Banco de la Nación to help them, but, remarks La Nación, so many difficulties were raised, so exigent was the investigation, that the help, when it did arrive, was found to be late and insignificant. Thanks however to the agrarian pledge law, the wine growers have been able to get loans to the tune of $5,000,000 on the growing crop and on their working tools. Had this money not been obtainable the winegrowers would have found themselves in serious plight, compelled to pay dearly for such monies as they required.

The same thing has been observed in other directions. Cattle breeders and agriculturists have pledged their herds, their buildings, their implements to get the credit refused by the restricted banking facilities. Hence much money has been put in circulation, representing the value of industrial material that could not formerly be handled owing to the lack of any legal guarantee for the sums lent. Latest data give $70,000,000 as the total amount of the loans granted under this law, but La Nación is of opinion that it has been largely increased of late. Banks as well as traders benefit by this movement, but at the same time La Nación sees fit to warn them that they ought not to rely too much on this class of business, since there is a danger that the official banks may go too far and always insist on a pledge, thereby neglecting the need for satisfying personal credit. Credit against pledges does not in the ordinary course of events engage easily with the mechanism of commerce, and it must also be remembered that at certain epochs of the year the agriculturalist has nothing to pledge. Hence the undoubted good that has been brought about by the use of the agrarian pledge must not be pushed too far.

mediocrity shone, were abandoned, and no quarter was given to the mere party organ, abused into becoming the mere pulpit for political tribunes. It was sought to create an informative journal, supported by authoritative writers on political and social subjects viewed from the standpoint of the nation's benefit. And, as La Prensa justly claims, the life of the paper shows more clearly than many words how this principle has been maintained. Comparison of the present with the past is ever a stimulus and an incentive to make still further progress on the course that has been outlined. At an epoch such as that through which the world is now passing La Prensa not only serves the country in its development and its ambitions, but also gathers from across the seas the feelings and doings of the rest of the world, a perfect cable service having been one of the items most strongly insisted on by the founder, who throughout all his life was devoted to the improvement of the great organ by him created. Family mourning among the proprietors of La Prensa has led to the abandonment of the customary celebración íntima, but that does not prevent the paper as a single entity, from passing the customary good wishes on to all who with it are associated in serving the best ideals of the Argentine public.

RUMANIA'S NEUTRALITY

(La Nación.—October 18).

Many times it has been asserted that Rumania was coming in on the side of the Allies, remarks La Nación. When Italy broke with the Hapsburgs it was stated that a treaty bound Rumania to the Peninsula, but the months passed by and she still stood firm. Will she come in now that Bulgaria has opened fire upon Serbia? Many have asked this question, and the answer, given by Bucharest itself, is negative. Thus Rumania continues in her neutrality. Certainly the chancelleries of the Allies are not likely to have many illusions on this head after the abstention of Greece. All hopes of the re-establishment of the Balkan League having faded, neutrality in Rumania is bound to gain strength, the more so since the intervention of Bulgaria has weakened the prospects of success for the Allies in the Balkans, at least for the present.

Had Greece and Italy come forward resolutely in aid of Serbia, perchance Rumania would also have done her part, but as things stand the ruler of that country does not like to take a leap in the dark. She imitates the pre-eminently utilitarian policy of Greece and Bulgaria, despite the fact that the majority of the Rumanian people sympathise very strongly with the Allies, and especially with France. How long Rumania can retain her neutrality is doubtful. Certain Russian journals already urge its violation if the passage of Russian troops is necessary, though La Nación thinks this violation improbable. It would place the conduct of Russia on a different footing to that of her Allies, and has no precedent in the case of Salonica, since Greece allowed the landing at that port. In short, La Nación believes that Rumania will await events, though she may wait too late, since the Allies, deprived of her aid, will use all their strength to carry matters through on their own initiative and thus intensify their triumph, of which M. Také Jonescu, the leading Rumanian interventionist, is assured.

AGGRAVATING THE CRISIS

(La Prensa.—October 19).

Observation tends to show that a crisis in animal growth tends to show itself in the development of parasitic diseases. Beasts and plants that are pining away usually suffer from tick or green fly. Man and the social state are subject to the same law, remarks La Prensa; the decadence of ethic or economic strength being always marked by the growth of enervating parasites. Exhausted Athens suffered from the vile tyranny of the rhetores; the Middle Ages, in their poverty, fell a prey to the usurer. It is, continues La Prensa, a natural phenomenon reproduced whenever the circumstances of society are propitious, as the present state of Argentina bears witness.

The financial difficulties that afflict the government and the people, have given rise to a new form of collective and individual energy; the business of collecting money. For the dwellers in the metropolis, the giving of alms has become a tribute. At every moment and in every place the passerby is compelled to open his purse. One might in justice say that there is no trade more widespread at the present time than that of making people prove their charity. There is the beggar who flaunts his rags and feebleness in the streets; the youth who extends a muscular hand on the pretext that he cannot get the work he ever avoids; the altruistic lady who begs on behalf of her poor pensioners; the sentimental child who barters flowers for nlekels on behalf of pious or charitable objects; agents of all manner of associations, calling at every door with subscription lists, theatre tickets, collecting boxes, anything and everything that will gather money either to relieve misery, or to attain determined ends, is pressed into service. The whole thing, says La Prensa, is overdone, and tends to give a note of despondency and uneasiness to the formerly contented city. Ingenuity is racked to find new methods of getting people to pay, and the difficulties of the private and public wealth are not so extreme as to justify this intensification of parasitic life. It is very much overdone, and La Prensa concludes by saying that the moment is overdue for setting a limit to this systematic exploitation of the public.

FLAX PRODUCTION

(La Prensa.—October 20).

In 1913 the world's production of linseed was 2,632,000 tons, of which 1,100,000 tons corresponded to Argentina; India came second with 536,000 tons; Russia produces 530,000; and the United States 446,000. There are two valuable products derivable from linseed; the seed and the stalk, and, as La Prensa truly remarks, in this Republic five million tons of the latter go to waste every year, being burnt, when its due exploitation would yield many millions of dollars. Proof is easily had. In France, Holland and Belgium, countries where linseed is cultivated on a small scale, the returns per hectarea is between 1,200 and 1,500 francs. Here it is about $70 per hectarea, say 175 francs. The difference comes from the flax.

True, the utility of this material is not altogether unknown here. In 1912 raw flax shipped to Courtrai brought 37 francs the 100 kilos, whilst last year a well-known agriculturalist devoting eight hectares of land in Santa Fé to flax, obtained 15,000 kilos of fibre which was sold in London at 130 francs the cental. Freight cost 10 francs, leaving a net result of 120 francs. Moreover La Prensa states that the flax was sold at once, and that there is a strong demand for as much as can be shipped, even in this embryonic form. Indeed says La Prensa, it does not press for the complete introduction of flax manufacture as it is understood in Europe, the time is not ripe for that. The agricultural preparation of the fibre is all that can be attempted here just now. Conversion of the straw into fibre is a simple operation. It must be "retted," or set to macerate in water for various days. Nor are great stores of water always required, for in many parts of Argentina the natural humidity is sufficient to soften the straw, which is then "raked" to separate the fibres from the wood. This is what ought to be done to the next linseed crop by the chacareros, since high prices are assured owing to the difficulties that Russia must meet in disposing of her flax, whilst the Indian shipment will also be hampered by war conditions. Life is too easy in this country, concludes La Prensa. Hence the neglect of so many of the subsidiary profits of agriculture. All that is thought of is to rent as much camp as possible, work at sowing for a month, at harvesting for more or less the same time, and spend the intervening period in looking at the sky and hoping for a bumper crop.

DEFENDING THE CONSUMER

(La Nación.—October 20).

The war has had such a disturbing effect on the trade of the world that neutral states are forced to take arbitrary measures to avoid internal complications, remarks La Nación. For although some of these changes may be favourable, as tending to increase export values, they also tend to make living dearer for the consumer, and all the neutral lands have had to take measures to check this tendency to drain off first necessities. In normal times any unusual demand is counteracted upon by the import of similar goods from elsewhere; given a worldwide demand however, and

MISS ADELA VERNE

THIRD PIANOFORTE RECITAL

AT THE SALON TEATRO

Miss Adela Verne gave the third concert of the admirable series of her present season at the Salon Teatro, Cangallo 1362, last evening before a well-filled and enthusiastic house. Every time one hears this gifted artiste one has the illusion that she is better than before. An illusion it is, for her playing maintains a truly astonishing high level of uniform excellence, and the items of her programme last night, as always, are not only fine music delightfully interpreted, but technical musical problems which are disposed of without apparent effort. The first part of last night's performance consisted chiefly of Brahms' Sonata in F. minor, and was played with intense sympathy and expression. The second part opened with Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Caprichoso, a tour de force and a most brilliant performance. Followed the "Romance without Words," a poem of sound. Chopin's delicious Nocturne in D. minor, and his Scherzo Op. 31. A storm of music.

In the third part, Alkan's "El Viento" was interpreted as Miss Verne can interpret such a piece. Literally one seemed to hear "the wind is roaring in the turret and tree," the high piping of the gale, the hoarse roar of the great tree heads, the sinister under-chant of the blast, and the deep rumble in the roofs, all the weird sounds of a stormy night. After this wild music, came the tender melody for Haydn Wood's "Slumber Song," an exquisite little thing, and Sgambati's Old Minuet air, suggesting the thin, trembling trill of the harpsichord and the stately paces of fine ladies in silk sacques, palders and horns, and beaux in bag-wigs and brocade. Miss Verne gave an actual similitude of a dead century for a moment. Schubert Tansig's Military March concluded a delightful concert, at every number of which the pianist was enthusiastically encoored and repeatedly recalled. Several floral tributes were handed up during the evening. That Miss Verne was better than usual is difficult to believe, but that she never was better it is entirely safe to affirm.

WAR DECLARED

BY FRANCE AGAINST BULGARIA.

Paris, Oct. 18.

The French Government has announced that a state of war exists between France and Bulgaria as from 6 o'clock on the morning of the 16th instant.

the only thing to do is to restrict exports.

Argentina has perforce had recourse to such remedies, even in the case of articles like sugar, and since the war is likely to be prolonged and the zone of war extended, this situation will probably be aggravated, creating a crisis that is already foreshadowed by lack of employment and reduced wages. In this case the increased value obtainable for exports is not sufficient compensation, and the country is therefore faced with a crisis of subsistence that ought, says La Nación, to be met in time, care being had that the interests of the producer and the trader are properly protected. The total production must be estimated, and the balance exportable ascertained, shipments of foodstuffs that come below this limit being prohibited. This restriction of the facility of interchange is, La Nación admits, abnormal, but is justified by exceptional circumstances, and is designed to prevent this country suffering the same difficulties and shortages that are felt by those nations concerned in the European tragedy. In view of the approaching harvest the Government will be well advised to take steps in this direction in good time.

GRANT LONGER CREDIT!U.S. BUSINESS MAN'S OPINION*ON HOW TO DEVELOP TRADE WITH ARGENTINA*(HERALD Special Interview)

That "the limited credit which the United States extends to its Argentinian customers is largely responsible for the difficulty in conducting business between the two countries," is the contention of Mr. Ellis, local manager of Park, Davis and Co., the largest pharmaceutical house in the North American continent.

Mr. Ellis claims that if the United States could be educated to adopt a more liberal financial method towards the South American countries, a livelier business would be developed.

"Much of the indisposition of the Argentine commercial man to enter into business relationship with American concerns, is a result of the cold attitude which the latter has assumed," said Mr. Ellis.

"Most American concerns have an arrogant conception of their importance in Argentina and dictate terms which make it impossible for the Argentine to do business, consequently, European firms gain the bulk of the trade."

"The fact remains," continued Mr. Ellis, "that although shipments coming from France, England and Italy are subject to various shipping irregularities, as a natural result engendered by the war little or nothing has been dropped, compared with the normal aspects in time of peace. This, more than ever tends to illustrate the reserve that exists here towards American business dealings."

Mr. Ellis has made a pretty exacting study of American methods, and although a recent arrival in Argentina from Mexico, he hopes to encourage his compatriots to adopt a more extensive plan of credit, which he thinks will undeniably tend to accentuate commercial features between the two countries.

SALE OF YEARLING BLOODSTOCKA RECORD PRICE.

At the sale of yearling bloodstock at "Tattersall's" yesterday afternoon, there were some perfect specimens of horseflesh put under the hammer, especially those of Old Man, a favourite sire and bred in the republic.

A record price this year was paid for one of the colts, namely Sal y Pimiento, by Old Man out of Sardonix (Le Sancy blood), which was sold for $32,000 to Don Diego Alvear. This same popular sportsman purchased another colt by Old Man out of Indigna by Gay Hermit for $26,000.

The double purchase of $58,000 is a record for Old Man progeny. Both colts were exceptionally fine ones, but the first was expensive as present prices have been ruling.

Elmer Reichard, a farmer, who lives near Tapalqué, in the Province of Buenos Aires, has discovered that feeding pigs on snakes imports a delicious flavour to the pork.

Reichard farm is in the wooded region between Tapalqué and Bolívar, and is infested with snakes. Reichard determined to eliminate them.

As a preliminary step he bought several specimens of a breed of small black pigs. These he turned loose in the woods.

Reichard received a surprise a few days ago in the form of a letter from a restaurant in Calle Callao, Buenos Aires, which after several weeks had succeeded in tracing to Reichard a consignment of pork which had caused much favourable comment by patrons. It appears that the pork had gained a peculiarly rich, "gamy" flavour, and the restaurant proprietor contracted with Reichard for all the pork he could raise.

The growing scarcity of snakes in his district has forced Reichard to search for substitutes.

He claims, however, that he is not positively convinced, as to the snakes as he had at various times observed the pigs eating some kind of roots, and that this probably has proven the peculiar taste of the meat.

However he has determined to see the matter to its end, and he intends to interest some of the large cattle breeding establishments here to investigate the matter, and resolve whether snakes could lend a delicious and wholesome flavour to meat.

NOTES FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM

Market Prices in Scotland for the week ending August 18, as officially recorded, indicate more clearly than ever the public are eating less butchers' meat, and are wonderfully calm under the so-called "meat famine." Aberdeen-Angus bullocks were making high prices per live cwt. in nearly all markets. In Glasgow a number of them, averaging from 10½ to 11 cwt. apiece, made up to 71s 6d, and cross-breeds averaging 11½ cwt. made 66s to 69s, while prime Irish of the same handy weights were making 64s. Bullocks were making from 63s to 71s per cwt. First-class Aberdeen-Angus bullocks generally throughout the country were making from 62s 6d to 69s 6d, and cross-breeds from 57s 9d to 67s 6d. At Aberdeen the best class of hogs were making 10½d per lb. In Dundee market a single bullock of 11 cwt. made 70s 2d, and a lot of three Aberdeen-Angus bullocks made 69s 3d. Their total weight was 33 1¼ cwt. A remarkable bunch of six prime Aberdeen-Angus crosses at Perth made up to 78s 4d per live cwt., the average price of the six being 72s 3d. So far as store stock was concerned, Highland cattle were reported slow to sell. In the dead meat market, Glasgow, pork was selling at 74s per cwt. Cheese prices were still

WAR ON SHIPPING

NEARLY 4,000,000 TONS CAPTURED

The power of the British and Allied Fleets is again demonstrated by statistics issued through the Press Association. From these it appears that the total gross tonnage of all ships captured, detained, sunk or damaged from the outbreak of hostilities in August, 1914, until the end of August, 1915, amounted to nearly 4,000,000 tons, and numbered close on 3,000 vessels. The numbers and tonnage of the various nationalities up to the end of July were:—

	Ships.	Tonnage
German	521	1,113,298
British	476	980,773
Neutral	418	593,820
Austrian	75	254,282
Allied: French, Russian, Belgian	82	128,177
Turkish	56	18,508
	1,628	3,188,858

In addition to the above, an official list, has been published of 776 vessels (ranging from a tonnage of 500 to 25,000), whose cargoes or part of them have been detained in many cases without delaying or seizing the ship itself. The details of German vessels which have been swept off the seas in all parts of the world are as under:—

	Ships.	Tonnage
Detained in U.K. and overseas ports	146	315,181
Captured in German Colonial ports	21	43,367
Captured and sunk by British	8	29,424
Captured by British	75	186,765
Detained in Egyptian ports	18	86,038
Detained in Belgian ports	89	136,920
Detained in French & Russian ports	95	112,945
Detained in Italian ports	36	153,876
Captured and sunk by Allies	4	3,822
Captured by Allies	25	37,985
Sunk or damaged by submarines, mines or explosions	4	6,975

Of the number of British vessels (80) detained in German ports, upwards of 60 were lying in the Port of Hamburg at the outbreak of war. Fifty-six British vessels were captured and sunk by the enemy cruisers Emden (which was finally cornered and sunk by the Australian warship Sydney), Leipsic, Karlsruhe, Konigsberg, Dresden, and armed German merchant vessels, all of which were eventually chased off the seas or satisfactorily accounted for. Of the British vessels sunk by submarines (a total of 104, with a tonnage of 304,428) by far the largest and most appalling was the Lusitania on May 7. The British trawlers sunk by submarines to the end of July numbered 105, of a tonnage of 15,087, in addition to 31 vessels of the same class (with a tonnage of 4,229) sunk by mines or explosions. The allied vessels captured and sunk by the enemy numbered 14, of a tonnage of 37,048, and 34 allied vessels, with a tonnage of 51,145, were sunk by submarines. The number of neutral vessels captured by the British was 22, with a tonnage of 49,743, and great public interest attaches to the forthcoming judgment of the Prize Court as to whether the cargoes of four of these (the Kim, the Alfred Nobel, the Bjornstjerne Bjornson and the Fridland) are to be condemned as conditional contraband of war, the Crown alleging that the goods (which includes 23,000,000 lbs. of lard, some rubber shipped as "gum," etc.), were actually "destined" for the enemy, although shipped in neutral vessels to Copenhagen, a neutral port. The Allies have captured 10 neutral vessels (tonnage 16,980), including the notorious Dacia (American steamer), which was sent forward as a "test" by the American owners, and was captured and taken into Brest by a French cruiser. The enemy captured and sank five neutral vessels, including the American William P. Frye, in the Atlantic last January. The list of neutral ships captured by the enemy numbered 265, with a tonnage of 333,065, but with few exceptions they were afterwards released. In some cases the captain was ordered to throw overboard his cargo. Neutral vessels sunk by German submarines number 43, with a total tonnage of 59,229. They comprised:—Norwegian 22, Danish 8, Swedish 8, Dutch 2, Portuguese 2, Greek 1. The losses of neutral vessels sunk by mines or explosions were even larger, numbering 60, comprised as follows:—Norwegian 15, Dutch 14, Swedish 14, Danish 11, American 3, Roumanian, Persian and Greek 1 each.

The Prize Court sat for the first time since the Crimean War on September 4, 1914, and from that date up to and including the sitting on Wednesday, August 25 last, sat for seventy-six days. No fewer than 700 writs were issued during that period in purely prize cases. Some idea of the magnitude of the work done in connection with the Department of the Admiralty Marshal, in whom the custody of all property in the Prize Court is vested, may be gathered from the fact that the gross proceeds of vessels and cargoes sold and freight received on cargoes released amounted to no less than £4,104,804 up to the end of August. After deducting freight, expenses of realisation, etc., which amounted to £1,161,000, the balance represents the net amount standing to the credit of the Prize Fund at the present moment. In addition to the above, over 5,000 claims in respect of cargo have been dealt with in the Procurator-General's office since the war began. When vessels or goods have been actually condemned or sold the proceeds are handed over to the Consolidated Fund, and up to the present there has been no distribution of prize money among the captors.

As may be supposed, from the large number of captures and the variety of ships, the cargoes have comprised nearly every conceivable class of merchandise. Some of the ships have been taken over for Government work and many cargoes have been purchased by the Government for use in the interests of the nation. One of the most puzzling captures was a cargo of 14 alligators, some frogs, snakes, etc., and animals intended for a German Zoo. It is said that they are now being exhibited as "Prisoners of War" somewhere in the West of England. There have been cargoes of wheat, iron ore, steel rails, provisions, ponies (which stampeded on landing at Leith), human hair, musical and surgical instruments, nitrates, buffalo horns, elephant tusks, African and Indian curiosities, human intestines, machinery, clothing, coffee, tea, sugar, cocoa, wines, lard, rubber, mechanical toys, sausage skins, tooth picks, mouth organs, etc.

FOUND DROWNED

MISSING THIRD OFFICER OF THE HIGHLAND HARRIS.

On Thursday night, Oct. 14, the body of Ralph Peterson, the 3rd officer of the 'Highland Harris,' was discovered floating near the South Dock. The corpse was picked up by two dock policemen, who immediately notified the Nelson Line of their discovery.

Last Friday, the "Highland Harris," one of the boats belonging to the Nelson Line, arrived in this port with a general cargo. Ralph Peterson, the third officer, left the boat accompanied by an engineer and the wireless operator. They spent the evening in a café, and subsequently Peterson's companions returned to the boat to report for duty and left him in town.

HENDERSON.—On the 15th inst. at Calle Vidal 1918, Belgrano, Marjory Strachan Dewar, relict of the late Robert Henderson, aged 76 years.

Everything maintained a solemn quietude on the boat until suddenly, about midnight, a splash was heard. The engineer on duty hastened to the bow of the vessel, but when he arrived all was still. In the morning, Ralph Peterson was missing. A search was instituted, but he could not be found. On Thursday, as already stated, the police perceived a floating object drifting in the water. They took a small boat and removed that which transpired to be the body of Peterson from the river.

The deceased officer was on his first trip to the Argentine, as he had formerly been sailing on the Elder Dempster boats to West Africa. He was only twenty-four years of age, thick-set and robust, but rather below the medium height. Born in Liverpool, he leaves behind a mother and two sisters to mourn his loss.

The funeral took place on October 15. All on board went to pay their solemn respects to their dead comrade. There were also present two representatives of each Nelson boat in port. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. H. Westby Brady.

King George's Order of the Day

SPIRITED TRIBUTE TO JOFFRE'S FORCES

Confidence in Victory of Allied Arms

Paris, Oct. 27.

The French Commander-in-Chief has issued the following Order of the Day:—

"I have the pleasure to transmit to the Army an Order of the Day which His Majesty of England has graciously addressed to you on the occasion of His Majesty's visit to the front.

"Soldiers of France:

"I am happy at having been able to realise a desire which has long held my heart, to express my profound admiration of your heroic deeds, the keen tenacity of purpose and the admirable military valour which are the worthy heritage of the Army of France.

"Under the brilliant direction of your eminent Commander-in-Chief and the distinguished officers associated with him, officers and men have won the regard of your beloved country, which will always recognise your valiant efforts to safeguard and defend her.

"My armies are proud to fight beside you and have you as comrades. May the ties which unite you be permanent! May the two countries ever be united in intimate ties!

"Soldiers! Accept my most cordial and sincere salutations. I do not doubt you will continue this gigantic struggle to a victorious conclusion. In the name of my soldiers and my country I express to you my most cordial greetings and best wishes."

"The President of the Republic who accompanied the King joins with him in extending his personal congratulations to those addressed to you by His Majesty."

20,000 Volunteers

CANADA'S RESPONSE TO KING GEORGE'S PROCLAMATION.

New York, Oct. 26.

Despatches from Montreal report that since the King's proclamation appeared there has been an extraordinary increase in Canada of the number of volunteers. Since then, over 20,000 men have volunteered for service, most of whom have had some military training and will soon be fit to take their places in the firing line.

Munitlons For All

LLOYD GEORGE STATES BRITISH DEPOTS ARE NOW FULL.

New York, Oct. 27.

Despatches from London say that Mr. Lloyd George has informed several journalists that despite the enormous expenditure of ammunition in the Allies' last offensive, the British ammunition depots are full, and contain sufficient to meet all the requirements of the campaign.

Several more factories have been established and are beginning work. If the output continues at the same rate as hitherto, England will soon be in a position to supply Russia and Serbia.

The Lost Transport

La Courtine Taken

IMPORTANT FRENCH SUCCESS IN THE CHAMPAGNE REGION.

London, Oct. 27.

Communications from the north of France report that the capture by the French of La Courtine has been followed by numerous attempts by the enemy to recover the position, all of which were failed.

This French success is one of considerable importance in that it has resulted in the straightening out of the line to the southwest of Tahure.

Three lines of trenches which formed the defences of La Courtine were found to be piled up with German corpses. The gunners were lying chained to the guns they had been serving.

The capture of La Courtine seriously imperils 25 kilometres of the German lines, as the place constituted the last barrier to the continuation of the French offensive along the Champagne front. Here as elsewhere on this line important operations are commencing and are being actively developed.

GERMANY'S AGED REINFORCEMENTS.

Amsterdam, Oct. 27.

Information has been received that the Germans are concentrating reinforcements in Belgium in anticipation of a resumption of the offensive by the Allies on a grand scale.

The new German levies are only half-trained and are mostly men of rather advanced years. The inference is that the Germans are sending their best troops to Russia and the Balkans.

BELGIAN SUCCESSES ON THE YSER.

London, Oct. 27.

A despatch from Havre reports that the Belgians in the vicinity of the Yser have recommenced operations against the Germans.

Heavy artillery firing has been going on for some hours. The Belgians have advanced and driven the enemy out of several of his advanced posts taking hundreds of prisoners and several cannon and machine guns. The engagement is still progressing.

MORE TEUTON FAILURES.

Paris, Oct. 27.

An official bulletin issued this evening says:—

"South of Loos our aeroplanes drove back and dispersed by their fire strong patrols of the enemy.

"In the Champagne district in the course of last night the Germans attempted a new attack against our trenches at La Courtine; but they were checked immediately by our infantry fire and machine guns and failed completely.

"The night was calm on the rest of the front."

ASQUITH MUST GO!

Blunt Hint by the "Morning Post"

THREAT OF FORMATION OF NATIONAL PARTY

London, Oct. 27.

The "Morning Post," in an editorial article which threatens the Government with the formation of a new party, remarks on the delay of the Government in jettisoning the Declaration of London. It frankly advises the Government to adopt the suggestion that has been made for a smaller and less unwieldy Cabinet.

The article continues: "We seem to remember the time when Mr. Asquith displayed something of energy, skill and resource, and his Government was respected. What a reputation he might reap if his country were dearer to him than his ease! But if that is beyond him let him hand the management of affairs over to others.

"A reduction in the Cabinet, for example, is a necessary reform, without which there is no hope of a satisfactory handling of the war. If this is not done, there are those who will place the truth before Parliament and the country. They will have to create a National party to oppose the Government and fight it even in the midst of the war to get the reforms which are necessary if this country is to win."

Kultur's Victims

TERRIBLE EFFECT OF EXPLOSIVES USED IN LAST ZEPPELIN RAID.

New York, Oct. 27.

It is reported from London that the doctors who attended to the victims of the last Zeppelin raid on the British capital state that in many cases persons had their limbs blown off by the mere explosion of a bomb, without having been struck by any of the fragments. The bombs contained explosives of a power hitherto unknown.

Persons were killed by a bomb exploding within twenty yards of them, although no wounds were visible.

Peace, or--?

London, Oct. 26.

A despatch from Madrid says, regarding the visit of Prince von Buelow to the Spanish capital, that the Prince's brother-in-law, Prince de Campo, states that the former will place in the possession of King Alfonso and President Wilson the terms upon which Germany is prepared to make peace.

SERBIA CALLS TO ENGLAND FOR AID

Desperate Plight of Little Balkan Kingdom

LORD LANSDOWNE DESCRIBES SITUATION AS "SERIOUS."

Allies May Create Diversion at Enos

London, Oct. 27.

The morning papers publish an appeal from Serbia for prompt and speedy aid from England for Serbia's superhuman efforts to defend her existence against the Austro-German and Bulgarian invaders who have condemned her to death.

The appeal says:—"For twenty days our common enemies have tried to annihilate us. Despite the heroism of our soldiers, our resistance cannot be expected to be maintained indefinitely."

LORD LANSDOWNE DESCRIBES THE SITUATION AS "MOST SERIOUS."

London, Oct. 27.

Large numbers of British troops are now on the sea going to oppose the advance of the Teutons in the Balkans.

It is now admitted by Lord Lansdowne in the House of Lords that new and important plans are under the consideration of the British and French War Office, which will take shape according to the course of events in the Near East when the new forces arrive there.

Lord Lansdowne added that he believed it to be probable that the plans would deal with the landing of troops in Turkey with Enos as base of operations.

He confessed that the situation of Serbia was most serious, and that there was small chance of holding back the Teutonic advance before the enemy was in possession of the railways through Serbia to Bulgaria.

CRITICAL PLIGHT OF SERBIANS NORTH OF NISH.

London, Oct. 27.

The reports from Salonica that the French have driven the Bulgarians from Southern Serbia have not served to relieve the anxiety regarding the Serbian troops in the north, whose plight is described by Lord Lansdowne as extremely critical. It is now believed that a miracle would be necessary to save the Serbians north of Nish.

"BOTH KINGDOMS NEAR SUBJECTION."

An appeal from M. Pasitch, the Serbian Premier, intimates that the Serbians are at the last stage. To this was added to-day an appeal from King Nicholas of Montenegro to King Victor Emmanuel for aid in repelling the Austro-Germans. It appears that both kingdoms are near subjection.

The Austro-German forces in the two kingdoms are now within twenty miles of each other, south-west and south-east of Belgrade. The invading armies are advancing along a hundred mile front and are respectively twenty-five and forty miles south of the Danube.

An analysis of the situation on the Belgrade-Nish-Salonica railway shows that the Germans command fifty miles from Belgrade, the Serbians the next 150, the Bulgarians the next 100, and the French the last 50 miles to the Greek frontier.

SERBIANS EXPECTED TO RE-CAPTURE VELES.

Latest details state that the re-capture by the Serbians of Veles, and the establishment of communications between Hungary and Bulgaria by way of the Danube, are imminent.

"I shall Die With My Country"

KING PETER'S SPLENDID CALL TO SERBIA.

Rome, Oct. 26.

A telegram of German origin says that King Peter of Serbia has issued the following proclamation:—

"Age has taken my arms from me, who was elected your King for the defence of the Fatherland. I am but a feeble old man, and can do nothing but bless Serbia, her soldiers, citizens, women and children. But I swear to you that if this new invasion shall bring upon us the shame of being conquered, I shall not survive the ruin, but I too shall die with my country."

Rumanian Neutrality

RUSSIA RENEWS REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF TROOPS TO FIGHT AGAINST BULGARIA.

London, Oct. 27.

It is reported from Petrograd that the Russian Government has renewed its request to be allowed to take troops through Rumanian territory.

The reply of the Rumanian Government has not been made known; but it is believed that many of the Rumanian statesmen are desirous that the permission should be granted so as to avoid complications with Russia.

PROBABLE COMPLIANCE WITH RUSSIA'S REQUEST.

Lugano, Oct. 27.

Reliable information has been received that the negotiations between Russia and Rumania are approaching an early and successful conclusion. Russia has, therefore, temporarily suspended her preparations for landing troops on the Black Sea coast of Rumania, waiting for the latter to consent to the Russian troops passing through her territory.

Spy Shot

APPEAL DISMISSED IN LONDON.

London, Oct. 26.

The Government has to-day issued the following announcement:—

"A prisoner has been tried on a serious charge of espionage, found guilty, sentenced to death, and shot."

"The prisoner appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeal, which considered the case on October 18. The appeal was dismissed, and the sentence carried out by the military authorities this morning."

KING GEORGE IN FRANCE

Conference with Poincare and King Albert

TROOPS TO BE REVIEWED

London, Oct. 26.

King George has gone to France to review the troops of the Allies.

TO "DISCUSS CERTAIN COMPLICATIONS."

New York, Oct. 26.

Telegrams from London state that one of the main objects of His Majesty's visit to France is to see President Poincaré and discuss certain complications that have lately arisen. The meeting will probably take place at Field Marshal French's headquarters and will be attended by some of the Staff officers.

King George is also expected to visit King Albert of Belgium. The King will also confer decorations on some of the officers who have distinguished themselves during the campaign.

No Conscription!

MANIFESTO BY PRIVATE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

London, Oct. 27.

A relatively small number of members of Parliament have published a manifesto against compulsory service, on the ground that the proposed system would depopulate the factories to such an extent that Britain would be unable to fulfil her undertaking with her Allies to furnish them with munitions and financial assistance.

Besides this, compulsory military service would breed discontent among the working classes and would thus destroy the unity of the nation which is necessary in order to carry on the war with good results.

King's Call for Aid

Rome, Oct. 27.

King Nicholas of Montenegro has telegraphed to the King of Italy asking for assistance to resist the invasion of his kingdom by the Teuton forces.

COERCE GREECE!

Possibility of a Rupture

OFFER OF CYPRUS WITHDRAWN

London, Oct. 26.

Sir Edward Grey has stated in the House of Commons that the offer made to Greece by the British Government of the island of Cyprus has lapsed, Greece not having seen her way towards helping Serbia.

A Central News despatch hints at the possibility of a rupture between Greece and Italy.

A suggestion is made that Greece may carry her ideas as to neutrality to the point of interfering with the operation of the Allies in the Balkans.

A Note handed to the Greek Government by the representatives of the Allies is stated to contain an intimation that a rupture of relations might take place in the event of Greece taking such a stand or persisting in her refusal to assist Serbia.

Greek Troops Attacked?

INTERESTING RUMOUR FROM ATHENS.

London, Oct. 27.

The "Daily Mail" has received a despatch from Athens which states that Greek troops have been drawn into the fighting near the junction of the Greek, Serbian and Bulgarian boundaries. The correspondent says that the Greek frontier guards were attacked near Doiran, but repulsed their attackers with loss.

TURCO-BULGARIAN PROTEST TO GREECE.

Athens, Oct. 27.

The "Hestia" says that Bulgaria and Turkey are taking measures which are intended to determine the right of Bulgarians and Turks to pursue the Serbians and Allies into Greek territory if occasion arises.

Both Powers have made complaints of the presence of M. Zaimis among the foreign troops in Greek Macedonia, which they consider contrary to a spirit of neutrality and makes difficult the position of the Bulgarians operating in Serbian Macedonia.

M. Zaimis has recalled the fact that Greece protested to the Allies when they landed troops at Salonica.

The Bulgarian Press has commenced a campaign against the presence of the Allied troops in Salonica.

An advance upon Kladio immediately followed, and at four o'clock on the Tuesday morning the place was in flames, the Serbians having themselves started many of the fires.

The refugees from Kladio to the Rumanian shore of the Danube included the civil authorities and several Serbian officers.

THE BERLIN VERSION.

London, Oct. 27.

A telegram from Rotterdam to the "Daily Telegraph" says that it is semi-officially announced in Berlin that all the important harbours of eastern Serbia in the Danube are in possession of the Bulgarians. Further access for the Serbians by way of Rumania is therefore stopped.

The Serbian town of Radujevatz has been completely destroyed in the fighting, and Monastir is evacuated by the Serbians.

"In the Balkans our forces advancing from Visegrad drove the enemy back to the frontier.

"The Royal and Imperial army operating in the north-west corner of Serbia is approaching the upper Kolubara and the Valjevo positions which the Serbians evacuated before our cavalry.

"Austro-Hungarian divisions sent south from Obrenovatz wrested from the enemy, after fierce fighting, a strong position on a hill south of Obrenovatz.

"The Germans have driven the enemy across the Arangjelovne river. These forces are engaged in battle at Topola and in the hills to the east of the mountainous country.

"The bend of the Danube east of the Klissura narrows has been for the greater part cleared of all hostile forces. Three cannon abandoned by the Serbians, including one howitzer, were captured here."

NISH STILL SAFE!

Invading Forces Checked

ANGLO-FRENCH FORCES DEFEAT BULGARIANS

New York, Oct. 27.

A special telegram to the "New York Herald" from Salonica says:—

"The Bulgarians operating in south-eastern Serbia have met with a smashing defeat at the hands of the Franco-British troops acting in unison with the Serbians in the region between Krindalo, Lukedovan and Veles. The Bulgarians are now in retreat from the neighbourhood of Veles toward Istib, closely pursued by the victors.

"The Franco-Serbian Allies are attacking the foe from two sides along the Salonica-Nish railway near Vranja and the Kumanovo district. It is believed that the campaign will compel the Bulgarians to abandon their hold on the railway.

"For the present Nish is safe. The invaders have been checked to the north-east of the capital. The Austro-Germans are making but little headway; their advance guards have reached the foothills of the mountains in which the Serbians will make their most determined stand."

ITALIANS CONTINUE TO PROGRESS.

Rome, Oct. 27.

Official reports state that on the 25th inst. the Italians completed the conquest of the left bank of the Ponale in the Ledro valley, occupying the towns of Mezzolago, Molina and Biacesa, and capturing some prisoners.

Yesterday the positions which the Italian forces captured south of the Loppio depression known as Dosso Casina and Dosso Remit were heavily bombarded by the enemy's artillery on Monte Creino and by the Riva fortifications, without making any impression on the captors who were solidly established in these positions.

On the Alto Cordevolo and the Alto Rienzo the Italians continue to press the enemy. An Italian raiding party from the valley of the Pontebbana mountain stream reached the summit of the Roskofel and damaged the enemy's defences.

Along the Isonzo front artillery combats continue, while the Italian infantry are strengthening their hold upon the newly acquired positions. Some small counter-attacks in the Plava zone and on the Carso were repulsed, the enemy losing 39 prisoners.

The paper states that the "Jena Zeitung" is in possession of a letter in the Prince's handwriting dated Paris, July 1, 1914, promising to marry her within six months, declaring her his sole heiress and requesting his father to pay her two million crowns in case of his death.

CADORNA'S GRAND OFFENSIVE

Italian Army Advances Along a Three Hundred Mile Front

NEW YORK, OCT. 26.

A SPECIAL TELEGRAM FROM ROME TO THE "NEW YORK HERALD" REPORTS A DESPERATE ATTACK BY THE ITALIANS ALONG THEIR ENTIRE LINE OF 300 MILES.

FOR SIXTY HOURS THERE WAS AN ALMOST CONTINUOUS BOMBARDMENT OF THE ENEMY'S POSITIONS, IN WHICH THE ITALIAN ARTILLERY DID FEARFUL EXECUTION.

THE ITALIANS REPORT HAVING EITHER KILLED OR INCAPACITATED AT LEAST 25,000 AUSTRIANS ON THE ISONZO AND IN THE CARSO REGION ALONE. HERE THE SUCCESSES OF THE ATTACK WERE THE MOST MARKED. MORE THAN 100 OFFICERS AND 5,000 MEN WHO HAD BEEN TAKEN PRISONERS HAVE ARRIVED AT UDINE FROM THAT FRONT.

The Italian left wing is making a notable advance, pushing forward and up the inclined plane of the rugged ground often described as 'sponge,' where every hollow makes a natural fortress. In spite of this the Italians are sweeping eastward of Peteano towards the northern margin of the Carso plateau, where it merges into the Vipaco valley.

The fortress of Gorizia is reported to have been captured. From that point the bridgehead formed by Sabinotino, Podgora and Peuma is exposed to bombardment by the Italians. The artillery fighting is of a more than ordinarily terrible character.

The Austrians stationed along the mountain sides met their death when hundreds of the Italian cannon poured their fire into every crevice, dislodging hundreds of tons of granite and stones, which, rolling down the mountain, filled the Austrian trenches and buried the defenders beneath them.

The greatest satisfaction is felt over the conquest of Fort Orzli after efforts which have spread over five months. The position dominates Tolmine from the north-west, where the Italians have buried more than three hundred Austrians.

The Italian airmen continue their activities. In a raid they made on Trieste they had the misfortune to kill two citizens and injure twelve others with their exploding bombs.

A report from Malta says that more Italian classes have been summoned to the colours to enable Italy to co-operate in the Balkans.

GREAT FIGHT FOR DVINSK

Russian Army Still Stems Tide of Teuton Advance.

WINTER ARRIVES TO ASSIST TSAR'S FORCES

King George Exchanges Telegrams With the Tsar.

London, Oct. 28.

The "Daily Chronicle's" Petrograd correspondent states that near the left bank of the Dvina, a severe struggle is proceeding for the possession of two villages opposite the Islet of Dalen, which are of great importance. Two and a half miles south of Dalen the bank is in German hands, while at Klange, the river bank is held by the Russians.

The Germans are endeavouring to force a way to the Isle of Dalen to obtain command of the railway leading to Riga.

At Klange, the Russians are firmly resisting, and maintaining themselves, keeping up a fierce fire. The Germans are ready to seize any opportunity that may offer farther west at Olai to secure their flank. The main struggle is round Dalen.

At a point eighteen miles south-east of Riga, on the Drina, six desperate attacks by the Germans have been bloodily repulsed by the Russian infantry and artillery.

The theory is advanced that Riga operations may be a demonstration intended to divert attention from Dvinsk.

Certainly the Germans want Riga very badly, and may be trying a strategic move, but the Russians while holding tightly to Riga show no signs of neglecting Dvinsk, where guns are being emplaced and ammunition accumulated. After fierce attacks the blackened ruins of Illoukst have been recaptured to the northwest. The Germans may try to fire Dvinsk, but conditions are not wholly in their favour, and the extensive forest affords ample cover to the Russians between Illoukst and Dvinsk. The Germans have already been checked at the edge of the forest. Should they come up river they will be exposed to a terrific Russian fire.

The whole trend of operations and manoeuvres denotes the insistent advance of the Russians toward the Railway, while the haste of the Germans to reach Dvinsk and to force the Dvina, is now comprehensible for snow has begun to fall and the terrible Russian winter is setting in early.

GERMAN OFFENSIVE CHECKED.

Petrograd, Oct. 27.

An official bulletin announces as follows:

"Along our front in the region of Friedrichstadt there have been small engagements.

"On the left bank of the Dvina, northwest of Jacobstadt, and in the forest region west of Livenhof there have only been actions with small detachments.

"Near Dvinsk, in the region east of Illoukst, furious fighting with the advancing Germans continues incessantly. After the occupation of Illoukst the Germans attempted to develop an offensive, but were stopped on the border of a forest west of that place.

"Attempts by the enemy to make progress east of the village of Poghilina and towards the south of Illoukst were repulsed.

"South of Lake Mezzoum the artillery combats have been very violent, also the artillery duels on the Demmen and Dreswiaty lakes.

"Along the front on lakes Dreswiaty, Boginskoie, Mladziol, Barotche and Vichgevskoie, engagements occurred at many points without appreciable result for either side.

"Among the more important was that near the village of Jdesile, west of lake Boginskoie, where the enemy was dislodged. Another encounter resulted in the capture by our troops of the village of Petrocha west of Koziary."

Russia's Food Problem

6,000 CARS DETAINED AT MOSCOW.

London, Oct. 27.

Despatches from Petrograd say that the Ministerial Council has empowered the Minister of the Interior, Councillor Khovtsoff, to take urgent measures in order to cope with the food problem in the Russian Empire.

During his tour in the southern regions the Minister ascertained that six thousand cars loaded with food-stuffs had been detained at Moscow. He explained to a reporter of the "Novoc Vremya" that the principal cause of the increase in the prices of articles of food was due to the congestion of traffic at Raizan, Tula, Orel and other places, and to the failure of the Municipal authorities to adopt steps for facilitating the delivery of freight. In order to remedy the existing state of affairs it is proposed to organise companies of refugees and soldiers for carrying the goods to destination, also to requisition dray horses for the wagons.

Munitions Shortage

REPORTED TO HAVE SPREAD TO GERMANY.

Amsterdam, Oct. 26.

It is asserted in the military circles of this city that the Germans are beginning to run short of munitions notwithstanding the enormous output of the German and Austro-Hungarian factories.

This is borne out by the report that since the addition of the Serbian campaign to the already numerous sources of expenditure of war material, the Central Empires have given instructions for economy in expenditure in order that it may not be necessary to suspend operations on certain of the principal lines.

It is quite possible that there is a shortage of raw material in Germany and that the making of ammunitions is not proceeding with the same smoothness as at the commencement of the war.

ITALY'S "HAUL"

COTTON SEIZED WHILE IN TRANSIT TO GERMANY.

New York, Oct. 23.

According to Captain Batchelor, of the Liverpool Salvage Association, who arrived yesterday by the Baltic from Liverpool, American cotton valued approximately at $50,000,000, which had been shipped from the United States consigned to Germany is in the possession of the Italian Government.

The captain says that some months before Italy joined the Allies all cotton consigned to Germany through Italy was being detained on various pretexts, one of the last of which was the shortage of cars. To overcome this, Germany sent to Italy a large consignment of rolling stock. Italy is now in possession of both cars and cotton.

THANKSGIVING DAY

PROCLAIMED FOR NOV. 25.

Washington, Oct. 22.

President Wilson has proclaimed November 25 as selected for the celebration of Thanksgiving Day. The announcement is accompanied by the following declaration:

"The year now drawing to a close has been one of special blessings for us. Another year of peace has been vouchsafed for us. We have been able to assert our rights without thereby causing a breach in our friendship with the great nations with which we have had to deal.

"Our crops have been more and more abundant. Our ample financial resources have enabled us to exercise a steadying influence upon the markets of the world and facilitate the necessary movement of commerce which the war might otherwise have rendered impossible.

"We have prospered while other peoples have been at war. Our prosperity has been vouchsafed to us, we believe, only in order that we might the better perform those functions which the war has rendered impossible for the warring nations to perform."

"W. G." DEAD

FAMOUS CRICKETER SUCCUMBS AT AGE OF 67.

London, Oct. 23.

The death is announced, at the age of 67, of the famous English cricketer, Dr. W. G. Grace.

("W.G.," as he was familiarly known by every cricketer in the British Empire, first made his name as a cricketer of the first rank when at the age of sixteen he played for South Wales against the Gentlemen of Sussex at Brighton, when he scored 170 and 56 not out. Unsurpassed as a bat, he was an excellent bowler and very good in the field. His list of performances is too lengthy to appear here).

HEART FAILURE.

The cause of the death of the late Dr. William Gilbert Grace, was heart failure.

The great cricketer practically retired in 1906, although he played club cricket until the season of 1913.

"HELL LET LOOSE"THE BATTLE OF CHAMPAGNE*HORRORS CAUSED BY FRENCH ARTILLERY FIRE

New York, Oct. 21.

Mr. W. P. Simms, the American war correspondent with the French in the western front, who has recently visited the scene of the battle of Champagne, gives the following account of his impressions:—

"It seemed to me, standing in the middle of the field of battle, as though the Day of Judgment had arrived and I was alone, wandering over the scarred surface of the earth. As far as the eye could reach one saw nothing but a vast undulating waste. Rising from the white, chalky soil were the dead and dusty stumps of forests of trees, blasted and withered, standing against the horizon, intermingled with arms, legs and other fragments of bodies which emitted a horrible stench.

"This was the work of the French artillery. Here, in this spot where Hell was let loose, there were, and are still, many Germans.

"For three days they let me wander over the conquered ground. Before doing so, many officers and soldiers had told me of the effects of the French shells; but, prepared as I was, and despite all that I had hitherto witnessed, I was perfectly dumbfounded by what I saw.

"Over a surface of ten square miles practically no vegetation remained. Not even the rabbits or rats had escaped. About three million shells were, during three days, showered on the ground, making pits of enormous depth and in some cases 150 feet in width. The whole field was covered with white dust.

DEMORALISED PRISONERS.

"I was told by a General that the demoralisation of the Germans reached such a pitch that the prisoners were sent to the rear without escort, merely being conducted by a guide. For days many of them were almost crazed.

"Numbers of entire regiments of French soldiers are trying to clear up the field of battle, having been employed at it since the battle; but the task is so gigantic that as yet they do not appear to have made much impression upon it.

"Every day fresh quantities of supplies of war or heaps of rotting corpses of Germans are extracted from the excavations, as from a new Pompeii.

"What first met my gaze was a fragment of shell, a shrub torn up by the roots and a bloody and withered hand. Protruding from a ruined trench was something that looked like an old bag, from which there hung a hand and a leg. It was a blue tunic containing the trunk of a human body. Under the fire of the French batteries the trenches had been transformed into tombs.

"All this shows what is necessary in order to advance. Without this upheaval of the earth the infantry would have had their advance paralysed by the German guns.

TEUTONS IN TURRETS.

"The enemy's trenches were cut, in a zig-zag form, to a depth of as much as eight feet. The whole line was defended by innumerable machine guns and by numbers of turrets of steel four inches in thickness, with revolving tops and furnished with 50 mm. quickfiring.

"Each of these turrets held three men who, according to the French, were locked in. I personally inspected one of these captured turrets. The doors were locked and fastened from the outside with chains. Inside were the soldiers, uninjured but insensible.

"The French General commanding the Fourth Army told me that it had taken two months to get ready for the attack. For this purpose 500

GIGANTIC BOMB PLOT IN THE STATESBLOW PLANNED AGAINST MUNITIONS FACTORIES

New York, Oct. 25.

The New York Police have discovered a plot to dynamite the American munition factories which are working under contracts with the Allies.

The German lieutenant Fay, who was at the battle of the Marne, has been arrested, along with several other accomplices, and the materials and tools for making bombs have been taken from them.

NEW YORK POLICE ARRESTS.

New York, Oct. 25.

Immense sensation has been caused by the announcement in the evening papers of the discovery of a German plot to blow up the munitions factories.

One of the conspirators arrested by the police is a German named Daeche, who, like Lieutenant Fay, also in custody, is an expert in the manufacture of explosives.

A WIDESPREAD PLOT.

New York, Oct. 25.

Lieutenant Robert Fay, of the 16th Prussian Infantry, and his brother-in-law, J. Scholtz, a German resident of this city holding first citizenship papers, were arrested while experimenting on high power explosives in the Grantwood Forest, N.J., it being arranged that the magistrates of the court of Weehawken should take the case.

Upon being brought before the Court Fay confessed that he had been sent by the German secret police on the recommendation of the Colonel of his regiment, with the object of "interfering" with the shipments of arms and ammunition to the Allies.

Fay afterwards told the reporters that he received 200 dollars from the head of the German Secret Service at Brussels when he started for the United States. On arriving here he communicated his project to dynamite the factories of arms and ammunition to Captains Boyed and Von Papen of the German Embassy. These opposed the idea being put into execution in the United States, but had no objection to it being done in Canada.

This morning a German named Paul Daeche, a supposed accomplice, was arrested, and it is expected that many more arrests will take place. The newspapers devote whole pages to the most fantastic reports.

RUSSIA'S NEW LORNAN ISSUE OF 5,500 MILLION ROUBLES.

London, Oct. 25.

A telegram from Petrograd states that the Russian Government proposes to place a loan of 5,500 million roubles on the foreign market.

kilometres of fresh trenches had been excavated, wide enough in places for two horses to pass abreast. Many new lines of rails were laid along muddy roads. I walked along thirteen kilometres of one of these lines of rails, which had been constructed in such a manner that troops and convoys could pass without being seen by the enemy.

TWO MONTHS OF PREPARATION

"When all was ready the artillery came into action, and the battle for which two months' preparation had been necessary was terminated practically in a single day. The subsequent fighting was in reality no more than the finishing touch to the work. Attacks and counter-attacks are still going on here and there; but there has been no material alteration in the original result."

TO FIGHT ZEPPELINSBRITAIN'S NEW DIRIGIBLE

London, Oct. 21.

The public were present last night at the trial of a new dirigible for use against the Zeppelins.

Thousands of persons beheld it rise with great rapidity to an altitude of 10,000 feet, at which height it executed various difficult manoeuvres. The motors of the new dirigible are noiseless, and are smaller than those of a Zeppelin.

It is believed that with a few more of the same type it will be possible to defend the city against any number of Zeppelins.

TRIAL OVER THE METROPOLIS.

London, Oct. 21.

The "Daily Express" says that Londoners have had an opportunity of seeing Britain's mystery airship in a trial flight over the metropolis.

At 6.43 p.m. a small dark cigarlike shape was suddenly discerned over the Thames, travelling at considerable speed. It seemed to be flying at a much greater height than the Zeppelins do at night. At an altitude of ten thousand feet the sound of the engines was inaudible even to the keenest ears. The airship appeared to be somewhat smaller than the German machine.

REPRISALS DEMANDEDGERMANY CONFISCATES ALL ALLIES' PROPERTY WITHIN HER DOMAINS.

London, Oct. 25.

The "Daily Mail" urges the Government, in view of the seizure by the Germans of all property held in that country by subjects of the Allies, to adopt similar steps in regard to property held by Germans in the British Empire.

Official reports published in July showed that the value of German property in the United Kingdom amounted to £97,000,000. Adding deposits in the British banks and other property, the total comes to £125 millions.

It is hard to say what part of this amount belongs to Austrians. Probably not more than 15 or 20 millions sterling. But as Austria is not interfering with property held by subjects of her enemies there is no cause for confiscating Austrian property in the United Kingdom.

In addition to the foregoing, Germans and Austrians possess in the British colonies property to the value of £15,000,000; while in India, the Malay States and other small Crown colonies their possessions are rated at £20,000,000. Altogether, the total works out as something like £200,000,000, and the Government would do well to bear them in mind when the time came for taking reprisals.

"TRAFALGAR DAY"

London, Oct. 21.

Trafalgar Day was celebrated by a campaign by the Red Cross for funds in aid of the wounded soldiers. The Order of St. John of Jerusalem started the contribution with a gift of £5,000.

New York, Oct. 25.

A telegram from Udine says that since the commencement of the Austro-Italian campaign the Italian general attack from the frontier of Switzerland to the Adriatic is estimated to have cost the enemy 25,000 prisoners, while the killed and wounded are placed at upwards of 100,000.

The Italian losses in killed, wounded and prisoners, according to official figures, have amounted to 45,000 altogether, which is the lowest percentage of any of the belligerents.

PRINZ ADALBERT SUNKGERMAN CRUISER LOST IN THE BALTIC

New York, Oct. 25.

(Note.—The Prinz Adalbert was an armoured cruiser of 8858 tons displacement, launched in 1903. Her armament consisted of four 8.2 inch, ten 5.9 inch, twelve 3.4 inch and three 1.4 inch guns, and four quickfiring. Her speed was 20.3 knots and her complement was 504 men.)

MURDERS BY HUNSSWISS PROTEST AND DEMAND FOR INDEMNITY.

Cantacuzene, the former Minister of Justice in the Rumanian Cabinet, has been arrested by the Austrian authorities at Salzburg while on the way back to Rumania. The reason given is that M. Cantacuzene was the bearer of a letter to M. Filipescu.

The despatch adds that the Bucharest newspapers unanimously demand the intervention of the Rumanian Government.

MURDERED IN THE EARLY MORNING

The Killing of Nurse Cavell

Civilisation's Horror and Indignation

London, Oct. 22.

The "Daily Chronicle" has received a communication from its correspondent in Rome saying that he has learned that the English nurse, Miss Cavell, who was accused of espionage at Brussels was dragged from prison to a place of execution and there shot by a German officer.

The representatives of the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Government of the United States have protested to Germany against the act.

London, Oct. 23.

One of seventeen documents published by the Foreign Office with reference to the execution of Miss Cavell was a letter from the United States Minister, Mr. Whitlock, at Brussels, to Baron Von Lanken, the German Civil Governor of the place, which was worded as follows:—

"I have just heard that Miss Edith Cavell, of English nationality, and therefore under the protection of this legation, has been sentenced by Court martial to death.

"I shall not enter upon an analysis of the facts which have led to this terrible sentence; but I have to say that if the information I have received is correct, this sentence is a more severe one than has been applied in other cases of a like nature.

"I therefore appeal to your feelings of generosity and humanity on behalf of Miss Cavell, to obtain a commutation of the sentence. Miss Cavell, who was head nurse at the Brussels Medical Institute, has passed her life in alleviating the sufferings of her fellow creatures. Since the beginning of the war she has attended to wounded German soldiers in the same way as to those of the Allies. Even were it for no other reason, the services she has rendered to humanity have been such as to inspire compassion in all hearts and move one to beg for her pardon."

This letter received no reply beyond a refusal to stay execution and give the diplomats time to address the Kaiser.

"HER NAME WILL BE ENCIRCLED BY A HALO."

London, Oct. 23.

Among the innumerable Press comments on the execution of Miss Cavell by the Germans in Belgium, the "Daily Mail" says that the Germans have done to death a woman who had devoted all her life to the suffering, merely because she showed pity on the unfortunate beings who have come back from the German prisons.

The authorities at Brussels deceived the United States Minister who had done everything in his power to save Miss Cavell, by hastening the execution, fearing that their victim would escape.

The "Sketch" says that the name of Miss Cavell will be encircled by a halo in history for ever, while that of her brutal assassin Von Bissing will be shrouded in infamy.

A MIDNIGHT MURDER.

The "Morning Post" declares that in no other instance is the German character delineated more clearly. The execution, perpetrated at midnight, of a defenceless woman who had committed no other crime than of having shown feelings of pity and compassion, demonstrates that the German possesses the brutal instincts of primitive man.

Another paper says that Miss Cavell was condemned to death by the officers of the men whom she had nursed, and was shot by their comrades. This is how Germany repays the charity of strangers. Her crime consisted only of harbouring her wounded fellow countrymen and some Belgian women who, if she had lived, she would have helped to cross the Netherlands frontier. Her judges condemned her to death on the Monday evening and shot her at two o'clock on the following morning.

It was an execution such as this that cost Napoleon his empire.

THE GREATEST CRIME OF THE WAR.

New York, Oct. 23.

The London correspondent of the "New York Herald" sends a despatch saying:

"All the morning papers devote long articles to the execution of Miss Cavell, reported by the United States legation at Brussels. They say that it is one of the greatest crimes committed during the present war, the story of which no man can read without being moved.

"Miss Cavell had nursed hundreds of wounded men, among them not a few Germans, and no Government save that of Germany would have passed sentence of death upon such a woman. But the Germans did not confine themselves to murdering her but gave further proofs of their duplicity and brutality which must rouse the indignation of every man of honour.

TEUTONS COVERED WITH INFAMY.

"They speak of the efforts of the diplomatic representatives of the United States and Spain to save Miss Cavell's life, and recall Sir Edward Grey's expressions of gratitude to them, expressions which are undoubtedly endorsed by all Miss Cavell's countrymen.

"The papers add that those who intervened on behalf of the victim were also working for the good of the Germans themselves, to save their good name from being covered with infamy. But they failed; and their failure is an additional proof of what German militarism, duplicity and bloodthirstiness means. The execution of Miss Cavell will have worse results for Germany than any military defeat, for it shows how monstrous is the institution which Britain and her Allies are combatting.

"The terrible spectacle began at Zabern, where a young officer drew his sword upon a lame tailor to protect the honour of the German army; and the final episode has been the execution of Miss Cavell.

"It is necessary to put an end to the spectacle, as humanity cannot allow it to go on. That system must be destroyed, as, however, great may be the sacrifices, they are not so terrible as that which it is attempted to overthrow."

"CAVELL": BRITAIN'S NEW BATTLE-CRY.

London, Oct. 23.

The evening papers use equally strong language in commenting on the execution of Miss Cavell. They come to the conclusion that the German system is a menace to civilisation. The name of Miss Cavell is now a battle-cry throughout all England.

A "NECESSARY" MURDER

Paris, Oct. 25.

A despatch from Amsterdam says that the Germans are showing increasing severity towards the Belgians.

A warning has been issued that Belgians found with arms and ammunition will be subject to death, or at least ten years' hard labour, while the communities with which they lived will be fined 10,000 marks.

CRIMINALS TO REPORT.

Amsterdam, Oct. 25.

Reliable information from Brussels states that the Kaiser has summoned General Von Bissing and the civil Governor of Brussels, Von Lanken, to headquarters to report on the case of Miss Cavell.

WILLIAM THE MURDERER ASKS FOR DETAILS.

New York, Oct. 25.

It is reported from Brussels that the Kaiser has ordered the Governor of Brussels, General Von Bissing, to send him details of the trial and execution of the English nurse Miss Cavell.

APOLOGY FOR MURDER.

Amsterdam, Oct. 23.

The Brussels correspondent of the "Vossische Zeitung," describing the trial of the English nurse Miss Cavell and other persons, says that the evidence showed the existence of a regular organisation for bringing the officers and men of the Allied armies who were left in Belgium over the Dutch frontier.

Most of the thirty-five who were accused of complication in the plot did not deny the accusation; on the contrary, they declared that they considered it their duty to help their country.

The leader of the organisation, Prince Reginald Decroy, could not be arrested, but his wife is among the accused. Her chief accomplice was Miss Cavell. British and French soldiers were smuggled over the Dutch frontier with the help of Countess Belleville.

SCHEMES FOR PERPETUATING HER MEMORY.

London, Oct. 23.

The "Daily Telegraph" has started a shilling subscription list for erecting a statue to Miss Cavell, heading the list with 1,000 shillings.

The English sculptor, Sir G. J. Frampton, has offered to make the model for the statue gratis.

The newspapers make various suggestions for perpetuating the memory of the martyred lady. The "Daily Mail" proposes the foundation of an institute of trained nurses. The novelist, Mrs. Humphry Ward, suggests that Her Majesty might, in the name of the women of England, initiate the formation of a National Committee to erect a memorial tablet at St. Paul's Cathedral or at Westminster.

REPRIEVED

SENTENCE ON FRENCH LADIES COMMUTED BY THE KAISER.

Paris, Oct. 21.

A despatch from Madrid says that the Kaiser has telegraphed to King Alfonso, stating that he will commute the sentence of death passed upon the Countess of Belleville, Mlle. Thulier and others for aiding French and Belgian prisoners to escape.

AVENGE CAVELL!

U.S. WOMEN URGE WAR ON THE HUNS

London, Oct. 26.

Despatches from New York state that the indignation aroused in the United States by the shooting of Miss Cavell is intense. The women of all the principal cities have commenced a campaign for forming corps of volunteers to go to the assistance of the British.

Recruiting offices have been opened at various points, and great numbers of men have already volunteered. They will be shipped to England for training and subsequent incorporation in the British regiments, so as to avoid an infraction of the laws of neutrality by carrying out the military organisation of the corps in this country.

"APOLOGY" FOR MURDER

GERMANY LIES TO EXCUSE CAVELL CRIME.

New York, Oct. 26.

A wireless despatch from Berlin says that the enemies of Germany are apparently anxious to counteract the feelings of indignation aroused by the fact that the crew of a German submarine which had been captured were shot one after another after they had surrendered.

For this purpose they are publishing far and wide invented stories referring to the sentences pronounced by the Brussels courtmartial on the conspirators.

The despatch says:—"The fact is that the conspirators knew what they were about and what they were to expect under the conspiracy laws of Germany. During nine months they had aided innumerable soldiers to rejoin the armies fighting against Germany. The German judges were faced by the alternative of giving way to their natural feelings of pity and endangering the safety of the country by encouraging similar enterprises, or of applying the law as it stood.

"All the stories regarding the details of one of these executions in Brussels are pure inventions. The Court martial proceeded in the most careful manner to fully investigate all the facts. The execution was a lamentable necessity and was carried out according to the prescriptions of the law, without any incident whatever."

"BLEW HER BRAINS OUT"

GERMANS MURDER A FRENCH WOMAN.

Amsterdam, Oct. 23.

The "Telegraaf" says that the execution of the English nurse, Miss Cavell, has caused consternation throughout the Netherlands.

The paper also reports that a fortnight ago the Germans executed Mlle. Louise Frenay at Liege.

The volley fired by the soldiers only wounded the victim in the legs, whereupon the German officer commanding the firing platoon stepped up to her and blew her brains out with his revolver.

WOMEN PUNISHED

PENALTY FOR REFUSING TO WORK FOR GERMANY.

Paris, Oct. 22.

Reports have reached this city that the town of Harlebeke in West Flanders has been castigated by the Germans because twenty-nine women refused to work for their oppressors. The women have been sent to Germany as prisoners and the town fined.

For similar reasons the town of Lessines has also had to pay a fine.

MURDER OF NURSE CAVELL

THE PROPOSED MEMORIAL

In all circles the idea that the memory of the late Miss Cavell should be perpetuated in a substantial and effective way has been translated into a determination to provide a fund as large as possible, and demonstrate the abhorrence of the community at the foul deed of which she was the victim.

THE HERALD'S suggestion that a trained nurse should be sent from Argentina to take Miss Cavell's place has received immediate support. By many prominent members of the community the idea was described yesterday as an excellent one, appealing strongly to the sense of the fitness of things.

A representative of THE HERALD called on Dr. K. M. Walker, who has recently returned to Buenos Aires after six months' service in one of the largest of the military hospitals in France, and asked his opinion of the proposal. "The idea is an excellent one," said the doctor. "Trained nurses are always in demand. I am not in a position to say that one could be obtained locally, and it would be necessary perhaps to ascertain first of all what is required by the Medical Department of the War Office in the way of qualifications, and conditions under which the nurse would be accepted for service with the field hospitals, or wherever she might be employed. These are, however, considerations that could be dealt with later, and even if such a nurse could not be obtained locally, it would not be difficult to have one selected in England and maintained from the fund you suggest raising."

As will be seen from a letter published below, the matter has already been taken up by the ladies associated with St. John's Pro-Cathedral. Doubtless as the idea spreads, it will gain many strong supporters, for the simple reason that it is tangible, practical, and effective.

MR. THOMAS LLOYD'S PROPOSAL.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—Some friends have approached me suggesting that the best means of perpetuating the memory of this martyred lady would be to raise a fund to be called "The Nurse Cavell Memorial Fund," the income of which would be devoted to provide a permanent bed or cot in the British Hospital bearing her name.

The suggestion was made at the breakfast table at the "Strangers' Club" to-day, and the sum of over $2000 was instantly promised provided the fund was devoted to such a purpose.

May I ask for your support to a scheme so appropriate which I feel sure will appeal to your readers in order to mark their appreciation of the noble death, and to keep green the memory of this heroic Nurse among the British residents in the Argentine Republic.

I need scarcely say I shall be very glad to receive and acknowledge subscriptions, however small.

Remittances to be marked: "Nurse Cavell Memorial Fund."

Yours faithfully,

THOS. LLOYD.

The newspapers say that the City Council has been approached with the object of having the name of Cavell given to one of the streets in Paris which bear German names.

IN MEMORIAM

MISS EDITH CAVELL.

(Nurse, Patriot, Martyr)

All Hail! Well done! Until we meet—Farewell!

Eternal Victory is thine, thou queenly
British soul!

True to thyself, thy country and thy God,

Gloriously hast thou toiled in Duty's field,

Heroically to the utmost kept the Faith,

Calmly faced infamy and pain and death.

Alone; yet not alone—Christ was thy stay and shield,

In His majestic strength that way was trod

Which led from Night to Day—through Death to Life. . . .

To hosts of white-robed conquerors who acclaim,

Who welcome and who greet thee in His name,

Who makes us more than victors in the strife. . . .

The Christ in thee they see, and bear thee on—

Amid the applause of Heaven, praise of celestial choirs,

To Christ who awaits thee—Christ thy life and goal.

And Christ rejoicingly has welcomed thee,

From his throne named thee, placed thee by His side,

Henceforth forever with Him to abide!

"Well done thou good, wholehearted friend

"Thou hast been faithful even unto the end.

"Forever shalt thou henceforth be with Me,

"My kingdom shalt thou share, My glory see.

"Well done, and welcome, who hast kept My word,

"Live even in the joy of Him thy Lord."

From out those depths of agony and night

We cry to thee our heart's vow and salute,

All Hail! Well done! Farewell!
Until we meet!

We also bear Christ's Cross, under His banner fight;

We, too, will toil in Duty's field, will follow Christ, our Light,

Will dare and suffer, gladly die, for Liberty and Right.

Before thy victory sublime, thou
queenly British soul!

We set our faces, bind our souls, to that same glorious goal.

We do not hate, but this we say, that never truce shall be

Till wrong is vanquished, Right is crowned, and nations all are free.

This vow we make in His Great Name,
Who died to make us free.

Heroine of our age and race, thou
queenly British soul!

We flash to thee our heart's vow and salute. . . .

All Hail! Well done! We come!
Farewell! Until we meet!

EXTERMINATING THE ARMENIANS

ONLY 200,000 REMAIN OUT OF 1,200,000.

London, Oct. 21.

A despatch from Petrograd says that according to information from Tiflis, it is estimated by the Armenian newspaper "Oshak" that out of 1,200,000 Armenians who inhabited Turkey before the war there remain not more than 200,000. The residue may disappear before the end of the war on account of the policy of extermination.

PRO-ALLY PROPAGANDA

A CORRIENTES EXAMPLE.

Within an inconceivably short time Mr. Henry Perry, Mercedes, Province of Corrientes, has, with the help of a few friends, organized a Pro-ally Propaganda Association in the town of Mercedes, Corrientes. The Association already counts with a membership of 400 members, minimum subscription 50 centavos per month, and all funds collected will be remitted to the Allies Red Cross Society at Buenos Aires. The local theatrical company held a benefit function for the Allies Red Cross Society. The local 'little Germans' tried to organize an opposition association but were worsted. That is the way to 'aplastar' the 'boches.'

The following call to arms was first issued by Mr. Perry and his committee:—

PRO-ALIADOS.

Al Pueblo de Mercedes.

A los subditos de Francia, Inglaterra, Rusia, Italia, Bélgica, Serbia y Montenegro; a los que simpatizan con la causa que ellos representan; a los que ven en la noble Bélgica la víctima inmolada por el cesarismo impudico que se burla de la solemnidad de los tratados y de la confianza en la fe jurada; a los que simpatizan con la causa noble de la civilización respetuosa de los derechos ajenos; a todos ellos invitamos a una reunión en el Salon del "Cine Ideal" que tendrá lugar mañana a las 9.30 a.m., con el fin de constituir un Comité Pro-Aliados que responda y sirva al ideal que armó el brazo defensor de los pueblos que se levantaron contra el Atila de nuestros días.

BRITISH RED CROSS FUNDS

HON. ARTHUR STANLEY'S APPEAL.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—The following letter just received by this mail from the Honourable Arthur Stanley, Chairman of the War Committee, will, I think, answer several enquiries I have had of late as to whether the British Red Cross Society is in need of funds:—
British Red Cross Society.

83 Pall Mall, London, S.W.

September 25, 1915.

Dear Chevallier Boutell,

I have sent you two receipts and a letter by this mail, but I must add a token of thanks to you for all that you are doing for us. To have raised over £1,000 in such a short time is really splendid, and we are very grateful to you. The demands made upon us from France and the Dardanelles and everywhere else where we or our Allies are fighting, are very great, and we can't expect money to come in very well after this last Budget, so any help that you can give us is most welcome.

The big fight in France is just begun—I was over there last week, and everyone seemed very confident as to the result. I hope they are right. A big success now might mean a much earlier termination of the war, as the Russians seem to be giving them rather a bad time in the East.

With renewed thanks, believe me,
Yours sincerely,

ARTHUR STANLEY.

I am certain I can rely on a further generous response from the British colony in Argentina. Funds are urgently needed in any form or shape—from ten cents onward—and I trust I may be able to continue a weekly remittance for the great work on the other side.

Yours, etc.

F. H. CHEVALLIER BOUTELL,
Representative of the British Red Cross Society in Argentina.

OFF TO THE WAR

FAREWELL TO MR. J. LYNN HAZELTON.

A farewell address moved by a mingled feeling of enthusiasm and regret was given by Rev. W. P. McLaughlin to Mr. J. Lynn Hazelton, a representative of a large Belfast concern, who will be shortly donning a British uniform and running his share of risks and sacrifice among the English warriors who are offering their lives in response to the country's call.

The address was received by clamorous applause, last night, at the American Church, and easily proved the outstanding feature of this year's last social of the Young People's Institute.

Rev. McLaughlin, amidst loud applause stated that he regretted Mr. J. Lynn Hazelton's departure, who had proven himself an active mover in spiritual and social affairs, and that his leaving the British community would no doubt be greatly felt. He also stated, that at the same time, he was consoled by the fact that the impetus which has determined Mr. Hazelton's step, was an unselfish one.

Mr. Hazelton in responding mentioned that he was simply performing his duty, and he hoped to be able to leave Buenos Aires in two weeks time for his home in Belfast, to enlist in the army.

He was presented with various parting gifts including the American Church Committee's offerings of a leather-bound pocket testament with coloured illustrations and a handsome wrist watch.

A musical programme followed, consisting of a pianoforte duet given by Misses Mier and Kenworthy, song by Mr. J. Lynn Hazelton, song by Miss Bery Lovejoy.

ROSARIO NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT]

October 26.

Competitors for the Tigre.

Rosario is usually represented at Tigre Regatta, and the forthcoming day will be no exception. The names of the crew who have been selected to champion Rosario Rowing Club are:—

Copa Ferro-Carril Central Argentino, for shell fours:—No. 1 F. Asurmendi; No. 2, J. S. Garbutti; No. 3, C. H. Taylor; Stroke, L. G. Malberti; Cox, B. E. Capello.

Copa Compañías de Seguros, for single sculls.—F. Gasser will represent Rosario Rowing Club, and will row on the 7th prox. in the elimination beat, meeting the representatives of the Scandinavian and Montevideo Clubs.

The Markets.

The wheat market has been very quiet and no transactions worth naming have been done. New crop was firm for a few days, but to-day has declined rather sharply presumably on account of the good advices which have been received from up country. Reports generally speak of the wheat plant being in good condition, and the appearance of the ear is becoming quite general in this zone. Thanks to the favourable rains which have occurred during this month, the crop has recovered from its backwardness, and is now more or less about normal.

Should weather conditions continue favourable during the most important period upon which the crop is now entering, there is every reason to hope for good crops in those places where the locust has not done damage, and so far this only applies to the district north of the main Central Argentine line to Cordoba.

Maize has been a strong market, following advices from the U.K., where the markets have been very strong and an important advance has taken place; though most of this has been absorbed by the big advance in freights. Steamers for November loading registered quite 12½ per ton advance in freight rates during the week. The new crop maize is getting a very good start thanks to the frequent spring rains which we are getting.

The Strike of Stevedores.

The strike which I mentioned last week has not been arranged yet, but it is probable that it will fizzle out on its own account, as there are heaps of men only too willing to step in and take the strikers' places. The whole matter, on the part of the men, is a very stupid one, as the question at issue is in itself a trivial one, referring to the time-table. It has been the custom during the last few years for the stevedores to start work at 7 in the morning and work through till 11 o'clock, during the period from April 15 to October 15. The new time-table, coming into force on October 16, was from 6 o'clock to 8 a.m. and 8.30 to 10.30, the half-hour break being for refreshments. The exporters, having found that this half-hour was much abused, and was liable to become 45 to 50 minutes, what with slacking off a little before 8 and not turning up promptly at 8.30, resolved to ask the Sociedad de Trabajo Libre to change the summer time-table, so that the men should turn to at 6.30 and work straight on till 10.30, having their refreshment before starting work. This was the bone of contention, and advantage was taken of this by certain labour agitators to foment discontent with the Sociedad, and, in fact, to attack its very existence. During the negotiations the men agreed to the new time-table, but insisted that the intervention of the Sociedad should be entirely eliminated. This, naturally, the exporters will not entertain for a moment, as it is the Society which they themselves have supported, and moreover it is their representative in matters pertaining to the labour they

ROSARIO PATRIOTIC COMMITTEE

Scheme to Extend its Scope

THE NEW COMMITTEE

A General Meeting of the British Patriotic Committee at which nearly 50 members of the British community attended was held in St. Bartholomew's Club-room on the evening of October 21, 1915. Mr. W. J. Martin in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and approved the Treasurer, Mr. George Woollidge read statements of the Prince of Wales Fund and the General Fund of the Committee showing credit balances of respectively $17,599.76 c/l and $337.84 c/l at September 30, 1915, the accounts having been audited by Mr. Joseph Fogg. The accounts as read were unanimously approved.

On the motion of Mr. Montgomery seconded by Mr. Fisher it was agreed that the Treasurer should be instructed to remit to the Prince of Wales Fund the balance standing to the credit of the account under that name in the various banks.

Proposal for Apportionment of Future Funds.

Mr. Fisher proposed that in future, money collected should be divided as follows: 50 per cent to the Prince of Wales Fund, 25 per cent to the British Red Cross Fund and 25 per cent to local charities, but Mr. Marston objected that it would be more in order if this matter were treated by the new Patriotic Society whose formation was an item on the agenda of the meeting. This was tacitly agreed to. A suggestion that the correspondence since last meeting be left to the consideration of the new Committee to be elected, was also agreed to.

Lady Roberts' Field-Glass Fund.

The Chairman, however, asked that one item in that correspondence should be treated forthwith as H.B.M. Consul, Mr. Spencer Dickson, wished to call attention to it while so many of the British community were assembled. Mr. Dickson urged the claims of the "Lady Roberts Field Glass Fund" upon the attention of all who might be in possession of, or have means of acquiring prismatic field glasses which were very much required by many officers, and requested that if any were available they should be sent to him and that he would see that they were forwarded to the proper quarter.

The New Patriotic Committee.

The Chairman then referred to the principal business of the evening viz the proposal to give the hitherto existing British Patriotic Committee of Rosario a more definite constitution. He explained that while a comparatively loose organisation had been sufficient and even desirable when in past years the British community had only to be called together occasionally for the celebration of the King's birthday or to welcome the arrival of a British war vessel, circumstances had altered since the commencement of the present war and that it was quite neces-require. As there is an abundance of unemployed labour in the city, there has been no difficulty whatever in replacing the strikers, so far as numbers are concerned; but it will naturally take a little time until the new hands get into the swing of the work.

THE SECOND AEROPLANE

FUNDS STILL NEEDED.

The British Society received yesterday a very significant donation in the form of a cable order for $100 gold from Mr. Herbert Gibson at present residing in England.

It will be seen that this donation, coming in the way it has done, carries with it the appreciation of a gentleman well able to form an opinion as to the utility of the proposed machine and, what is more, a firm conviction as to its necessity. It is sincerely hoped that this magnificent proof will induce the British residents in this country to put their hands in their pockets and subscribe rapidly the amount required to complete "Aeroplane River Plate No. 2" Fund.

Also by the mail that arrived yesterday a letter came from Mr. Alan W. MacLachlan of Eastbourne, England, subscribing $50 to the "Fund."

A number of comments have been made by the English Press more or less of same tenor as that published by "The Times" which is as follows:

"The British Society in the Argentine Republic have through the League of the Empire, its representative in England, presented to the Army Council an aeroplane,

"Fighter Mark 1." The aeroplane has been accepted by the Government and will be named "River Plate." The expense, £2,250, was subscribed by British residents in the Argentine as a mark of their loyalty to the British cause."

It does not need many words to convince one of the good that can be done by subscribing to the Aeroplane Fund. The fighting aeroplane strikes a blow at the enemy and thus saves the lives of our men. In subscribing to this fund one may feel that he has done something really effective against the foe.

All subscriptions to the Honorary Treasurer, Mr. W. Watson, 536 Calle Cangallo.

sary now to have the names and addresses of all British subjects to whom notices of meetings could be issued and appeals for help addressed. A book had been opened for the purpose and he requested that those present should register there their names and addresses. He referred to the war as an example of the advantages of efficient organisation and urged that without this the British Patriotic Committee of Rosario would be comparatively ineffective. A printed proposal to this end had been circulated among those present, which the Executive Committee considered might meet the case, and it would be for the new Committee to be elected to study the matter and report to a later meeting.

Election of Officers.

On the motion of Mr. Marston, seconded by Mr. Fogg, the proposed scheme was accepted in general and, after a desultory discussion the meeting proceeded to elect new officers by ballot. Mr. A. P. Ferguson and Mr. W. Ainsworth, assisted by Mr. A. H. Clarke were appointed tellers, and it was decided that the ballot papers should show by a special mark who the members voting desired for President.

The following was the result of the ballot:—

President, Mr. W. J. Martin, 24 votes; Vice-President, Mr. A. H. Unwin, 22 votes; Members of Committee: C. C. Cox, 39 votes; A. Murray Hudson, 38 votes; R. Fisher, 36 votes; T. H. Martin, 32 votes; A. M. Barnes, 30 votes; C. Montgomery, 29 votes; D. S. Martin, 29 votes; E. Rosenberg, 26 votes; A. P. Ferguson, 17 votes.

The ballot took a considerable time and it was nearly mid-night before it was concluded. In the meantime many members had retired and the meeting broke up as soon as the result was declared.

"LIES, ALL LIES"

Dr. Gramajo Denies Rumours of Impending Resignation

PLANS FOR PURIFYING THE CITY

(HERALD Special Interview.)

"Lies, nothing but lies," said Dr. Gramajo, Buenos Aires Intendente, when interviewed by a HERALD representative yesterday about the alleged rumours of his resignation.

"The political subterfuges used by various newspapers are not only ungrounded, but perfectly false. There is absolutely no authenticity in the statement made by a local newspaper that the Minister of the Interior has called me to answer various charges. I have received no notice to that effect, and President Victorino de la Plaza, who has appointed me, has expressed no antagonistic sentiment regarding my administration," said the Intendente in a serious voice.

"The Tango," an outstanding number among the various features which are to be produced to-morrow at the Colon Theatre, was prevented from appearing by the representations of Sra. de Martin, President of the "Sociedad de Damas de la Caridad," on the contention that it is of a doubtful nature.

"Some newspaper scribe, who has evidently mistaken me as the instigator of this particular prohibition, has levelled a number of attacks against what he called my 'stratagem.'"

"This ignorance is the underlying basis of all the attacks made against my methods. It is nothing but prejudice," remarked Dr. Gramajo, in a firm tone, "and I am fully determined to pursue my policies which I consider will tend towards the elimination of vices and for the championing of righteousness."

"There was besides a recent controversy on Maipu about women of the 'demi-monde' plying their trade with an effrontery that was unmistakably serious to the public. This delicate affair commanded the quick attention of the municipal body as a whole, which induced them to use strongest efforts to uproot this evil."

"For a few days the Municipality were able to enforce what they deemed was lawful; but subsequent reading of the law leaves a loophole for activities on the opposite side which necessitated the Municipality weakening their determination," he continued.

"Sure of ultimate victory, I have never slackened my positive intentions of introducing improved conditions, which not only include the physical or materialistic sides of the city, but also the moral aspect, and this policy will always be the basis of my operations," he said.

From authentic sources of the Intendencia the following facts have been received:—

On February 24, 1915, Dr. Gramajo assumed his official position as Intendente of Buenos Aires. At that time he discovered the financial situation hung on a thread, finding that a floating debt of fifty-three million pesos first encountered his notice. This colossal debt was subject to be paid at any moment, and was mainly engendered by the previous unlimited extravagance of the municipal leaders, who undertook the construction of new avenues, of which few have been completed.

Besides this enormous debt incurred, the Municipal Budget called for 43,700,000 pesos for the year 1915, being a radical reduction of 10 million pesos, compared with 1914. This difference evidently appears to be the active work of the Intendente.

For the first time Dr. Gramajo found himself facing a menacing proposition. He undertook to rid the city of all useless expenditures, and commenced his operations against the unlicensed freedom of public services.

Under his tactful management he was able to wrest the electric lamps monopoly which was confined in the hands of a large Argentine Company, and saved the Municipality what is approximately estimated at 400,000 pesos annually on that item solely. There were 7000 lamps in the city, run at a basis of 12 pesos per month for carbon and globes broken, etc. The Intendente thought that a great change could be wrought in the price if the Municipality itself would become the governing master; and the Administration consequently found that only 6.30 pesos was expended, with the further probability that after the war it would be reduced to 3.80 per lamp each month. At the present moment the carbon, globes, and various other appliances used in its operation are subject to the high tariff and extraordinary fluctuation of prices on materials; but nevertheless a saving item of almost a half million pesos will result from that innovation. (This change has gone into effect on the 19th of this month.)

According to one of the Secretaries of the Intendencia, Dr. Gramajo's aims have always been directed to effacing the sickening licentiousness which is openly exhibited in various cafés, and which has eventually had the tendency of corrupting a good number of the young men in this city, and in the future his decision is to cleanse the Capital of its moral iniquities.

The public, the Secretary claimed, do not desire to have these women flood the city, and all those whose aims are for the purification of South America's leading city, should do their utmost to shun these resorts.

The Secretary also alleged that in the near future Dr. Gramajo will undertake the reform of municipal finances, with a still more determined grasp, and that he will cause every possible reduction of expense and limit the annual expenditure. He does not want to exceed the limit appropriated for the year's expense, as it has hitherto been practised.

The employment question will also receive the Intendente's serious consideration, as he feels quite optimistic that a great improvement will shortly follow. He expects in the course of a few weeks to lay at the disposal of the people proposals of labour facilities, which will go far in solving the perplexing employment problem.

EMIR EMIN ARSLAN

SURRENDERS TURKISH CONSULATE BELONGINGS TO THE SUPREME COURT.

The archives documents and registrations of the Turkish Consulate Office were officially handed over on Oct. 21 by Emir Emin Arslan, former Consul General of the Ottoman Empire, to Sr. Arturo Pons, Bailiff of the Supreme Court.

Emir Arslan recently figured prominently in his stand against his country's precipitation in this war on the side of Germany.

Schooled in the French School of Reught, his sentiments and teachings rebelled against the cruel and barbaric Teuton modern philosophies, and he openly voiced his contempt for Germanic legislation and warfare, which consequently cost him his official post.

He then, received communications from Constantinople asking for his resignation, with the command that all papers and documents appertaining to the Consulate service should be assigned to the German Legation.

This he refused to comply with, until a few days ago he was asked by the Supreme Court to submit such belongings that were under his régime to the Supreme Court and yesterday he resigned all claims to the Consular possessions.

He is now editing the weekly review La Nota, which possesses a high literary standard and contains much pro-Ally propaganda.

THE B.A. WOMAN

How She Compares with Her Anglo-Saxon Sister

AN AMERICAN NOVELIST'S VIEWS

In recent years there have been quite a list of young women who have devoted themselves to authorship, but few have displayed more energy in matters that did not strictly appertain to the realms of literature than the impressionable Miss Mildred Champagne, the American popular playwright and novelist, who arrived in Buenos Aires a week ago.

Though this is her first visit to this country, and consequently being subjected to environment radically different to what she has been accustomed, it is surprising with what ease the young authoress has accumulated many vivid impressions of South America's leading city.

"One can sedately talk about political or artistic questions, but when it comes to divulging opinions on our own sex, enthusiasm surges, hyperbole crowds into one's phrases," said Miss Champagne, to a HERALD representative.

"You want me to give my impressions of Buenos Aires, about the ladies and the men, and the fine buildings?" she asked, with an arch smile.

"Well, the women in Buenos Aires are well educated, and extensive travellers and imbued with worldly knowledge; but—they lack the courage of their convictions."

"Though they aspire to reach the same stage of freedom and education which their American sisters possess, and wish to emulate them, they shudder before the probable consequences, for they fear that they will be overriding the barren modes and unliberal customs which prevail in Argentina."

"It is astounding that in certain phases of social life, the same conditions exist here which were encountered in Mediaeval Spain, though perhaps cloaked under a veneer of politeness and exterior civilisation, for the women in Buenos Aires are guided by the spirit that liberty means license."

"These feelings naturally are subject to amelioration, and I perceive that there is more than a little of courage in them which can be developed."

"Take the American woman; she enjoys full liberty because she is revolving in an educational sphere free from dogmatic strains. She does not gaze on morality from a narrow minded point of view, but opens her arms to welcome an exceedingly high standard of moral purity which embodies the assurance of an absolute ideal home life."

"This feeling of ascendancy makes her rich in social and moral rights, and causes the word 'Family' to signify the keynote of the nation's progress, for the family surrounding really reflects the grandeur of the country."

"Compared with such liberal thinkers of the North, you find the Argentine women has no social and political voice at all."

"In social gatherings women here are secluded from men's presence; they do not get together for that helpful companionship which tends for the mutual uplift of both sexes."

"The cruel inscription, 'The place of woman is the home' was once invented. If that is taken literally, and she is confined between four walls, how can she become an intellectual friend and helpmate to her husband, and how can she give any proper instruction to her children. Being for ever barred the entrance to public affairs, she consequently fades in intelligence, and grows destitute in what forms a truly world education, which consists of a solid education, knowledge of the world's customs and attitudes, seeing life in its representations amongst friends, theatres, balls, etc., and the knowledge of social and moral duties."

The attractive home, so that the husband will not seek outside expedients to divert his attentions, but will happily remain at home, is when he finds himself in the company of his wife, who grows more fascinating each day, because she helps him in every way."

"The National Council of Women, a club existing in Buenos Aires, has been established a considerable time ago, for the elevation of womanhood, and with the underlying motives of endeavouring to initiate a movement whereby a more liberal freedom should be assumed by women. This should bring about some great changes in the future."

"In other ways Buenos Aires is attractive. The excellence of its musical schools can only be rivalled by the Boston Music Schools, and the great similitude between the musical fields of these two widely-separated cities can be somewhat accounted for by the warm friendship which existed between Sarmiento and Horace Mann."

"The architecture is not only beautiful from an artistic standpoint, but from its uniformity of construction and the great amount of ornaments and wealth lavished upon them. The streets are extremely clean, but the sidewalks are rather narrow."

"The tramways and cars, and very excellent automobiles system transports you immediately into the life of New York, but that you are suddenly awakened by foreign voices, which have no similarity to English."

"Looking around, you perceive beautifully-gowned women walking on Florida with an elasticity which pronounces physical culture."

"The people are very courteous here and the men are very handsome and well-attired," she remarked, just when a number of young men strolled into the Plaza Hotel.

Miss Champagne spent an afternoon a few days ago at the Jockey Club, where she met the President of the Republic; who gave her a very cordial reception.

She expects to be leaving in a few days for the interior of the country to study agricultural conditions, which play an imposing character in Argentine commerce, and will make a special study of the economical conditions of the working classes, endeavouring to get an exact idea of the "peon" system of the country. She is making considerable headway in penning a number of articles, to be sent to the various newspapers and magazines she represents.

ARMED STRIKERS IN SAN JULIAN

SERIOUS DISORDERS THREATENED.

Theatrical, more than violent, is the strike now in progress as San Julian, although the information concerning the affair which has come through from Santa Cruz is sufficiently alarming if accurate. It is stated that the workmen of three of the largest establishments in the locality have gone on strike, and armed with "Winchesters" are terrorising other workmen, who cannot see eye to eye with them, and who refuse to strike.

Guns are, apparently, being fired off indiscriminately and general terror reigns. Some damage has been done to property, but the nature of this is not stated. The strikers have "entrenched" themselves behind the station of Los Manantiales, where they intend to resist the police.

The workmen are those who have been employed on some cattle ranches, but the cause of their striking is unknown, and the information received savours of much exaggeration.

Nevertheless the authorities are very active and consider the matter a grave one.

The following letter has been received from Mr. F. H. Chevallier Boutell:—

Sir,—I beg to advise you that the $6,771.80 you so generously obtained for me, has been remitted to the Executive of the British Red Cross Society, by sight draft on the London and River Plate Bank for £599 0s. 6d.; there will be quite enough to cover cost of a first rate car, and, I think, its up-keep and maintenance during the war; the HERALD readers may well be proud of their work. I have asked for 300 copies of photos of the car, as possibly subscribers would like to have a practical war memento of the help given from this side.

Yours truly,

F. H. CHEVALLIER BOUTELL.

We shall be glad to receive orders for copies of the photograph of the motor ambulance, which will prove interesting mementos of the generosity of those who provided the car.—Ed. THE HERALD).

OUR LIMBLESS SAILORS AND SOLDIERS

AN APPEAL FROM ENGLAND.

St. Stephen's House,
Westminster, S.W.
September 25, 1915.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—The nation owes a special debt of gratitude to those gallant men who have lost their limbs in the war. On their behalf we make an earnest appeal for additional funds to extend the work at Queen Mary's Convalescent Hospitals, Roehampton, where these sufferers (officers and men) are provided at the expense of the State with their artificial appliances and taught how to use them.

The Hospitals are officially recognised by the Directors General of the Navy and Army Medical Services, and the Lords Commissioners of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea.

Over eight hundred patients are now awaiting admission, among them many men from our Overseas Dominions, and the numbers increase daily. To meet this difficult situation a large outlay has been incurred in the erection and equipment of new wards, which will shortly be opened.

The work at Roehampton can best be judged by the results achieved and by the gratitude of these brave men on realising, that with the aid of the wonderful artificial limbs of recent invention, they will be able to obtain employment and make a fresh start in life.

With a view to their future employment and also to provide useful occupation for the men while in hospital, workshops fitted with model motor chassis, electrical appliances, lathes, etc., are being organised, with competent instructors. A man who has lost his right hand will be taught to write with the left, and classes for other industries will be arranged. An Employment Bureau working in conjunction with existing Societies and employers of labour has also been established, and already a number of men have been placed in good situations. From the numerous offers received, it is hoped through this medium to find suitable employment for every man on his leaving the Hospital.

To maintain and extend this National work, a large additional sum of money is required, and we look with confidence to a ready response to our appeal from public and private sources, notwithstanding the urgency of other claims. Donations sent to Hon. Treasurer at St. Stephen's House, Westminster, will be gratefully acknowledged.—Yours obediently,

FRANCIS LLOYD,
Major-General.
Chairman.
C. H. KENDERDINE,
Honorary Treasurer.

COMFORTS FOR TROOPS

Patriotic Railway Men

REMEMBER THEIR COMRADES

The many volunteers from the railway services of this country, who are now at the front, are not being forgotten by their old comrades. Some time ago THE HERALD arranged for the distribution of tobacco to a number of men who volunteered from the Traction Department of the F.C.S., and now we have been asked to forward a further draft for £7 10s., subscribed by their fellow workmen on the Traction Staff at Ingeniero White, which is to be spent in the purchase of a hamper of comforts, and warm clothing for each of the volunteers named.

In forwarding the draft to THE HERALD the spokesman of the subscribers says: "We again ask you to handle the donation from the Traction Staff of Ingeniero White for warm clothing and hampers for our 12 boys at the front (unfortunately one of our number, J. S. David, was killed in France since we sent the tobacco). I may add that the men are sending direct to each boy a letter signed by all of them, advising them of the dispatch of the goods, and wishing them a Happy Christmas, which I fancy they will appreciate. The money is exactly 12s. 6d. per man; 5s. for hamper, and 7s. 6d. for clothing.

The draft is being sent to-day to the Editor of the Daily Mail with a request that each of the men mentioned shall receive a hamper and a packet of clothing, in accordance with the scheme put forward by the Overseas Club. The volunteers who will derive the benefit of this kind thought on the part of their old comrades are as follows: Private J. Hughes, Cameron Highlanders; Sappers P. Crane, P. Gallagher, B. Dyke, J. Whiston, T. Lovett, J. Prickett, P. Peary, and C. Billings, all of the Royal Engineers; Private A. Shrewsbury, 15th Middlesex; Private R. Mackie, Army Medical Corps; and Private J. Adamson, H. D. Cycle Corps, Dundee.

ITALIAN RED CROSS HAMPERS

The ladies' committee of the Italian Red Cross Fund, have adopted a good idea in connection with the celebration of Christmas at the front. They have made arrangements to provide and forward neatly packed hampers, containing all sorts of comforts and articles for the wounded. It is intended that the hampers shall reach Italy in time for them to be distributed at Christmas, the idea being that every wounded man in hospital shall receive his own little Christmas gift from his countrymen and countrywomen in Argentina.

INDISCREET OPINIONS

MILITARY PROPHETS TO BE GAGGED.

During the war, the Government has observed a neutral attitude requiring a similar department from its naval and military commanders. In the former service the attitude required has been most correctly observed but, shortly after the outbreak of hostilities certain opinions of a distinctly partisan nature were published including prophecies, so far unfulfilled. The Minister of War promptly informed the gentlemen in question that their professional opinions with their names appended were not suitable for publication.

Notwithstanding this, a new and rather flagrant example by an officer of rank has occurred which has, it is said, been taken notice of officially. Report has it that the Interim President has required detailed information to be supplied him of the circumstances of this case, the officer concerned in which is actually in active command and that the Minister of War will be instructed to take energetic measures to prevent future infractions of the course of conduct which the Government has laid down.

THE RAILWAY STAFF

I.

They watched and worked by night and day,
Their green lamps flashed, their red lamps glowed,
Or else along the six-foot way
They tramped the ballast of the road:
In rocking cab, in rattling brake—
They sped or checked the special's scud.
Or worked the warning bells that make
The steel-bright levers click and thud.

II.

In engine shed, in porters' room,
By serried desks, by whirling drills,
By draughtsman's board, or in the gloom
Of silent tunnels through the hills.
They tapped or typed or drove or drew
In unity of brain and hand,
And dreamed—and this we never knew—
Strange dreams about their motherland.

III.

Till on a day the wires that hum
From hill to hill, from chine to chine
Carried the simple message "Come!"
They need you in the battle line.
Compass and hammer, lamp and waste,
Lever and pen and engine plate—
Leave these to others and make haste,
The foe is out and at the gate!"

IV.

They asked no questions: one and all,
From office, station, cabin, road
They marshalled swiftly to the call,
And took the burden of our load.
They melted to their rendezvous,
And disappeared—we knew not where,
Until we heard of Mons—and knew
Ten thousand railwaymen were there.

EDGAR WALLACE.

SWEDISH NEUTRALITY

(To the Editor).

Sir.—I am very much pained to read the articles you have caused to put in your paper lately, in which you make it appear that, we the chivalrous nation of Sweden, are in sympathy with those German barbarians. Heaven forbid!

Your articles are very unkind. As anyone who knows us well will say, for do we not always give liberally (those of us who are in the employ of an English Company, as not a few of us are), to the Friends of the Tobacco for the poor soldiers. And we have great rejoicing and content in giving, and our love and affection for the British race is deep and it is not, as some who like us not, say to keep in a fat billet.

Therefore, Sir, we trust that as you are always fair you will give this letter publication in fairness to us who so well wish to the Allies.

Thanking you in anticipation,
Yours etc.,

A SWEDE.

BOMBARDMENT OF OSTEND

FIGHT FOR HILL 60

A WOUNDED SOLDIER'S STORY.

A Lance Corporal of the King's (Liverpool) Regiment (6th battalion, "Blacklegs from their dark putties") sends from Hospital at Leicester, the following account of his experiences at Hill 60 and the fighting preceding that action:

"We went to the front, as you know, months ago and joined a Regular Brigade of Infantry. Previous to this we had a pretty stiff training. I was made Lance Corporal, a paid one of course. Our Regulars and N.C.O.'s are not allowed to walk out with privates. To get a stripe, one had to pass out. You get a dose of clink if you argue with a N.C.O. It takes a bit of getting used to I tell you. I joined B. Company. One of the first knocked over in the trenches was Captain Montgomery. At the same time a bullet got Mat. McQueen and went on and killed Charlie Batson, our old pal. We continued at trench work till I left them.

Our Brigade too tackled Hill 60. Heavens! what a bloody affair that was. At the end of it we numbered some 200 odd.

I was about 60 yards from the Hill when it went up. About 2000 Germans went up with it. You never heard such an infernal din in your life. The report was stunning.

It was here I first met with their gas; damnable stuff it is too. I did not get gassed myself for it blew across and caught the Dorsets but I got all I was looking for and all I wanted. It made me feel awfully sick. We were 26 days on end in the trenches and got thoroughly knocked up. W. D. Evans was shot dead through the brain.

We occupied the crater where the Hill had been blown out. It was a sight I can tell you. There we hung on for a day or two. On several occasions the Germans counter-attacked and finally resorted to gas again. They managed to poison another Brigade of our division. Our people then fell back on their original position but we did not let the blighters occupy the crater. There we hung on till May 4, when at 11.30 p.m. we were relieved and another battalion took our place. We marched off about 5 miles when we were ordered back again. The beasts had gassed the line of trenches we had been holding 3 hours before. We had to go back and retake them. The Germans took the trench and advanced on the village. We extended as we reached the latter and attacked. C. Company went through the village. We went along the railway to its right. D. and A. Companies were on the left of C. The Germans let fly at us with all sorts, Shrapnel, "Jack Johnsons," "Whizz Bangs," etc., and used machine guns like mad but they couldn't stop us. We got there or rather, a few of us did. Captain Brocklehurst and Lieutenant Wilson were killed, so were Bert Fowler, Corporal Teague and both the Fairburn boys. You know them all, and our losses were very heavy. We were withdrawn the same night. We had a fortnight's rest and came back on a Thursday. The following Monday I was marching a fatigue party down the railway when I got damaged. A shell dropped close by and exploded and I went. I lost the use of my right leg and arm and was packed off to England. I am still in Hospital but hope to be all right soon. My arm has no strength but I hope this will improve.

That's the war as far as I saw it. It's blood, fire and hell take it from me. Another man we knew I heard has been blown to pieces."

Oct. 15.

Weather.

Conditions are splendid at present after a spell of rather warm and sultry weather. The days are fine with a slight chippy feeling. A few days ago it turned so cold that winter garments had to be worn. The cold, however, only lasted one day.

Garden Party.

The complete result of the Garden Party given on Oct. 2, shows a balance of $185. A feature of the Party which was omitted in my previous report was a wounded soldier dressed in full khaki regimentals attended by a Red Cross nurse, who paraded the lawns soliciting help for the Fund. The pair were Master Duncan MacKenzie and little Miss Lorna Sketch and their efforts were rewarded by collecting over $85.

Red Cross Funds.

The final balance sheet of the Concordia Dance and Concert Committee was passed at a recent meeting of the Committee. A surplus of $78 was shown and it was pointed out by Mr. Walton that it could be considered highly satisfactory in view of the heavy expenses incurred and the small subscription asked for. After a short discussion it was unanimously resolved to forward the amount to the British Red Cross Fund. The Committee will not dissolve for the present although it is not their intention to give any more dances this season. It is hoped that by next season the Railway Club will be in possession of a suitable house wherein dances can be given and consequently reduce the expenses as up to the present the heaviest item in the expenses was the hiring of the rooms of another club for the night. After a vote of thanks proposed by Mr. Neville and seconded by Mr. Williams to the Chairman, Mr. Morley, and the thanks of the Committee had been accorded to the several ladies who had helped, the meeting was closed.

Comisión de Fomento.

A meeting was held on October 11 by a number of people interested in the prosperity of Concordia for the purpose of forming a "Comisión de Fomento." A provisional committee was arranged for the present, the following being elected:—President, Sr. Juan Marcone; Vice-President, Sr. Carlos S. Martinez; Secretary, Sr. J. M. Requena; Sub-Secretary, Dr. A. S. Lorenzo; Treasurer, Sr. S. San Roman; and Messrs. M. Giavi, J. S. Robinson, Dr. A. Martinez, J. B. Arruabarrena, H. Baltar, J. Salduna, G. Victorin, J. M. MacLoughlin, B. Legeren, L. R. Costa and D. S. Iglesias. The committee is a strong one and every hope is entertained that in the near future these gentlemen will form a definite Committee which will do all that is required of it for the progress of the town.

Tennis.

The Concordia Tennis Committee has sent out notices that a Gentlemen's Singles and Mixed Doubles secret handicap tournament will be held starting at 9 a.m. on Sunday, October 24, entrance fee for each event $1. Prizes have kindly been offered by the President and Vice-President, Messrs. S. W. Roberts and R. MacKenzie. Entries will close on the 19 and further information can be had from the Secretary, Mr. G. Roberts.

ZEPPELINS IN THE BALTIC

Petrograd, Oct. 22.

It is reported from Riga that the Russian warships have observed Zeppelins along the coast of the Baltic, engaged apparently in looking out for British submarines lying in wait for German merchant shipping.

Sentence on ex-Manager of L. Dreyfus and Co.

Some little time ago the Manager of L. The case has recently been before the court, the prisoner being defended by Señor G. Casas. Cordoba Athletic Club—Spring Tennis Tournament.

The rain which fell at mid-day on Sunday greatly interfered with the playing of the Spring Tennis Tournament of the Cordoba Athletic Club, as it was impossible to play off any of the ties on account of the damp state of the courts. The matches played on Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning resulted as follows:—Ladies Singles:—Mrs. Walters defeated Mrs. Babb, 6-0, 3-6, 6-1; Miss Morton beat Miss Davis, 6-3, 5-7 and 6-3; Miss Gladys Symonds defeated Miss Phyllis Symonds, 6-4, 6-3. Gentlemen's Singles:—Mr. Morton defeated Mr. Cochrane 6-1, 1-6, 6-3; Mr. Marks beat Mr. Parker, 7-5, 6-4. Mixed Doubles:—Cwing to the absence of Mr. Schultz who is playing with Miss Gladys Symonds, it was impossible to play any of the matches in this event. Men's Doubles:—No matches have been played yet in this event, and the committee earnestly request all the gentlemen entered therefor to appear at the courts the coming Saturday and Sunday in order that a start may be made.

Jockey Club.

A very interesting card has been prepared for the race meeting on Sunday next at the General Paz Hippodrome. In the $3,000 Classic, Sir Florizel will meet his former stable companion Montezuma, and a battle-royal is assured. George Mountain the American jockey, will have the mount of Sir Florizel, and I am assured that whatever thoroughbred that finishes in front of the latter horse will be the winner. This will be the first start of last year's champion, Sir Florizel, this year.

Bogey Golf Match for Captain's Prize.

The bogey golf match (sealed handicap) held at the Alta Gracia links on Sunday for the Captain's prize, kindly presented by the Golf Captain, A. F. Dunbar, was a most enjoyable day's golf. The following players returned cards:—Messrs. Munroe, Ferguson, Dunbar, Lewis, Brigstocke, Babb, McCulloch, Munroe, Harris Smith, Sadleir, Cochrane, and Roney. Mr. T. G. Ferguson was the winner of the silver cigarette case, with the fine score of 2 down to bogey, playing from scratch. Mr. V. R. Sadleir turned in the second best score, with Messrs. G. A. Brigstocke and K. Struthers tied for third. In the afternoon, several foursomes took place in the match of Messrs. Dunbar and Struthers v. Ferguson and McCulloch; the former were successful, while Sadleir and Babb defeated Cochrane and Roney. Quite a number made the journey from Cordoba to enjoy the play. Among them were Mrs. C. C. Lewis, Miss Dorothy Lewis, Masters Jack and Donald Lewis, Mrs. A. D. Dunbar and daughter Violet, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Davis and Miss Phyllis Davis, Mr. Arthur Hughes, Mrs. R. J. Cochrane and little girl, Mrs. Mendel and son Jack, Messrs. Dunlap and Schrivener.

In Aid of English Church Building Fund.

A meeting of the ladies of the English Church congregation was held at the residence of Mrs. W. J. Sugden, Calle 24 de Septiembre No. 1186, General Paz. It was decided to hold a Sale of Work during the coming month of April. The following ladies were appointed on the committee to make arrangements:—Mrs. Lang, Mrs. Dunbar, Mrs. Babb, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Guppy and Mrs. Sugden.

English Club Billiard Handicap.

The billiard handicap which is now being played at the English Club in aid of the Prince of Wales Fund is furnishing some very interesting billiards. The match on Saturday night between Messrs. Morton and Cochrane was the most exciting yet played. The latter, by a nice run near the close of the game when he was some points behind, came out victor by the

CHACO INDIANS

STARVING AND DESTITUTE.

An urgent request has been forwarded to the Government on behalf of the Indian Colony at Laiski which finds itself in the most afflicting condition of want owing to the loss of all the sowings, devoured by a passing locust swarm which covered all that part of the Chaco.

Some 250 families are affected and it is urged that to these poor people, to whom the nation stands in the position of trustee, a supply of urgent necessities shall be sent including maize and flour together with cloth and cotton to make themselves clothing as they are now entirely destitute. Private help is also solicited by Sr. Giuliani on the ground that owing to the slowness with which appeals are dealt with by Government Departments, it is not impossible that the aid asked for may arrive very late or not at all with disastrous results to the aborigines.

PROVINCIAL TAXES

SEVERE MEASURES TO COLLECT ARREARS.

The Government of the Province has ordered the valuers of the 108 Partidos to proceed without loss of time to compel payment of all taxes in arrear.

As the number of proprietors, stock-owners and business men who have delayed their contributions is considerable, many consider this attempt of the Government to turn the screw an illjudged measure and not likely to produce any marked ingress of cash to the Provincial coffers. It can only accentuate the unsatisfactory conditions already prevailing.

The high handed and sometimes unjust procedure of officials under these circumstances is also strongly resented and the habit of increasing the amounts owing. A good deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed but there is little likelihood of the measure being rescinded.

close score of 150 to 148. Mr. T. G. Ferguson is presenting a valuable cue to the winner of the handicap. The matches played the past week resulted as follows:—Mr. Ferguson defeated Mr. Brock (second round); Mr. Davis beat Mr. Brigstocke; Mr. S. T. Harris Smith was successful against Mr. McCulloch; Mr. Schrivener beat Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Fowler won from Mr. Babb.

Dance Given by Mr. and Mrs. F. Lindeman.

A pretty dance took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. Lindeman on last Saturday night. The entrance to the house was handsomely draped with the Union Jack and Argentine colours, and the long grape arbor in the garden was hung with Japanese lanterns fitted with small incandescent electric lamps. The music, in charge of Prof. Lopez, left nothing to be desired. The following guests formed part of the merry gathering which did not break up till a late hour:—Miss Phyllis Davis, Mr. Kennard Davis, Mrs. Talbot Wright, Miss Bessie Hughes, Mr. Arthur Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Babb, Miss Phyllis Symonds, Miss Gladys Symonds, Mrs. Guppy, Miss Blanche Guppy, Miss Gladys Guppy, Mr. G. A. Brigstocke, Mr. Domingo Castellanos, Mr. Schrivener, and Mr. Donald Smith.

Football.

Fifteen hundred people assembled at the grounds of the Belgrano Club in Alberdi on last Sunday afternoon to witness the struggle for the "Reina Victoria" Cup between the two leaders of the local first league, Belgrano and Central Cordoba. Dr. Carlos Mas came up from Buenos Aires expressly to referee the match, and his decisions gave the utmost satisfaction to all concerned. Score: Belgrano 3, Central Cordoba 2.

"TOMMY ATKINS"

STIRRING STORIES OF HEROISM

Dr. Walker's Fine Lecture before R.C.I. Members

It is but little more than six months ago since Dr. K. M. Walker left his practice in this city and volunteered for medical service at the front. Some of his impressions and experiences were told on Oct. 23 to a most interested audience by invitation of the Royal Colonial Institute. Only a few days ago Dr. Walker returned to South America, and thus, with impressions fresh in his mind—impressions which will always be fresh—he gave a most interesting discourse at the Phoenix Hotel.

A large audience of ladies and gentlemen were present when Mr. Frank Foster, in the chair, introduced, in a few brief words, Dr. Walker, and explained how he had gone away and returned, and how fully they appreciated the fact of his return.

Mr. Foster spoke of the message issued by H.M. the King from Buckingham Palace on October 22, and read this message amidst applause:—

KING GEORGE'S MESSAGE.

"To my people: At this great moment in the struggle between my people and a highly organised enemy who has transgressed the laws of nations and changed the ordinance that binds civilised Europe together I appeal to you.

"I rejoice in my people's effort. I feel pride in the voluntary response from my subjects all over the world, who have sacrificed home, fortune and life itself in order that another may not inherit the free Empire which your ancestors and mine built.

"I ask you to make good these sacrifices. The end is not yet in sight. More men and yet more are wanted to keep my armies in the field and through them secure victory and enduring peace.

"In ancient days the darkest moment ever produced in men of our race the sternest resolve. I ask you, men of all classes, to come forward voluntarily and take your share in the fight. In freely responding to my appeal you will be supporting our brothers who for long months have nobly upheld Britain's past traditions and the glory of her arms.

"George, R.I."

It was then that Dr. Walker rose to give one of the most interesting series of experiences and impressions that could be given to those removed so far from first-hand information. Quite apart from the nature of the things told was the choice of expressions and language used, which lent vividness and reality to these things seen and heard, and yet all was in the simplest language, so that with its detail and its interest and its choice of expression Dr. Walker's audience was enthralled.

He explained how it was his intention to give his impressions of six months work in France without attempting a carefully constructed sequence in his experiences. Many of the things he had to tell, he had seen; some were told in conversation with those amongst whom it had been his privilege to live. The employment of the word "privilege" was no idle thought.

In Flanders one meets the best of England's and of France's sons, and to have lived with them, even for so short a time as six months, was the greatest privilege in life.

HEROISM OF "TOMMY ATKINS."

No words could describe the British Tommy Atkins. "I have seen him in the trenches, I have seen him tramping through a mud-slashed Flemish road, I have seen him lying wounded in hospital, at home in billets, and in the grip of German gas."

"Multiple adjectives are useless and utterly fail to tell you what he is like, and the wonder of him."

"For pure British grit there are few cases like that of Corporal X, of the Cornish Light Infantry. He had been shot at a few yards range, while standing on the edge of a parapet throwing bombs. The mutilation was ghastly. His lower jaw was gone, and one could only pray for a merciful Providence to release him. To save himself from choking he tore away with his hands what remained of the jaw!! He came under my charge, and I am glad to say he survived, and when last seen was writing to his wife. I was curious to see what he would tell, and how he would prepare her and what he really thought himself. To repeat to you what his letter said is a justifiable breach of confidence, for we have a right to know what our men are doing in Flanders. He wrote thus:

Dear Nell,—Just a few lines to let you know that the Germans have managed to smack me on the jaw, so I am away out of the fight now, hair cut short, moustache cut short, beard growing long. Then I have to write down on paper as they have bent my tongue so much that I cannot speak yet. But I think my doctor can fix me up all right, at least I hope so, and hope that he will let me come home for a bit. I am all right, etc., etc., but for my face.

Your Loving Husband.

"For masterly brevity of style I commend you to the following, dated from the Duchess of Westminster's Hospital:—

Dear Rose,—No doubt you will be surprised to hear from me here, but I have received two shrapnel wounds, one on the head, and one through the leg.—Frank.

Dr. Walker continued by a few words concerning the Duchess's Hospital, and how it was carried on solely through voluntary subscriptions. He recalled the many tales told in "Punch" of the humours and rough witticisms of Tommy Atkins. One he himself could recall. A trench had been captured from the enemy, and a Tommy went up to the edge of it and called out, "How many of you are down there?" A reply came in English, "Five." "Then share that!!" and he threw a bomb amongst them!!!

Dr. Walker recalled another incident. An oldish gentleman, benevolent-looking in his spectacles, had arrived at the seat of war to enquire into the "alleged" German atrocities. He wanted to speak himself to the Tommies. He was taken to the bedside of an old type of British regular. Everything was explained to the wounded soldier, as to whom the old gentleman was.

"Yes," the soldier said, "I entered one village just after the Germans had been there. It was something cruel. Why, I went to the cellar of a place and what do you think I found there?"

"A German spy or something?"

"No, lying amongst a heap of bottles, some of them broken, were five Germans, dead drunk."

"What did you do?"

"Whipped a bayonet through the lot!!" and the benevolent gentleman left with a curious expression on his face and without a word.

"Tommy Atkins," continued Dr. Walker, "was not brutal. During his stay in Flanders he had noted the psychological change in him, and an interesting study it was. One event sticks in Tommy's mind. In the month of May the Germans launched their devilish chlorine and since then there had been a new light in Tommy's eye and a change. This is not war; it is a fiendish invention and scientific and heartless torture. "Let us get at them with the bayonet," and then the lecturer described how they would rush with fixed bayonets into wire entanglements unsupported by artillery and how hundreds were shot down. The month of May was a terrible month.

"HOSPITAL WORK."

In the hospitals all were working at high pressure. Two operating tables were going in the same room, and often another case was waiting on the floor. Dr. Walker himself had operated for six hours on end with a pause and yet through it all Tommy Atkins heart was always gay, chaffing his pals, smoking eternal cigarettes, swathed in bloody bandages, at night sitting up in bed coughing from the fearful effects of the gas and at times delirious and imagining himself once more in the trenches.

What a difference the morning brought. Tommy was never convinced that it was indecent to be carrying a bit of German shell in his inside.

One case was an extraordinary one that came under Dr. Walker's notice. A soldier was talking to a sentry, when suddenly he fell. There was no sound of a shot, but later it was discovered that two inches of the sentry's bayonet was missing and it was found in the soldier's head, having been knocked off by a spent German bullet.

Dr. Walker drew a graphic word-picture explaining how this was not an artistic war. It was a war of sewers. It was not picturesque. No brilliant cavalry charges and the like, and yet what wonderful work the cavalry had done. There was one thing, however: the cavalry man would wear his spurs in the trenches!! How a senior officer of the A.S.C. got in the way of a cavalry charge with his motor-car, and how an officer galloped to him and yelled "Get out of the way, you are on my battlefield!" and how they charged and cut the Germans to pieces and returned through them again was told to Dr. Walker. The song of "Joshua" was heard softly and slowly at first, quicker and louder and yet louder, and then the cavalry met the Germans; still all through that encounter "Joshua" was shouted to the skies.

How terribly the 9th Lancers suffered when once in action, how they lost Julian Grenfell, was told, and, expecting to see sorrow and grief, Dr. Walker went forward to a farm house where some were quartered, and looked through the windows and there he found them in laughter and gaiety those who had lost their friends, who were hurt, wounded and tired.

Wonderfully graphic was the lecturer's explanation of the support of artillery and what it meant to the soldier, the confidence it gave. It was a thing that could not be understood without experience.

Tales of Mr. Smith's bombing party. How a huge steel shield was thus labelled; how six sailors by severe haulage pulled up Mr. Smith on his truck with the shield mounted; how that gentleman threw bombs and was hauled back again; how unpopular he was on account of rousing the German fury on account of his exploit and attracting a shower of shell and shrapnel was all told.

How so much of the war was fought in the dark, in trenches and dark valleys by heroes who expected no regard was told, and then most graphically Dr. Walker drew a picture of shameful contrast. Briefly, it was this. Two messages arrived. "Welsh miners on strike," said one. "Private X for absenting himself from duty duly court-martialled and shot."

Not only these facts, but the choice of the lecturer's expressions in telling them made the contrast a terrible one.

There was no fear of death or mutilation in Flanders, but only one thing troubled the soldier, who had given up his job, profession, business or shop to go to fight: What would happen to him when the war was

"WEARING O' THE GREEN."

(UP TO DATE).

Oh, Paddy dear, and did you hear, the news that's going round?
Some Irish want the Germans to possess our Irish ground;
The Shinn Finns and the Clan-na-Gaels have sworn to lend a hand,
To make our isle a province of the Kaiser's Vaterland;
I met with Mathoo Cummings, and he took me by the throat,
Shouting "Deutschland Ubber Alles,
Wilhelms got my Irish goat,
St. Patrick's day henceforth we'll keep not wearing of the green,
But eatin' Bismark herrings on a German submarine.

Then since the colour we must wear is Prussia's yellow hue,
'Twill give our "Orange" bitters shure, a dash of "demon" too;
We will change our names, our minds, our hopes, our songs, our music, and
For Erin's harp we'll substitute "dot leedle German band."
We will live on beer and pretzels, and for good old Irish stew,
Eat Sauer kraut and sausage, and pumpernickel chew;
We will? We will, like fun we will, we'll stay just as we are,
With "Ireland for the Irish" and "Home Rule" our guiding star,
We will never change the colour that we wear in our caubeen,
We want no yellow flag for ours, we'll stick to the Irish Green.

F.C.C.A. MEETING

5 PER CENT DIVIDEND DECLARED

Reports from London state that the Annual General Meeting of the Ferro Carril Central Argentino took place on Wednesday, Oct. 20, in the city.

Total receipts for the year amounted to $5,755,253 and expenditure to $3,363,055.

A dividend of 5 per cent was declared, a balance of $345,828 was carried to next year.

It would have been possible to declare a dividend of 7 per cent but it is considered advisable to pursue the customary safe policy of strengthening reserve.

Prospects for the ensuing year are considered promising. In the first quarter an increase is reported of £204,600.

over? --and that is a question that remains to be settled.

"I returned to this country with the greatest admiration for France, said Dr. Walker, and he explained how not an able-bodied man is seen in the fields, the harvest is gathered by old men, by women and children. They have but one will, one thought, one purpose, however long it may be and whatever the cost; and that, the final victory. "The spirit in the heart of the Maid of Orleans runs through France to-day."

"England has been happy in her Allies."

Amidst loud applause, Dr. Walker brought the lecture to a conclusion.

Mr. Frank Foster, the Chairman, then thanked the lecturer and briefly asked for self-denial amongst all so as to do all possible to help the brave fellows at home.

Dr. Walker replied, and again pointed out the one fear the soldier had. What would happen to him, after giving up his all, when he returned from the war and all enthusiasm and excitement was over.

Mr. Warden, the Hon. Secretary of the Royal Colonial Institute, addressed a few remarks and read two letters, one from Cecil A. Robert and another from D. Kempner, thanking all in Buenos Aires for the cigarettes sent. These were only two of many letters. One word of appeal for the fund brought in $100 after the close of the lecture.

MOTHER-IN-LAW

What a joke the mother-in-law has been! How she has been written up, written down, written against—and how seldom written for! And yet for every husband and every wife there are two mothers-in-law if still alive. She has been the butt of music halls, and the main-stay of the comic song writer.

The "in-law" is the token by which everything sacred and revered to the name of mother, may be changed to scorn and ridicule. And really it is all absurdly unfair. Can anybody be the thesis and the antithesis at the same time? Euclid would immediately reduce the proposition to absurdity. The mother of one of a couple must be the mother-in-law of the other; and if she be revered as mother, and execrated as mother-in-law; then there is little hope for the unity of man and wife.

It is most interesting to read the best word for mother-in-law, the result of a competition in San Francisco, U.S.A. It is: "His mother and I had never known each other. It was not until a still night when my babe lay fighting for breath with all the odds of croup against him that the revelation came. As in a nightmare, I saw her snatch him from me and apply the restoratives my inexperience had failed to suggest. Once she had given life to her son—my husband; now she gave life to my son. Through her I was doubly blessed, and, penitent and grateful, I heard her calm words, "Daughter, I know. I have been a mother for thirty-five years." And I think in this little story, pathetic in its sincerity may be read much of the misunderstanding between those who stand "in-law" to each other! "His mother and I had never known each other." And there are so many who build up barriers from the very first, and never try to know each other. There is no whole-heartedness, perhaps, on either side; and the worst qualities in each direct the conduct towards the other.

What a lot of nonsense has been written about the mother-in-law!

JANE ADDAMS.

The New York Herald in an article entitled "A Great Peace Herald" gives a clearer idea of Miss Jane Addams' mission than those who allude scornfully to this lady's work can have conceived. It says:—

Jane Addams' great heart would literally love a world into peace. America's most useful woman citizen is now completing the most dramatic pilgrimage that any woman has made since the day Joan of Arc left her village of Domremy to save her native land.

Miss Addams has gone to the quarrelling kings of Europe and said to them, "Gentlemen, stop this dreadful warfare and listen to the plea for peace of the women of the world!"

Long ago, when Chicago's famous Hull House was still an experiment, little boys clinched in battle before its doors were sometimes brought to consider terms of peace by Miss Addams.

Just so, the woman peace ambassador has gone upon her mission to crowned heads and great officers of State. While the Powers of the world have been using up whole dictionaries to get into communication with the warring States she has carried her plea undaunted to the personal representatives of the Dutch Government, the British Government, the Imperial German Government, the Austro-Hungarian Government, the Italian Government, Pope Benedict, the Belgian Government and the French Government.

Of course, the "please stop fighting" plea was only the substance of the communication which Miss Addams made to the representative officials who gave her audience. The proposal that she laid before the Powers was that they should accede to the formation of a committee of the greatest citizens of neutral countries—these not necessarily to be Government officials—which committee would enter into consultation with each of the belligerent countries with the object of ascertaining what each country considered essential as the outcome of the war.

The committee would then act as a channel of communication through which the demands of each country could be made known to all the others, so that some understanding might be arrived at by the fighting nations.

These proposals were formulated at the Women's International Peace Congress, which was held at The Hague. Miss Addams was unanimously chosen to preside over this congress and was later selected as the head of a delegation of three women to carry the women's peace proposals to the interested Powers.

After paying her respects to the Dutch officials Miss Addams set out to interview the statesmen of Great Britain.

On her arrival in London she met with a flattering reception from the public at large, but it was rumoured that the Government looked with none too favourable an eye on the peace envoy, and that she would receive no official recognition.

But with the diplomacy acquired through years of effort in trying to persuade the world to ways of peace and pleasantness she bided her time and presently succeeded in interviewing both Premier Asquith and Sir Edward Grey.

Burdened with her idealistic programme, Miss Addams made her way back to Holland and through to Berlin, where to the surprise of most people, she was sympathetically received by Herr von Jagow, the Foreign Minister.

In Italy Signor Salandra and Baron Sonnino received her with the utmost politeness, but they told her that, since they had just gone to war, peace proposals were at this time not to be thought of. Pope Benedict, however, welcomed her with true appreciation. He expressed the hope that the United States would take the initiative in bringing about peace, and pledged the support of the Holy See to any such project.

That the French are not yet ready to lay down their arms was the conclusion of the peace ambassador after her interview with the representatives of the Government. Although she was received with respect and friendliness, it was made very clear to her that in the opinion of the French authorities the time has not come when the nation can even consider peace proposals.

The Department of Health in New York has just started an educational lunch room for its employes. In the first place this lunch room provides a wholesome meal, and in the second place it educates the employes on the subject of food and nutrition. The menu not only names the dishes but analyses their food values and gives model health combinations of food.

The "lonely soldier" is not forgotten in this war, whatever he may have suffered in bygone years. Lady Essex is one of the society ladies who have made it their care to brighten such lives. She has adopted five, with whom she carries on a lively correspondence and whom she has literally provided with creature comforts. She has never seen them, but has all their portraits.

"TO MARKET, TO MARKET!"

A few years ago, the housewife who dared, basket on arm, proceed to market to purchase her own goods was open to ridicule and contempt. But times have changed and are changing, and the housewife of to-day may go her own way without laying herself open to scorn or abuse—this is one little result of the woman's movement—of the "Revolt of Islam." In Buenos Aires to-day housewives do their daily marketing in the morning and attend fashionable functions in the afternoons; although the beginning and the new-comer go in fear and trembling to the former duty, many still send their servants; but finding themselves ill-served, some have decided to do their own marketing even in a foreign country. These will be pleased to read about Mrs. Julian Heath and to know how she is helping along the marketing reform. The "Boston Globe" says of this lady and her Housewives' League:—

Some years ago, when everybody began to feel the high cost of living in America keenly, the majority of those supposed to know the cause of this, solemnly declared it was on account of the tariff and the increased output of gold. This sounded funny to women, but the masculine mind seemed to be absolutely certain that the reasons they gave were correct.

But Mrs. Julian Heath, the founder and president of the Housewives' League, felt certain there was something behind these reasons. That is why she formed the league, in order to probe the matter to the bottom.

She found that America has laws on her statute books for the protection of the home, but these laws are not enforced.

If there is any one thing that the Housewives' League stands for, it is a square deal for all, and this Mrs. Heath believes is now fully recognised.

Any woman may become a member of the league, upon payment of the nominal sum of fivepence, and with this goes the Housewives' League's button, which has already become a power throughout the length and breadth of the land. The State chairman wrote Mrs. Heath not long ago that she went into a market that was not fair in dealing with its customers, and she heard the remark made:—"There comes that confounded button again."

Another woman of the league almost the same day told Mrs. Heath that her tradesman said he was "proud when anyone came to his store wearing that button, because it placed his store on the high plane where it belonged."

The Housewives' League records members in every State of the Union. It is destined to become international. The Housewives' League is a movement rather than an organisation, and this newly-awakened consciousness of the housewife has changed the entire viewpoint of women toward housekeeping, and of the public toward the housewife.

And all this splendid work Mr. Julian Heath has accomplished. She has made a whole nation sit up and take notice that the housewives are at last recognising that they are a great factor, if not the greatest, next to the builders of the nation.

"Put your market baskets on your arms and go to the city markets," Mrs. Heath told the women of the federation; "see for yourselves the conditions there."

Only a few months after the foundation of the league it affected trade conditions and controlled them as no other protesting body could. It showed how the extortionate profit of middlemen was wrung out of the housewives. Now no woman wants to pay an exorbitant price for butter, particularly when she knows she is being imposed upon, and yet before this league was formed she was obliged to if she wanted her family to enjoy the excellent meals she had heretofore been able to serve. Crestfallen, humiliated and indignant, thousands of women have gone home with perhaps half the usual allowance of butter. It was the same with other foodstuffs. But what was she to do?

Of the distinguished nurses now at the front, none are doing more effective work than Lady Dorothea Fielding, the second of Earl Denbigh's seven daughters. Lady Dorothea was one of the first women of the British peerage to offer her services in any capacity at the front, and she is applying herself to her nursing work on the Belgian frontier with amazing energy and enthusiasm. It will probably surprise many admirers of her work to learn that Miss May Sinclair, the popular novelist, is working with Lady Dorothea.

If the Parisians are clever enough to rid themselves of foreign influences, we may see a France regenerated, not only in morals, but in art; her women will once more dress as women, not as women without a name; her decorative art may lose its Munich flavour, her architecture may return to its old traditions, and brutal colouring may give place to something more in keeping with her natural mentality. Furs have come back, skirts are all wider round the feet and quite short, and there is a certain little black velvet hat which has obviously been inspired by the cap of the London Scottish Regiment. It suits a fresh-faced girl, but it ill-becomes an older woman.

Then along came Mrs. Julian Heath with her brilliant, simple and practical ideas, and most of the world knows that since that time every woman has profited by following the advice given from the headquarters of the Housewives' League. Now they know what they can do, for they have found out that it is not only one middleman to fight against, but five or six who get their share of the pie before the housewife was given the privilege of paying the whole of it.

Then the household women were told that this man and that man was to blame. That did not seem a satisfactory answer, at least, not to any woman alive to the interests of those around her. Finally, they all rose as one woman, lifted up their voices, and instead of weeping, emphatically said: "We don't care who is to blame; somebody is to blame, and we'll stand for it no longer. We'll go without if need be. Gentlemen, we won't buy!" And buy they did not, until prices became normal.

The league started questions that men were obliged to answer. The housewife wanted to know what caused the rise in the food market. Her husband could not tell her, although he was active in running the Government, whenever his assistance was required. He told her vaguely of food trusts, small supplies, fluctuating markets, and the everlasting grip of the middleman.

Ah! so that was it. That last sentence caught and held her attention. If there was a grip, why not loosen it and relieve the tension? Efforts are being made to instal a great new public market in New York City.

The sentiment and policy of the Housewives' League has stirred the entire nation and touched it on its dearest point—the family.

The work of organisation was the most important, the most interesting and vital phase of the movement, because it was the first time in history the housewives of the nation were organised. The unique feature of the movement is that each individual woman constitutes herself a committee of one to carry out the lines upon which the league is working. Individual responsibility and then concerted action. "We must remember," Mrs. Heath says, "that in matters which pertain to the home, the woman with the dollar in her pocket is all-powerful."

Some of the heartiest encouragement and offers of co-operation have come from the men who are putting out only pure food, for they know that the league is helping them to drive out the inferior article.

Land of Lilliput.

Conducted by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

I am wondering if any of you really know how many things first came from Germany! The very name to-day seems to rouse a bitter feeling; but the world is very much the richer in knowledge and science (which may mean very much the same thing), on account of the ingenuity of the German people. For instance, to-day, little girls and boys have watches given them for birthday and New Year presents, and think them a very ordinary present indeed; because the timepiece need not be costly, as they were in by-gone days, when it was the custom to lend watches to be worn on special occasions.

The first watches were supposed to have come from Nuremberg in Germany, and they were known under the name of "Nuremberg Eggs" on account of their shape which was egg-like. The works were enclosed in a circular metal case, and they were hung from the girdle. At first the movements were entirely of steel, then brass was used for the plates and pillars, with wheels and pinions of steel, and lastly it was only the pinions which were made of steel. The fusee, or grooved cone around which the chain is wound in a watch, was generally adopted in 1540, being invented by Jacob Zeck, of Prague. After this no change occurred for 50 years, during which time many quaint cases were produced; the works being contained in bodies of the eagle and duck. A lady in England possessed one in the form of a duck, the feathers being of silver, the dial plate encircled with a gilt ornamental design, and the wheels worked on small rubies, it having been made in the time of Queen Elizabeth, who had a hobby for collecting watches of all kinds, and who had to keep a clockmaker to maintain her watches and clocks in order. Watches worn as bracelets were in use in this Queen's reign.

Watch glasses were introduced about 1610, being also of German origin; and the French changed the original shape from the bull's eyes with a circular flat centre, to a flatter pattern called "lunettes." Watch cases were also made about this century. Enamelled watches were made in the seventeenth century; and white enamelled dials, which are the most practical for seeing the time at a glance were first introduced in France and Switzerland about 1690; and about 1844 the first keyless watches were made.

What do you think folks did before watches and clocks were invented, to tell the time? The first form of the measurement of time that can be traced comes from the Babylonians Persians and Syrians, who began the day at sunrise, and divided it into 24 hours. The Romans observed sunrise, proclaimed noon by a herald, and stopped work at sunset. They counted 12 hours from sunrise to sunset and twelve from sunset to sunrise. But the real measurement of the hours of course before the invention of watches and clocks was made by means of the sun. The shadow from the sun suggested its application to a sun-dial as far back as 540 years before Christ. And water-clocks were the first contrivances for measuring spaces of time independently of the motion of the earth, and these are of great antiquity—but they were far from reliable. Candles were used later on to mark time, one inch of candle burning away in 20 minutes. Alfred the Great devoted eight hours a day to prayer, eight to business, eight to sleep, study and refreshment, and his Chaplain lighted a fresh candle every four hours throughout the day and night, the candles being made 12 inches in length.

Sand glasses were introduced about 330 A.D. These were made as you probably know of two bulbs of glass with a thin neck between just the same as the glass one sees now to measure the time for boiling an egg—only the dry sand placed in the upper bulb took exactly one hour to run through the neck to the lower bulb, instead of three minutes!

Now there is a great deal more I might tell you about the making of watches and clocks, but I will not, in case you should forget it all; so I'll just tell you a little story about a Mr. Allen, a reputed sorcerer, who died in 1630. "One time, being at Home Lacy, in Herefordshire (watches were then rarities), he happened to leave his watch in the chamber window. The maid came in to make the bed, and, hearing a thing in a case cry 'tick, tick, tick,' presently concluded that that was the devil (Allen's supposed familiar), and took it by the string with the tongs and threw it out of the window into the moat to drown the devil. It so happened that the string hung on a sprig of elder that grew out of the moat, and this confirmed them that it was the devil. So the good old gentleman got his watch again."

Your story this week is called,

THE GREEN APPLES

It really was too irritating for words.

The apple tree in the garden next door was covered with most gorgeous green apples. They were simply bearing down the branches with their weight. One branch hung right over into the Pinkerton's garden. It was a specially heavily-laden branch, too. Tod tried ever so hard to count the apples that were on it, but he couldn't. There were much too many of them to count.

"A waste, I call it," he grumbled, "Leaving them to rot up there."

"I don't s'pose the ogre'll ever touch one of them," said Mabel, "and if he did he wouldn't enjoy them nearly so much as we should."

The children called the man next door "the ogre," because he looked so cross and disagreeable, and was always grumbling about the noise they made in their garden.

"Just as if we can't have any fun in our own garden without asking him," grunted Tod.

"It's bad enough dangling these scrumptious apples under our very noses without our being able to have even a bite at one," Mabel said.

They looked and looked at the apples, and at last Tod could stand it no longer.

"I don't care what happens I'm going to get some," he announced. "Here goes!"

And with the help of a garden seat in a few minutes he had scrambled to the top of the wall. He found he could just reach the tempting branch!

"Hold out your pinny, Mabel," he called to her. "I can reach them easily, and I'll drop them down one by one."

But the next moment he let go of the branch in dismay, for—

"Oh, you will, will you, you young rascal!" an angry voice was saying.

It was the ogre. Tod tried to jump back on to the seat again, but he missed his footing, and fell headlong into the next door garden instead.

His head hurt frightfully, and so did his ankle. It was with great difficulty that he scrambled to his feet, and even then he had to lean heavily against the wall, his ankle hurt so.

"So I've caught you red-handed!" the ogre said.

"Please," faltered Ted, "the branch was hanging over our wall, and I thought—I thought—"

But just then the garden seemed to be turning round and round at an alarming rate, and the fence seemed to be falling down on top of him, and then Tod felt himself falling, falling, until he was caught in a pair of strong arms and carried into the house.

When he came to again he found himself in a little white-curtained bed, but it wasn't his own bed, and he'd never seen the room before.

"He's awake," someone was saying. It was Mabel, and there was mother, too, who hurried to give him a big hug.

Standing in the background was the ogre, and next to him was a dear old lady with snow-white hair.

The ogre was smiling at him as kindly as could be.

"You've sprained your ankle, my lad," he said, "and you've given your head a nasty knock, too. You'll have to stay in this house until you get well. But your mother'll stay with you, and perhaps you'll find me not such an ogre as I look."

And indeed—Dr. Smith—for that was his name—was ever so kind. He tended Tod's bad ankle until it got quite well, and Mrs. Smith, the lady with the white hair, helped Tod's mother to nurse him as much as she could.

But she couldn't do much, for she was an invalid herself, and that was why Dr. Smith has asked the children to be less noisy at their play.

"I'm never going to call him the ogre again," said Tod to Mabel, when he was nearly well. "He's as nice as nice. He's promised me a box of soldiers if I hurry up and get well and as many green apples as I can eat."

"All the same, I'm frightened of him just a little," said Mabs. "He's got such a strict look at times. Perhaps he likes boys and not girls. That's why—"

"No, you're wrong, my dear," said Mrs. Smith, who had just come in, and heard what Mabs had been saying. "Dr. Smith is very fond of little girls. We had one just like you"—and the dear old lady gave a sigh—"but she died. You are very like her, little Mabs, and that's what makes him look very stern at times. You remind him of his own small Mabs—for our little girl was called Mabs, too."

Mabs and Tod felt ever so sorry for Dr. Smith when they heard this sad tale.

"No wonder he's cross at times," said Tod, when Mrs. Smith had gone out of the room. "He must be lonely with no children to play with or scold, 'cos grown-up children simply love to have someone to give a good scolding now and then, I feel sure."

Mabs didn't say anything, but next minute she was stealing very softly and carefully downstairs. She reached the study door and turned the handle very quietly. Dr. Smith was sitting gazing into the fire. Mabs felt very shy as her tiny feet sank into the carpet, but she had made up her mind about what she was going to do.

She had come in so softly that he hadn't heard her, and didn't know that she was there until she had scrambled on to his knee and her little arms were twined round his neck.

"Dear me, dear me! What's this?" he exclaimed, in amazement, and he quite forgot to look stern, for you see Mabs had taken him by surprise.

"Please," said Mabs, "I've come to say you may scold me as much as you like, and I love you very much, and I'm going to be your little Mabs."

But she couldn't say any more, for Dr. Smith was hugging her so tightly. It was just like a bear's hug, she told Tod later, though, as she'd never been hugged by a bear, I don't see

SOME WOMEN AND MANY THINGS

The value of training to women, as Miss Lena Ashwell pointed out in Manchester recently, has been emphatically displayed by the demands made by the war. It was made emphatically plain in the first days of strain, to the discomfiture of those who thought unbounded willingness in itself a sufficient qualification. In most towns, work among women has been wisely directed to making women competent workers, and England will have need of them when her need for fighting men is happily past. Her men are responding well to the call of arms; the demand upon women will come more slowly. It will be heavy and it will last longer, but they will respond as women always have responded through the years when glory is fading. Very many women will learn through this war how to render to their country a trained and disciplined service, but another effect will be to enhance the importance both in reality and in the eyes of men of motherhood and mother care.

Of course, but why of course?

All English and Scottish railway companies have agreed that the employment of women is an emergency provision arising entirely out of the war. As to wages, the pay of the women is to be the minimum pay of the grade in which they are employed.

And this!

A method of adjusting war salaries recently suggested by an English Grocers' Union is meeting with some comment. The gallant grocers want the money saved by firms employing cheap women instead of men to be distributed in bonuses among the male employes.

One of the most daring Russian aviators at the front is a girl from a Petrograd school. She recently arrived at Kieff, wounded in the arm and leg, having been hit while flying over some Austrian positions. She kept control over her machine, however, until she landed safely in the Russian lines.

Mrs. Mabel Dearmer, the well-known author, and wife of Dr. Percy Dearmer, has just died of enteric fever in Serbia. She and her husband were both suffragists, and Mrs. Dearmer's charming books and children's plays endeared her to a large circle of readers. This is another of the precious lives laid down in the succour of Serbia.

how she could have known what a bear's hug was like, dears, do you?"

And so, Mabs and the ogre were the best of friends after that. Mabs worked him the most lovely kettleholder for his birthday, all by herself, and he was ever so pleased.

"You must come and see me every day, even when Tod gets better," he said, and she promised that she would.

Tod was quite sorry to leave the ogre's house when his ankle got well again, but Dr. Smith told the children they could run in and out whenever they liked.

The morning after Tod got home the children had such a surprise. For when they went into the garden, what do you think they saw?

Why, the green apple tree; but it was in their garden, and not in the garden next door.

And pinned to the trunk of the tree was a little note. This is what it said:

"A present from the ogre, who's turned out to be not so black as he was painted after all."

CONCERT AT HAEDO

IN AID OF ST. PETER'S CHURCH,
FLORES.

There was a concert held at the Cosmopolitan Hall, Haedo, on Oct. 21, which will live a long time in the memory of those who attended it, not only for the splendid programme presented, nor for the excellence of each item, but also for the thorough swing with which the whole concert went.

The large audience—the hall was filled to overflowing—were present with a determination to be pleased, but even had they gone in a liverish mood, any souring complaints of that description would have been entirely cured. From the first item to the last it was a most excellent concert, and Mr. Wooton and the Rev. Moverley Jones are to be congratulated on the success of their arrangements and upon the genuine pleasure they accorded the audience in having provided such a strong and varied programme.

A most original item and one which kept the hall in roars of laughter was the Toy Symphony Town Band. This was composed of artists who played all kinds of weird instruments, in the most amusing costumes, and playing with the weirdest and most humorous action. Loud were the calls for an encore, which was supplied by the "Washington Post," and "Tipperary." Mr. Llewelyn Hawes was at the piano and Professor Herr Von Turpentine was the quaintest conductor possible. Mr. Ellis Griffin was in great form, and as always was tremendously appreciated, and was encored no less than four times. Mr. Ellis Phillips at the piano was another artist whom the audience would not let rest. Mr. Phillips, who also bore the brunt of the accompanying, is a fine pianist, with a perfect touch and an inimitable entertainer.

Mr. Thurburn had his audience mystified with his conjuring, while both Mr. Charles Gabb and Mr. F. F. Bideleux, two singers whose renown and excellent vocal gifts assure the success of any concert, were in splendid voice.

Mrs. Thomson and Mr. S. Alfred Drysdale were the lady artists whose names alone and the fact that they were at their best is a sufficient hall mark of excellence.

It was a particularly entertaining evening, and one which fully deserved every meed of appreciation it received. The ladies of the Church Association provided refreshments, and the benefit to St. Peter's Church, Flores, was considered a most sound and satisfactory one.

The programme was as follows:—

Part I.

1. Overture, Orchestral Trio by members of the Conservatorio Mascagni (Mozart).
2. Song, "Blow, Blow thou Winter Wind" (Serjeant), Mr. F. F. Bideleux.
3. Song, "The Rosary," encore, "Eyes that used to gaze into mine," Mrs. R. H. Thomson.
4. At the Piano, Mr. Ellis Phillips, "The Butcher Song," encores, "By Deside," and "Some Short Stories."
5. Song, "Mountain Lovers" (Squire), Mr. Charles Gabb; encore, "I hear you calling me."
6. Humorous Song, "That's All," Mr. Ellis Griffin; encore, "Jane."
7. Song (a) "Lovers in the Lane" and (b) "The Wood Pigeon" (Liza Lehmann), Mrs. A. T. Drysdale.
8. Toy Symphony. The High "C" or High "Doh," Town Band, accompanied by Mr. J. L. Hawes. Conductor, Herr von Turpentine. Encores, "Washington Post" and "Tipperary."

Part II.

1. Conjuring, Mr. Eric Thurburn.
2. Song, "The Bedouin Love Song" (Pinsuti), Mr. F. F. Bideleux.
3. Humorous Song, "Yip I Addy I Aye," encores, "Far Far Away" and "Come, only come," Mr. Ellis Griffin.
4. Cello solo, Saint Saens "The death of a Swan," Mrs. R. H. Thomson.
5. Duet, "Still as the Night," Mrs. A. T. Drysdale and Mr. F. F. Bideleux.
6. At the piano, Mr. Ellis Phillips,

ARGENTINE VOLUNTEERS

PHOTOS FROM THE FRONT.

Through the kindness of readers THE HERALD is able to publish to-day two photographs of Argentine volunteers now on active service at the front.

Trooper A. O. Griffin, formerly of Villa Urquiza, left Buenos Aires in January last to join the colours. He enlisted in King Edward's Horse and is now with the regiment in Flanders, where they have been since June 3. The photograph was taken "somewhere in France."

TROOPER A. O. GRIFFIN, OF KING
EDWARD'S HORSE.

The second photograph is that of Sergeant Harold West, who was formerly employed by Mr. C. A. Pope at Calle Lima, Buenos Aires. Sergeant West abandoned very bright prospects and volunteered early in the war. He joined the 18th Battalion of the Liverpool (Irish) Regiment and saw a lot of fierce fighting around Ypres, where he is still on service with his regiment. Since joining the colours Mr. West has been promoted to sergeant and is secretary to the colonel of the regiment. In a letter dated September 23 he reported that he was well and fit.

"Potted Shakespeare"; encore, "Richard I."

7. Song, "An Evening Song" (Blumenthal), Mr. Charles Gabb; encore, "Two Eyes of Grey."

8. Song, "The Nightingales of Lincoln's Inn" (H. Oliver), Mrs. A. T. Drysdale.

9. Humorous Duet and Dance, "The Gay Owl," Messrs. F. F. Bideleux and Ellis Griffin.

CONCERT AT LOMAS

A YOUTHFUL PIANISTE'S
SUCCESS.

Men and women ought to sing as easily as they speak. Every one ought to stand sit and move with natural grace, and under proper training every one can regain the natural grace which was so characteristic of the Grecian people.

This was pretty well exemplified on Oct. 23 at the grand concert which was held in the Barker Memorial Hall at Lomas, before a large audience.

The singers displayed that ease which comes with thorough practice and a familiarity of the selections sung, and while there was no outstanding feature, the whole of the concert produced a harmonious effect by its uniform composition.

Miss Nordaby attracted unusual attention in her pianoforte selection by displaying remarkable knowledge of technique for such a young person (only fifteen years of age), and although she appeared slightly nervous at the beginning, her uneasiness gradually wore off, and at the completion of the solo thunderous applause greeted her exhibition, which necessitated a number of encores.

Programme

Part I.—Argentine National Anthem by Mr. W. Cowlishaw. Pianoforte solo, selected, by Miss Nordaby. Song by Mrs. Alfred T. Drysdale. Song by Mr. F. F. Bideleux. Song, "Beloved it is morn" by Mrs. Rowland Henry. Song "I like your apron and your bonnet" by Mrs. T. R. Richards. "Collaborators," a witty sketch played by Mrs. J. J. Rugeroni and Mr. G. Ellis Griffin in the respective parts of Mary and Reginald.

Part II.—Pianoforte solo, selected, by Miss Nordaby. Dance "The Backward Brigade," exhibited by the pupils of the Barker College. Song "My dear soul" by Mrs. Rowland Henry. Song by Mr. F. F. Bideleux. Song by Mrs. Alfred T. Drysdale. Duet and dance "The Gay Owls" by Mr. F. F. Bideleux and Mr. G. Ellis Griffin. Song "On the Mississippi" by Mrs. Richards. Song "That's all," Mr. G. Ellis Griffin, and God save the King closed the programme, which merited the hearty applause of the spectators.

Among those present was F. H. Chevalier Boutell, the authorised representative of the British Red Cross.

$1,500 ON THE DOORSTEP!

HOW AN UNKNOWN BENEFACTOR DISTRIBUTES LARGESSE

A most interesting incognito in our city is some nameless benefactor who gives his money but leaves no trace. Some ten thousand dollars he has given to date and long may he be spared. He has chosen the Second Methodist Episcopal (Spanish-speaking) Church of the city, Rev. Dr. Thomson, Pastor, as the channel through which he bestows his gifts, never leaving any name but only a scrap of paper indicating the charity to which the money is to be given. Sometimes the money is enclosed in an envelope and dropped in the bu-zón. On the occasion a thousand dollar bill so unwrapped was placed under the church door and found three days later by the care-taker on cleaning up. Last Saturday his gift was fifteen hundred dollars, one thousand of which he specifies is to go to the Methodist Orphanage at Mercedes. This is a very timely help to the orphanage as its annual expenses are now two thousand dollars (paper) more than the income although the most rigid economy is practiced. Twenty-four boys are now supported at Mercedes—and there is room for fifty as soon as more money is forthcoming—at an average of twenty-four dollars per month for food and clothing. Other necessary expenses brings the cost per boy monthly up to thirty dollars (paper).

Donations to meet the deficit of two thousand dollars in the annual revenue will be thankfully received. They may be sent or reported to the Chairman of the General Committee, Rev. Dr. McLaughlin, 718 Corrientes, or to Rev. Dr. Thomson, 968 Calle Junin.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

The wooden statue of Field Marshal von Hindenburg has been set up in Berlin, and our first picture illustrates the ceremony of the driving of the first nails. The Germans almost worship von Hindenburg. The statue is to be submitted to a sort of nail-driving competition. A gold nail can be driven at a certain price. Then in the scale come silver, brass and copper nails, down to the ordinary iron spike. The money so raised is to go to patriotic funds. It is sacrilegious to drive a nail in the Field Marshal's head. Our second picture shows part of the defences of Paris against aerial raids. The French capital is far ahead of London in the matter of protection against Zeppelins. The British submarine E13 ran ashore on the Danish coast. While lying helpless a German warship attacked her. The Danes sent a destroyer which gallantly steamed in between the German ship and her helpless target. They rescued the survivors of the crew, and then towed the submarine into Copenhagen. The hope that Rumania will fight for the Allies lends additional interest to the picture we reproduce showing the Rumanian army being reviewed by the King. The new guns shown passing the saluting base are high class weapons of heavy calibre. No troops have performed greater deeds of valour than the Australians at Gallipoli. In one of their recent wild charges they stormed over the Turkish trenches. They could not get into them, except by stabbing and hacking their way through the heavily timbered covering. The picture shows the Colonials digging out the enemy through holes. The companion picture illustrates the curious conditions of the warfare at Anzac where the Australians, after relief from the trenches, go down to the beach at Gaba Tete and bathe with shells flying about.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A railway accident which might have been attended by serious consequences occurred to a train travelling between Tucuman and Monteagudo. When within some 7 miles of Tucuman, one of the coaches of a passenger train became derailed. The engine-driver was unaware of the accident and signals of alarm were unseen owing to a huge cloud of dust. For half a mile the train went ahead, and several passengers, terrified for fear of a serious accident, were for jumping off the train.

At the arrival at the bridge which crosses over the River Lules, it was fortunate that the passengers at last succeeded in their efforts to attract the driver's attention, for assuredly the derailed waggon would have dragged others over the bridge into the river below.

Although only 7 miles from Tucuman, it was over two hours before a relief train could be sent. The accident occurred at about 7 p.m., and at 10.30 a number of officials arrived upon the scene, and a loud, if not explosive, argument took place between the passengers and the representatives of the management.

NEW PORT AT POSADAS

OPENED ON SUNDAY.

On Sunday the new port at Posadas was opened, and provided a brilliant function. The ceremony was performed by Miss Margarita Allen, whose sponsors were the Governor and Colonel Lopez.

The Archbishop, Monsignor Niella, blessed the ceremony, at which short speeches were delivered by the Governor, the Archbishop, Dr. Antonio S. Allen, whose daughter performed the opening ceremony, and the subprefect of the port. After the ceremony, an official lunch was given to the principal persons of the district.

ROULETTE AND LEGALITY

PROVINCIAL GAMBLING DENS.

Severe comment has been made on the opening of a gambling house for Roulette at Vicente Lopez.

It is declared that this, if permitted to pass unchallenged, will be only the first of a series of such establishments.

A shadow was cast on the innocent gladness of the interested parties, however, by the information that the Central Government has an eye on the proceedings, and it was deemed wise to suspend the inaugural fiesta after the invitations had actually been issued. In view of the continual complaints of scandals in the Southern Suburbs, this is something of a relief, both Avellaneda and Lanus having been mentioned on many occasions, but Vicente Lopez, Olivos, Tigre, Lomas, General Pinto and Trenque Lauquen are all understood to intend or to have intended to "have a little hell of their own!!" Naturally also the suspicion arises that where permission has been given either actually or by connivance of the local authorities, that somebody in those localities expects to benefit more or less, and that their complaisance has not been entirely disinterested.

THE BOLIVIAN INDIANS

STORIES BY A MISSIONARY

Some account of the work of the Interdenominational Mission to the Indians of Bolivia was obtained by a HERALD representative from the Rev. Mr. Allen, of that Mission, who left on Oct. 25 for Home with his wife and family by the R.M.S.P. Desna. Mr. Allen who has been temporarily resident at the Ward Institute, has the pleasant reserve and the wise taciturnity which come to thoughtful men living long in lonely places close to nature, which frequently seems to convince them that often "Silence better is than speech" but when he speaks he is very interesting and greatly to the point.

In Bolivia at least "the poor Indian" is not decreasing and about to disappear before the assault of fire-water and "civilisation." (!!!) There are about a million of him, Amaras and Quichuas, the latter near relatives if not actual descendants of those who inhabited Peru under the rule of the Incas and on whom Pizarro and his fierce conquistadores exercised cruelties surpassed only by the ferocities of the modern cultured Huns.

The Amaras are fine fellows physically often handsome, generally well built and athletic and the intelligence of both races is so high that Mr. Allen is of opinion that they rank second only to the Maoris, the finest and most intelligent "native" race of the world and surpass "the noble red man" of the northern continent.

With regard to their treatment by the Bolivian Government, Mr. Allen says that the latter shows a sincere desire for their education and welfare and has passed on two occasions, subventions for the support of the Mission. It is true that these subventions have never reached the Mission owing to poverty of the Exchequer "but" said Mr. Allen, "it showed sincere good will and we were gratified by it." It seems rather to savour of "give me back those presents I promised you."

The manners of these simple Indian peoples are such as show strong Conservative tendencies and some of them are biblical in their antique suggestion. "I have seen" said Mr. Allen "120 women gleaning after the potato gathering and being kept back by a taut rope." In religion most of them are of course adherents of the Catholic Church but their beliefs are frequently extremely vague, terribly mixed up with ideas about evil spirits and witchcraft and their Christianity can often get no further than burning candles at a shrine or paying their ecclesiastical dues. But even this is something. It is however a deplorable fact that in extremity when mortally ill or in great crisis of life they invariably call in—the witch doctor!

In medicine their ideas are equally pagan and heterodox and some of their toilet methods and preparations are such as could not possibly be mentioned in polite or even rather impolite, society. On the medical side the Mission has done much good work. Mr. Barrow, although not "qualified" treats as may as fifty cases a day; patients come to him from all over the province in which there is only one medico, very old, feeble and consequently seldom available. The natives make their own cloth on a primitive loom including a very tolerable grey serge. Their food is chiefly maize and potatoes. Among the pupils of the Mission is one promising young fellow aged 17 who speaks Amara and Quichua and reads and speaks Spanish. An example of the Quichua tongue may be given from the translation of John's Gospel, Chap. I, verse I. "Kallariypika Verbo Carka, Verbotag Dios Carka." This shows strong Spanish admixture. They are a most interesting people. Mr. Allen returns to London and thence goes to the United States while Mrs. Allen and her children go to New Zealand of which the Rev. gentleman is a native but also evidently a Scot.

"LOS COCOS"

AN APPRECIATION OF THE ALLAN GARDINER HOMES.

"Though born and bred in the narrow street
And tuned to the city's toil,
My innermost soul hears Nature's voice
And longs for the reek of the soil."

To the dweller of the city, where all day the buzz of many voices, and the roar and rumble of the traffic is about one, it is a keen delight when the labours of the day are ended to steal away for a short while into Nature's domain, to "listen" to the silence. The city with its din and bustle are far away from here, yet the air is full of sound, Nature is busy, the mountain stream is hurrying along over the stones, frogs and crickets join in a merry chorus. Occasionally can be heard the weird bark of the fox, not to speak of the familiar farm-yard sounds, so even here, it is not always one can catch that "silence."

In the west the sun is setting behind a high hill, shooting shafts of golden light down its darkening sides, flooding the valley with crimson and purple shades, turning the leaves of the trees in the Cocos and Molle woods to gold, and flashing and sparkling in the windows of some long low buildings half hidden amongst the trees.

The scene itself is enough to inspire thought, but wafted upwards on the evening breeze come the sounds of children's voices and children's merry laughter. To one who has known of the lives lived down there under those red tiled roofs, comes the consciousness that there are some voices which are heard there no longer, but are now mingled with the sounds of shot and shell or the cries of dying comrades, or almost lost in the roar of great cities, while others may be heard to break the stillness of the lonely deep, and some in gentle tones are singing little ones to sleep.

They were all children, orphan children, who might have been caught up and carried away in life's mad torrent, but are now playing a man's or a woman's part.

They have had a beautiful childhood in their spare time rambling over these beautiful hills. They could tell you the name of every bird they saw; how they built their nests; where some young foxes could be seen; and could take you on tip-toe with whispering voices to what had been the den of a "real live puma." They were taught to look upon God as their Father, in such words as were heard recently in their little church room, when a Father's love and care were shown so simply and yet so beautifully; illustrated from the presence of the wonderful Nature around them, with which they were familiar and that the youngest could understand.

In their daily life they were made to feel that each had a place in human love, by the care and kindly thought of those under whose charge they were.

There is a beautiful picture of Christ on Olivet looking down on old Jerusalem. Upon His face is the expression of intense longing for the souls of those who dwelt therein and to-day He looks down upon this monument of human effort. For His sake, and to those who have taken to their hearts this great responsibility of training the young lives snatched from the flood, He would still say "For-as-much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto Me."

BRANDISHED TWO KNIVES

ARMED LUNATIC AND THE POLICE

MADMAN IN PASEO COLON

A gentleman named Angel Crispi, Uruguayan by birth and cook by trade, proved something of a handful on Oct. 22 to the police.

In the early afternoon, this Angel was to be seen in front of Calle Belgrano on the waste ground near the Docks, brandishing, not one, but two knives of portentous size and blood-thirsty aspect. One was held in advance; the other menaced a group of police who were cautiously stalking him from behind. At the corner of Azopardo, the policeman on duty tried to intercept the "Knight with Two Swords," but was repulsed with a cut on the right hand. At the corner of Brazil, another zealous officer trying to disarm Angel got a slash on the left hand. An imposing cortege of carts, motors and boys on bicycles accompanied the warrior, who, at the corner of Almirante Brown, attacked the mounted gendarme at the point. The latter fired twice in the air, and the police coming up "machete" in hand formed a circle round the knife-bearer. After delivering a few more thrusts to left and right, Señor Angel Crispi surrendered and was disarmed. As the darbies were snapped on his wrists, he observed that he "surrendered."

He assured the Comisario at No. 24 that "we are all good friends now," adding, "Do you see those ships in the Darsena? They are almost all mine and full of gold. I will give you some."

"Look here," replied the unimaginative officer, "you are a dangerous lunatic." Angel was consequently removed in the Municipal conveyance marked "Policia de la Capital." He made a violent demonstration afterwards, but was overpowered. The police surgeon has certified the case to be one of insanity on non-existent grandeur and wealth.

MAN RUNS AMOK

From Castelar, in the Province of Santa Fé, comes the story of an extraordinary occurrence. A man named Juan Vasquez, knife in hand, suddenly took it into his head to run madly through the streets of the village scaring a number of villagers and wounding others.

Vasquez was employed in the local Comisaria and apparently made himself sufficiently unpopular in the neighbourhood as to bring a request from the population that some of his doings should be enquired into. No other cause for the strange occurrence can be given. He is now at Sastre under lock and key. No serious damage or hurt was done to those he attacked.

The affair has caused much excitement in the village and provided it with a theatrical spectacle, which will last them for some time.

SALE OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR

Action has been taken by the Government to prevent the adulteration of alcoholic beverages, and to attempt to protect the public against the ill-consequences of the evil so much indulged in by dishonest traders.

Yesterday a decree was issued which forbids in any business houses trading in the liquor traffic, the possession of more than half a litre of pure alcohol. The step has also become necessary to prevent the illicit manufacture of drinks, which is stated to have been lately, largely on the increase.

Sports and Pastimes

THE TURF

PALERMO

As a matter of general comment it could be said that the racing at Palermo on Sunday lost much interest on account of the weather. Not that the meeting was completely spoiled, because there were one or two races that redeemed it, but in general the numerous scratchings and those, too, of the most interesting, entertaining, and likely horses occasioned much disappointment.

One cannot blame a Palermo trainer, who has charge of another man's horses in taking the best care of them, and doing what he considers the best thing for the particular owner's benefit, but things of late have reached a perfectly ridiculous pass. One drop of rain and horses scatter to their boxes like a lot of rabbits, in sheer funk, and by doing so rob the public of much entertainment. While admitting that due care should be taken of horses, there is another point. It is peculiar that only those horses that have no winning chance in bad weather are retired, which argues that it is not on account of looking after the horses' welfare that they are always withdrawn. Again, although the public do not directly lose money, by withdrawals (there being the totalisator system in force) they indirectly are defrauded.

Without the public there would be no racing, and no race horses, no Jockey Club, and no trainers. Thus millionaire owners, official big bugs, and the like would not be owners of race horses, would not be in a position to dictate to a long suffering public, unless it were this very public that puts them in this position. Therefore if a racing man pays his money to go to see the races and the horses run, which he has been previously informed will run, and then finds that such is not the case, he is without question defrauded of his pleasure. This should not be, but no one can blame owners and trainers from taking advantage of a weakness in the official system.

There are even cases in point in which horses have been quoted in the betting and then withdrawn, because the official "vet" says the horse is not fit to run, having bad legs or some such thing. Peculiar to remark the going was shocking, that no hint of withdrawal came before the rain, and that since then this particular horse has been out five times, a winner on four occasions, and second a short head once. It must have very bad legs! That the public got their money returned is no consolation.

However, Palermo racing is improving, but is still very sadly deficient in the true sporting instinct of "Let the best horse win." So far as Sunday was concerned the Classic Race was run according to entries, and the seventh race, too, was what could be reasonably expected, as for all the others, scratchings due to a drop of rain ruined the whole game.

It is not easy to explain what happened to Gefe in the main event. In fact, there really could be no explanation he was thoroughly well beaten by a better horse on the day, if not a better horse on all days.

Floripar ran a tremendously strong race, taking the lead with Gefe in close attendance. By the time they arrived at the Belgrano bend, Floripar had completely knocked the stuffing out of the favourite, and went away to win easily enough. He even after so tough a fight with Gefe, stalled off the challenge of Matchbox, who all through the race had an easy enough job, by a length and three-quarters. The event was sufficiently interesting for a three-horse event.

The first race of the day was a miserable four-horse affair. The six horses that scratched were the only interesting entries. The result was that Fulano won in a hack canter from Chiribibi by 2½ lengths, after making all the running. The seven scratchings in the next event didn't matter over-much, because it is exceedingly doubtful if even one of them could have secured a place. Perez won the race by half a length from Merluza, after Iberia had made the running to the home straight. Merluza had every chance to win, but was run off her legs by Perez in the race home. It may be remarked that the winner had plenty in hand, much more than the half length suggests.

The third event was even more sickening, so far as scratchings were concerned. It about reaches the limit when 11 horses, and amongst those the most likely animals, cannot face a drop of rain and mud. Due to this, it was not a great surprise to see Pocholo win. Testun was naturally and correctly the favourite, and hopelessly "busted up," perhaps the going was the cause, but a glance at the others and one might reasonably have considered Pocholo's chances. On October 3rd he came along with a great swing at the finish, and although arriving nowhere at all, he made up something like 3 lengths in the straight, having run wide at the bend and allowed both Strap and Ducal to slip into the place he occupied. However, whatever may be said of his win, the very poor class of entry only showed how hopeless was Testun's performance.

Ermita, the mare referred to earlier on, "she of the bad legs," had no difficulty whatever in slamming the field in her usual manner, when the fourth race came along. She was, of course, the natural book selection, and our reasoning on the jockey juggling was shown to be faulty, and thus our sporting selection of Tareta also. However, this was sufficiently compensated for by sufficiently correct argument in the last race.

Ermita paid an exceptionally good price considering, for such a snip, $4.90 is not to be sneezed at.

There was nothing of interest in the race, except the chances obtaining in Acosta on Tareta, for Ermita did just whatever she liked, and had everything stiff, and as Thamar, a very possible enemy, scratched, the race lost flavour.

So far as the sixth race was concerned, there was nothing to it but Nitrate. When Don Federico scratched, and with the knowledge (solidly proved knowledge, too) that Lord French is no good in heavy going, Nitrate was the one real public gift of the afternoon. Favourite, of course, but a nice sort of $6.25 favourite.

Once again Blanco was nowhere to be seen at the start so far as the advance guard was concerned. Juvenal and Collingwood made the running, but after a few yards in the straight there was nothing to it, and the favourite drew away and won as he liked from Sombrio, with Vicente Lopez third.

Lord French, we believe, is a good horse, but how is it that public money is repeatedly chucked away by the jockey who rides him? We feel sure Lord French can do much better, if only a decent pilot was at the helm. The boy can ride all right, but he can't start.

The seventh race was the best of the day. Trabuco withdraw, which was probable, and in no way spoiled the event, which went to Chucker Out, as expected, and this at the cost of Stagno.

People will have to begin to alter their opinions concerning some of their old pets. Look at San Simon in this race, and Tata Dios. It is not an easy thing to do at Palermo, when one has a favourite horse stuck in the mind to look upon him as failing, because, you know, he just might do it that "once" more, but it is an undoubted fact that these old fellows are now getting beaten because they are done. We could mention a string of them, on which we will lay odds that they won't win another race. But that is a thing apart, and we advise this point to be kept rather more in the foreground.

Prologo won the last race, and that is all there was to it. The scratchings ruined the event, and it was the greatest pity not to see Lusitano running. He was the only possible danger to the winner, and the public lost the chance of a fine race when he stayed in his box.

It was quite a fair betting day for the talent, but as a racing day it was miserable, and wretched, together with a whole host of other adjectived expressions.

One word in conclusion. Once upon a time some wise person invented an expression concerning Diamond Jubilee's running in the mud. Something to the effect that a Diamond Jubilee needed the sun on its back. There is but the very smallest justification for this remark. It is true in some degree that the progeny of this sire are not at their best in heavy going. Thus it is not a question of breeding, but of build. To make any hard and fast rule attaching to the running of race-horses is pure foolishness, which will be found to be expensive foolishness also.

There is more than one Diamond Jubilee that can go in Palermo mud. What of Last Reason and of Chucker Out? They have done so more than once. A moment's thought will bring a host of others into the minds of some old hands.

LA PLATA

The weather for the racing at La Plata on Sunday was infinitely better than that at Palermo. It rained certainly, but with a thinnish drizzle off and on, which did not seriously interfere with the racing, which, taken all round, was quite good and entertaining.

There was the usual "shock" performance, and that when Cata Adair won the Premio Frede in a canter and paid out $60 odd. But for this things went very much in the ordinary way, with the usual margin of profit for lucky place betters. There is invariably something of this kind to be picked up at La Plata each meeting, and Sunday was no exception.

RACING AT VENADO TUERTO

LOCAL CLUB'S TWO-DAY MEETING

The English community at Venado Tuerto consists very largely of a body of keen sportsmen whose annual reunion is made the occasion for one of the best sports carnivals in the Republic. For years past the annual race meeting of the Venado Tuerto Polo and Athletic Club has attracted wide attention, and its popularity increases every year. The last meeting, held on October 14 and 15, was held in perfect weather, and was largely attended, some of those present having travelled over 40 leagues by motor car to witness the fine sport provided.

In most cases the fields were large and keen competition was shown in the races for the various cups and ladies' bracelets. Two of the cups, the "San Juan" and "Derrynane," were won outright. The importance of the sport of polo, of which the club is one of the best supporters in the country, was not overlooked, and the cup presented for the best pony attracted nine entries. Mr. T. Bradney kindly acted as judge, and awarded first prize to Mr. R. Land's "Mariposa," Messrs. M. and D. Duggan's "Sweetbriar" taking second place. The "76 Cup," run on the first day, excited most interest, and was won from a field of seven good horses by Messrs. Duggan's "Familiar." Mr. W. J. Christie scored with "Gigantic" in the San Juan Cup of 2,600 metres.

At the conclusion of the second day's racing, Mr. A. de Brouckere, the Vice-President of the Club, called upon Mrs. O'Connell to present the handsome prizes. At the conclusion of this ceremony cheers were given for the ladies and also for the Honorary Secretary, Mr. R. G. Winter, who managed the meeting in his usual good style. Mr. Guera had a busy day running the "Sport," which paid some long dividends. The dance on the evening of the first day was a pronounced success. The music was provided from Buenos Aires, and an excellent supper was supplied by the ladies of the district. The meeting was in every way a brilliant social and financial success, and the committee of the Club is to be heartily congratulated.

The officials for the meeting were as follow:—

Judges: Messrs. A. de Brouckere, N. P. Murphy, and T. Hearne; starters: Messrs. E. H. Wood and T. Moore; clerks of the course: Messrs. J. Scott, J. McCarthy Barry and L. W. Smiles; clerk of the scales: Mr. Herbert Sinclair; clerks of the paddock: Messrs. G. T. Bridger and H. Inglis-Runciman; official measurers: Messrs. J. Scott and J. McCarthy Barry; stewards: Messrs. A. de Brouckere, T. Hearne, E. H. Wood, J. C. Douglas, and N. P. Murphy; handicapper: Messrs. T. Hearne, E. H. Wood, and E. A. War; hon. secretary: Mr. R. G. Winter.

The Buenos Aires Jockey Club is giving $10,000 in prizes, $7000 of which go to the classic event, and $3000 to a first prize for 3-year-olds. The meeting is already exciting much interest.

GOLF

PLAY FOR THE COGHLAN CUPS.

On Sunday afternoon at Links play was indulged in for the Coghlan Cups, which are presented by the Great Southern Railway.

The weather did much to ruin both the play and the enjoyment thereof. In fact, so wretched were the conditions that the foursome play down for the afternoon had to be postponed.

All the ceremonials, too, which should have wound up the proceedings, were likewise postponed.

The play which actually took place resulted as follows:—

FINAL OF THE COPA DE COMPETENCIA.

RACING (1) v. PORTENO (2).

Racing, who share with San Isidro the honour of being an unbeaten team in the First Division Championship, went down before the prowess of Porteño on Sunday in the finals of the Copa de Competencia, by which the winning team has the honour of playing the equivalent winning team of the sister Republic, Uruguay. Thus it is that Porteños will meet the Nacionales in the international.

On Sunday Racing did not have their best team out, but nevertheless they put up a splendid game throughout.

Señor Gil refereed for the following teams:—

Porteño.—J. J. Rithner, R. Gonzalez Escarra, O. Beltran, J. Ayala, E. Uslenghi, V. Abadia, E. Galup Lanus, C. Izaguirre, A. Piaggio, P. Rithner, and M. Garat.

Racing.—S. Arduino, S. Ochoa, A. Reyes, A. Betular, F. Olazar, C. Comaschi, Z. Canevari, O. Ohaco, C. C. maschi, J. Hospital, and J. N. Perinetti.

From the commencement play was keen and fast, but a few fouls were quickly noted by the referee, who thus kept interrupting the game. Every effort during the first half to break through defences was rendered null and void, and neither side had scored when the whistle blew.

Shortly after recommencing Porteño had a piece of luck which gave them the ultimate victory. This was a "free" for hands, and Ayala scored. Porteño scored the next goal, too, from a splendid piece of work by Izaguirre, who beat Arduino.

A tremendous tussle then ensued, but Porteño were sound in defence, and Rithner in goal splendid. He was beaten just before the close by a shot from Ohaco. No further score resulted, and thus Porteño has the right to dispute with the Nacional team the destiny of the Cup, having won by 2 goals to 1.

The game was played on the Gimnasia y Esgrima ground at Palermo.

ARGENTINO DE QUILMES (3) v. GIMNASIA Y ESGRIMA (2).

The weather accounted for the small attendance at this match, in which the following teams met:—

Arg. de Quilmes.—J. Duque; R. Martinez and J. Ortega; J. Romero, J. Molachino, and M. Britos; J. Falibeni, F. E. Cabana, J. Escobar, V. Ferrotti, E. de la Serna.

Gimnasia y Esgrima.—J. Sagastume; A. Duggar and A. D. Rumbo; L. M. Custo, A. H. Molfino, and L. Darritchon; C. Aguilar Pinedo, M. Iraola, M. Hiller, L. R. Bertorini, M. Valdez.

A fair game resulted in a win for Arg. de Quilmes by three goals to two. Cabana played a good game, and was the first scorer, and Martinez added another with a free kick. On resuming Ferrotti added number three. These reverses so sharpened up the Gimnasia team that they fought for all they were worth, and succeeded in scoring twice, first through Bertorini by a free kick, and second through Iraola.

Señor Oury was the referee.

RIVER PLATE (4) v. ESTUDIANTIL PORTENO 1.

Played on the ground of the former. The match was a keen one, but the homesters were always the superior, and ultimately ran out winners by 4 goals to 1. The teams were as follows:—

River Plate.—C. Isola, A. Chiappe, A. Lanatta, A. Simons, C. Garcia, E. Calneggia, R. Fraga, N. Peruzzi, A. Penney, A. Risso, A. Ameal.

Estudiantil Porteno.—A. Garassa, F. Basurto, I. Mondotte, I. M. Luperne, I. M. Rogers, E. Pendibil, A. Costas, C. Porto.

Scorers: Rogers for the Estudiantil Porteno. Chiappe, Garcia, Penney, and Fraga for the home team.

SAN ISIDRO (5) v. HISPANO ARGENTINO (0).

At Velez Sarsfield on Sunday San Isidro completely outplayed Hispano-Argentino, and won a rather scrappy and uninteresting match by 5 goals to nil. Offsides and free kicks were frequent, and the wretched weather did nothing to make the game any the better. For San Isidro the scorers were: Elias 2, Arzua, Sayanes and Idiarte one each.

The game was a foul one, and conspicuous in this department was Montenegro, until ordered off the field by the referee, Señor Cursach. The teams were:—

San Isidro.—Goal, Wilson; Rossi, Bruno, Idiarte, Moroney, Badaracco, Elias, Julio Fernandez, Sayanes, Marini, Arzua.

Hispano Argentino.—Goal, Quintana; Ohie, Carames, Montenegro, Pardo, Murga, Roldan, Brandoli, Gianetto, Martinez, Boglino.

Matches played over the week-end were:—

BASEBALL

RAIN AGAIN SCORES A VICTORY

AT TALLERES ON SUNDAY.

Once more heavy clouds frightened the baseball fans from Talleres. It appears that Fortune is favouring them in allotting them more time to prepare themselves for a titanic effort.

No game was played last Sunday on account of the rain, and after these futile attempts in the last two weeks to have the first game of the league series the impatience of baseball enthusiasts has reached its bursting point, and rumours have it that the fans are determined to play the first game of the season's series, at Talleres on Sunday, at any cost.

It is stated that a complete set of uniforms, bats, balls, gloves and other equipment for the club of the Frigorifico Argentino is now on its way to Buenos Aires and will probably arrive here at the formal opening of the league next Sunday.

LAWN TENNIS

Owing to the vile weather conditions prevailing on Sunday, no play was indulged in at the Buenos Aires Lawn Tennis courts in the Tournament now taking place there.

BANFIELD RECREATION CLUB

FINAL DANCE OF THE SEASON

Strenuous efforts have been made by the Committee and members of the Banfield Recreation Club to wipe out the heavy debt incurred in the erection of a new Pavilion and various improvements made in their playing grounds. With the absence of so many members at the front, the Club has had great difficulty in replacing the support lost thereby. During the season several dances have been given, which came quite up to expectations both financially and socially, and the receipts therefrom have given material help to the Financial Committee in clearing the obstacles set before them. Dancing, however, cannot comfortably be indulged in from one year's end to another, and the dance on Oct. 23 was given as the final once of the season, and from the sparse attendance, and the state of some of the member's linen after a set of lancers, it was obvious that there are some who do not regret the announcement.

Those who did attend at the Italian Hall, despite the uncomfortable temperature for such exertions, enjoyed a good evening's dancing, and Mrs. Christian provided a splendid programme of dance music.

The Committee are to be congratulated on the success of their dances during the past season, but it is to be hoped that for any dances they intend holding during the coming season they may be able to procure more suitable accommodation than that afforded by the Italian Hall, which hardly meets the needs of the large number of members and friends of the Banfield Club.

Amongst those present at last evening's function were the following:—Green, and Tabor, the Misses Lily and Florrie Triggs, Morgan, Johnson, Johnston, Kelly, Tabor, Robinson, Perrins, Golater, Ward, Burton and Hinds, Messrs. Perrins, Green, Fairclough, Reed, Jutton, Kelly, Jones, Scorey, Aguilar, Robinson, Holt, Wilson, Ridley and Lennie.

ST. ANDREW'S ACADEMY

NINETEENTH ANNUAL SPORTS

Beautiful weather favoured the St. Andrew's Academy sports which were held on the Buenos Aires Great Southern Railway Athletic ground at Talleres, F.C.S., on Oct. 22. Apart from the enjoyment and the excitement with which the sports provided the large number of young people and little ones, there were dozens of browned and rosy faces to be seen as the result of an afternoon in the sun and fresh air—an afternoon of freedom and frolic.

A very considerable number of persons were present during the afternoon consisting chiefly of parents, relatives and friends, who had come to see the prowess of the young generation. It was all very enjoyable and amusing, from the keenness of the "big boy" at his sports and his bashfulness in going forward for his prize, to the tiny little mite who went forward at the finish to receive a box she was not big enough to carry.

The keenness of both boy and girl competitor in the events of the day was another pleasure to the older ones and just as great a pleasure in its own way, as was the participation in the sports themselves to which the pupils of St. Andrew's Academy had looked forward for so many weeks.

Children at play has a fascination all its own to some people but children at "serious play" battling for athletic supremacy playing fairly and earnestly is an unique entertainment to every lover of sport.

Commencing sharp at 10.30 a.m. the sports with intervals for lunch and tea lasted until well on to six o'clock, when the annual day of days came to an end and a special train conveyed dozens of tired but still eager children back to town.

Mr. Lawrence Christie acted as the president of the proceedings assisted by Messrs. Cabo, De la Balze, W. Mulhall, S. Christie and L. A. Medina as judges, and Mr. R. D. Christian as starter and handicapper. TIGRE LINE ELECTRIFICATION

CONSIDERATION OF CLOSING 21 LEVEL CROSSINGS.

Earnest consideration is being given by the Minister of Public Works to the question of reducing the number, at present considered excessive, of level-crossings on the F.C.C.A line to the Tigre.

It is understood that the Railway Company desires authority to close 21 of the 72 existing crossings between Golf and Tigre. Dr. Moyano considers that the question should not be settled in a hurry, as the closing of so many means of communication must seriously affect the convenience of the localities in which they are situated. Increased speed is the principal object of the desired change, which would be impossible owing to the danger to persons at the level-crossings by the frequent passage of trains travelling at a high velocity. It is difficult to guard against the imprudence of individuals, and the necessity of frequent and perhaps sudden and violent stops would greatly militate against both the comfort and rapidity of the service.

With a view at arriving at a decision agreeable to as many of the parties as possible and to the requirements of the localities and the public convenience in travelling, the Minister is calling into council the Intendente and the Government of the Province. Every case will be separately and carefully considered on its merits.

ed, most heartily, the numerous ladies and gentlemen who had assisted so generously at the sports and helped to make the afternoon a success, also the numerous persons who had come forward and given such splendid prizes. Three loud cheers for these and three more for Mr. and Mrs. Christy brought a thoroughly enjoyable day to a close.

HARAS PUNTA LARA.

Tuesday,

Some seven colts and eleven fillies came under the hammer yesterday afternoon, and realised good prices. The majority of them were the progeny of Your Majesty, and amongst them was some splendid horseflesh. The colts realised an approximately average price of $8,600, and the fillies came to $6150 each. The total sale reached $127,700.

A fair attendance marked the proceedings at which one or two of the youngsters were acquired at a rather high rate, while, on the other hand, there were unquestionably one or two exceptional bargains.

The highest priced colt—Mon Prince—was knocked down to Señor F. Orzozoli for $15,000. He is by Your Majesty out of Dairy Maid, and a full brother to Saint Moritz. He is a nice, cleanly built little colt, with fine quarters and legs, a likely enough sort and a good mover. He struck us, however, as an expensive purchase.

We much preferred Sangre Azul III, by Your Majesty, out of Bewitched, by Matchmaker (Orme blood). He was sold to the Stud Don Gonzalo for $10,000, and was somewhat of a bargain. Beautifully built, with fine strong quarters, excellent shoulders, and with plenty to build and work upon. His looks fulfil his name. Another colt that should prove himself a bargain was Marzo by Your Majesty, out of Retract by Persimmon, a very excellent colt, sold for only $6000 to the Stud Lowland Boy.

Two quite exceptional fillies were sold in Revelacion III. and Chupai.

The first-named is by Enero out of Reine Claude by Persimmon. The sire, Enero, is by Old Man out of Enfantine by Gay Hermit. She looked a most attractive customer, with the build of a strong runner. She was acquired by the Stud Le Sancy and was cheap at $7500. Bidding for her was sufficiently keen. The second, Chupai is related to her, and is by Your Majesty out of Lady Orange, by Orange out of Enfantine. Thus Enfantine is the mother of the sire of the first, and the mother of the dam of the latter. Chupai was bought for $7000 by Señor Mickerson.

Two of the fillies were withdrawn. One a splendid dark chestnut, but only born on December 1, and the other of the same colouring, and perhaps the finest of Your Majesty progeny for the season. Unnamed she was by Your Majesty out of Caravana (who is a full sister to Heredia), by Jardy (Cyllene blood). This filly if given time, will develop into a first-class animal. She requires time in which to build up.

Other animals besides the above were:—

COLTS.

Rey Moro by Your Majesty out of La Fe, by Old Man, a peculiar colt, and perhaps bred back, good enough limbs, but possibly a freak animal. Sold for $3500 to Señor Mickerson.

M. Angore, by Your Majesty, out of Cordon Bleu (Malton blood), a good and well topped powerful colt. Sold for $11,000 to Señor Galvez.

Chispazo, by Your Majesty, out of Moorchick, by Gallinule. $8000 to the Stud La Guardia.

Hucapie II, by Your Majesty, out of Auf, by Bay Ronald. A bargain for $6500 to the trainer Luis Saini.

FILLIES.

Nanna, by Your Majesty, out of Shocking Bird, by Gallinule, a peculiar reddish grey filly, but well built, sold for $5500 to the Stud Ayui.

Oña Alda by Your Majesty out of Vega. An exceptionally grand filly. The bidding for her was very keen, and the price rose rapidly to $10,000. Ultimately she was secured by the Stud Zubiaurre for $13,500, which although a highish price, should prove a good investment.

Dcs Aguas, by Your Majesty, out of Tresco. A fine class animal, sold for $8000, to the Stud Etoile.

Alteza Real, by Your Majesty, out of Cyno, by Cyllene, cheap at $5000 to Señor Mickerson.

Adano by Your Majesty, out of Society II, by Florizel II, a half sister to Debutante II. A fair filly and inexpensive at $4000, to Señor H. Uruarte. Reina del Monte, by Your Majesty, out of Gelnare, to Señor H. Uriarte, for $5500.

Nacundai, by Your Majesty, out of Gitanilla by Simonside (Wolf's Crag blood). A fair specimen of horseflesh, sold to the Stud Royal for $3200.

Su Merced by Your Majesty out of Pirita, by Pietermaritzburg (Gay Hermit blood), an excellent bargain for Señor Antonio Sibour for $5000.

Rueca by Your Majesty, out of St. Catherine, by St. Frusquin (full sister to Our Majesty), a well-bred, nice looking filly, and cheap at $3500 to the trainer Luis Calistro.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

REPORTED CASE AT BAHIA BLANCA.

(From Our Correspondent.)

October 24.

There are now two English ships in the port discharging general cargo. Both these boats—the Capac and the Chipana—which are from New York, have general cargo for the German Consul here. The former is now unloading 10,000 bales of reaper twine for this shipper and the other machinery. The owners of these ships have already lost three ships to the Germans. The first—the Condor—was captured by the Karlsruhe, and after the crew and all the valuables had been taken off by a German tender, the steamer was sunk.

TRAPS FOR PIRATES

DISCOVERY BY SPANISH FISHERMEN.

New York, Oct. 22.

A despatch from Spain says that some fishermen of Algeciras, when at sea were surprised to observe a large number of buoys floating about, to which were attached the remains of fine steel wire netting. It subsequently transpired that the British had been laying nets for trapping submarines.

ARGENTINE CREDIT

Why an Anglo-Argentine Loan is Feasible

(Exclusive to THE HERALD)

The renewal of the $63,000,000 six months treasury bills for a similar period, plus some $25,000,000 new money, is not, as so many amateur financiers would have us believe, a sign of economic weakness on the part of the Government, nor, taking all the circumstances into consideration, can it be looked upon as a bad financial bargain. That it is a very sure proof of the confidence with which the immediate future of Argentina is regarded by men whose traditions are all in favour of a distrustful policy when dealing with officialdom needs no accentuation, whilst to the student of economic affairs the continuance of the caution and long-sightedness of the inner ring of Argentine statesmen is a hopeful, a very hopeful, sign.

Accused by ignorant writers, or interested politicians, of living from hand to mouth, the Argentine Government, ever since the outbreak of war, has made the most strenuous efforts to repair past excesses; excesses be it remembered that were just as much individual as governmental. The megalomania that raged between 1905 and 1910 infected everyone; and everyone, broadly speaking, has looked to Government to get them out of the pit which they dug for themselves. From the National Deputy or Senator who is nominal lord of leagues and leagues of camp bought at prices far beyond its rentable value and mortgaged for more than it would ever bring at an auction sale, to the peon who with a wage of two dollars a day has pledged himself to pay forty dollars a month for a plot of land he has never seen, all are responsible; moreover, led usually by the Deputy or Senator aforementioned, all have thought at some time or another during the past twelve months that the Government might well do its part, and like a deus ex machina, give the land the value that its settlers wish to see realised.

It is doubtful whether anyone will ever know the pressure that has been brought to bear with a view to reaching this end, an end as utterly unattainable as the mythic pot of gold at the base of the rainbow. Government alone saw that rigid economy, personal and official, was the only way to meet diminished income. Allowing for the temperamental weaknesses of the criollo nature, this policy has been consistently pursued from August, 1914, right down to date. Moreover it is permeating the unofficial classes, either from conviction or necessity, and the general tone of life here is far more reasonable than it was five years ago. In the meantime however the administrative work of the nation must go on, and with diminished revenues, borrowing became imperative.

So the Government borrowed—but at short dates. Beginning by consolidating some of its floating loans, including the ill-advised transaction with the allied group of London and New York financiers, it cast about for a means of staving off heavy expenditure on interest and commissions until such time had elapsed as would enable it to approach the money markets of the world with dignity and assurance, as it knew it had a perfect right to do, once conditions were on a normal plane. The discounting of treasury bills with local banks offered many advantages over the seeking of further loans in neutral markets; it also helped to solve the problem of the plethora of funds with which the local banks were—and are—still doing their best to cope. That six months is not a very long time wherein to find $88,000,000 to-day is undeniable, yet the more one considers the extreme caution displayed by the Argentine Government in regard to its financial affairs for the past year, the more one is inclined to think that some plan has already been sketched out which will enable it not only to meet this obligation but also put its affairs on a permanently commodious footing. The great difficulty of the present situation is that whilst Argentine commerce shows a balance in favour of this Republic of some $200,000,000 gold, there has hitherto been no means of co-relating this credit with the manifest shortage in the Government treasuries. If a means can be found to use this balance of trade, a balance that is growing daily, as collateral security for the emission of a loan in London, then the connecting link will have been forged, and the operation becomes a mere question of book-keeping.

Though nothing more than a hypothesis, it is reasonable to assume that this link will be forged from the gold deposits that with remarkable provision have been earmarked to Argentina in London, Paris, and the Scandinavian and Dutch kingdoms. These now stand at over $70,000,000 gold, and with the wool shipments now approaching and the harvest in sight it is safe to assume a marked increase in these figures between now and the end of the current agricultural year, say March, 1916. The issue of a gold loan for $100,000,000 in Europe thus becomes feasible, the Argentine Government taking over the balances held on account of the legations and withdrawing from circulation the corresponding paper equivalent here in order to keep its accounts straight with the Caja de Conversion, subsequently utilising the proceeds of the loan to redeem its outstanding indebtedness and carry on the work of administration. It is not too much to suppose that such a proposition would obtain ready support in Lombard Street and at the Treasury, since it is calculated to safeguard British interests in Argentina and at the same time to prevent any possible call on the gold that to-day is at Argentina's disposal, gold that might, under exceptional circumstances, be demanded for shipment in bullion or specie. Handled by a sufficiently strong group of financiers on a basis of 5 per cent interest and 1 per cent amortisation, with a reasonable commission, it would prove an attractive investment, amply guaranteed. Moreover, and this is not the least of its advantages, it would cut the ground from under the feet of the Argentine publicists, both in and out of Congress, who are always demanding that Argentina should separate herself from all direct dealings with the belligerent nations, save on a cash basis that could only prove disastrous to her trade, whilst at the same time it would help British finance to retain the ascendancy it has always had in the Argentine, by serving as a powerful counterstroke to the perfectly open but none the less dangerous competition of American financiers in the South American trade.

COLISEO THEATRE

LA GIOCONDA.

Tuesday

The performance last night of La Gioconda at the Coliseo Theatre was a good all-round one, and special mention should be made of Sra. Poli-Raudacio, in the title-part, who sang with warmth of feeling and acted with vehemence. The mother's part was taken by Sra. Signovile, and proved sympathetic enough, though her voice was not on a level with the rest of the company. Sr. Gubellien conquered due applause in his rendering of Enzo, and his singing was at all times spontaneous and fresh. The rest of the company played their roles with discretion, and the dancing scene was appreciated by the audience, which was numerous though not excessive. The orchestra, scenery, and stage lighting were all on the same level of excellence, as is usual at the Coliseo Theatre. By the way, the company announces the debut of two new operas, particulars of which will be given in due course.

Agricultural & Pastoral

CAMP NOTES

(By Our Agricultural Editor.)

The Sociedad Rural is making a great effort to secure from the Government the financial aid promised, but still unpaid, which was destined to foment the dairy industry by holding annual shows and milking trials, and also for the encouragement of the better finishing of steers, by the more general use of artificial foodstuffs. A visiting expert was to be brought to adjudicate upon the merits of the various animals and award prizes on a standard of merit as recognised in Britain. This year it is reported that the Fat Stock Show will be judged by local gentlemen, and whether their findings be right or wrong, they are likely to be subjected to a good deal of criticism, from some of the opposition members, as recent happenings do not lead one to the conclusion that agricultural societies even here are unanimous in their working.

It is most regrettable that there is no likelihood of the proposed rural statistics being made available. Their compilation and publication were very much desired in the interests of the country, and to enable cattle owners and others representing large capital, really to understand their position. A very large number of well-known authorities are of the opinion that our stock of breeding cattle has seriously declined. I am of that opinion. Many prominent estancieros maintain that the number of cattle existing at the present time, in this Republic, is equal to that of five years ago, but as no reliable statistics are available, it is impossible to arrive at a satisfactory finding when utilising old figures and percentages, which would show an increase or decrease according to the calculations based on percentages in ordinary seasons. Travelling a great deal in this country, I cannot think we have the same quantity as formerly, when large mobs of breeding cattle were so frequently to be seen, even when travelling on the railway. At that period cattle appeared to be distributed all over the camp, while at the present time one can frequently journey a long way, and very few mobs of cattle are to be seen at all.

During the week there have practically been no sales of pedigree Shorthorns within the local yards, though several sales of importance are reported from outside districts. One of the most important was the sale held on Thursday, Oct. 21, at Burzaco, when Señor M. A. Martínez de Hoz sold 60 bulls at the satisfactory average of $1400. On Friday afternoon Messrs. A. Bullrich and Co. submitted to auction 50 imported Lincoln rams, the property of Mr. Joseph Shepherd, when all the better quality animals experienced a very good trade at satisfactory prices; though a few of the lighter woolled were not in so good demand. The top price was $2050, paid for a well backed compact sheep, carrying an extra good fleece, while another was sold at $2000, giving an average of $493. The sheep were shown in good bloom, and are big, strong framed animals such as are in favour with breeders here. Mr. A. Machattie announces a forthcoming sale of another high-class lot of imported Lincolns, which include many outstanding specimens of the breed.

Recent home papers record a drop of 5s. a live hundredweight on fat cattle in Scotland, which denotes that a sufficient supply from "somewhere" is finding its way to the home markets. A drop in values at Smithfield means its effects will be reflected here on the prices paid by the local freezing companies, who have been forced to operate lately at unheard of prices to fulfil their contracts and supply the London market. The withdrawal of several more boats and a further curtailing of the available space for shipping meat, are sure to have an adverse effect here on the present high values ruling for all classes of cattle.

The s.s. Gascony left the other day with nearly three hundred horses for the British Army, which have been acquired here by Colonel Porteous. This consignment is spoken of as very good quality, and likely to be most suitable for any purposes. This shipment will be under the care of Mr. Walter Silvester, who has earned a high reputation for the invariably good condition in which he lands his charges.

Mr. J. Lalor, the well-known cattle salesman, has compiled the following list of prices obtained for animals sold by him during the week, at the Lujanes market. Bueyes mestizos especiales from $200 to $240; bueyes especiales from $170 to $190; bueyes carne gorda from $100 to $130; novillos mestizos especiales from $220 to $245; novillos mestizos para frigorifico from $175 to $210; novillos carne gordo from $120 to $160; vacas mestizas excepcionales from $150 to $175; vacas especiales from $130 to $145; vacas carne gorda from $80 to $100; novillitos mestizos especiales from $100 to $115; novillitos, carne gorda, from $75 to $95; vaquillonas mestizas especiales from $120 to $135; vaquillonas mestiza gordas from $100 to $115; vaquillonas carne gorda from $75 to $95; Terberos especiales from $45 to $70; terenos mamones especiales from $35 to $45.

RETURN OF MR. G. L. RICKARD.

Mr. Tex Rickard is expected here in the course of next month. This gentleman is very well known here and in Paraguay for his enthusiasm over the Northern Republic, and its great possibilities as a cattle country. Not contented with the local market in Paraguay, Mr. Rickard solicited a concession for the installation of a modern freezing plant, at or near Asuncion, which the Government readily granted to this enterprising gentleman. Reports received here a few weeks ago announce that the necessary machinery has just been acquired in the States and will arrive at Asuncion in due course. Mr. Rickard is determined to make good use of the large number of cattle available in Paraguay and utilise them to the best advantage by freezing. Mr. Rickard is owner of large tracts of splendid grazing lands in the Paraguayan Chaco, where vast herds of cattle could be raised, and fed for the works, independent of the large numbers of cattle available from other sources. It is to be hoped that this concern will meet with the success which the energy and initiative of its promoter deserves. It will be of inestimable value to the cattle-raising industry in Paraguay.

DEPARTURE OF MR. I. RAWES.

Mr. I. Rawes, very well known in live-stock circles here, and a partner of the firm of Messrs. J. and I. Rawes, has arranged to return home by the s.s. La Rosarina, due to leave here in the course of a few days. As in former years, this firm has imported a large number of notably good class Shorthorn sires, which, in keeping with other importations, have experienced a fair selling trade. There is no doubt, however, that one or two of the better quality animals did not make as much as their owner was entitled to expect. The many friends of this highly respected and well-known figure in the live stock trade, wish Mr. Rawes a pleasant journey home, and anticipate the pleasure of renewing acquaintances at no distant date.

of the Argentine Rural Society, presented to the General Meeting of Members of the Society, and published in the "Review of the River Plate":—

"Our last yearly period closed in an atmosphere of uncertainty and misfortune produced by the outbreak of the war in Europe. The universal upheaval which the event caused in every branch of business, the insecurity of communications, difficulties of transport, lack of foreign exchange and other factors were naturally subjects of public anxiety, to such an extent that as regards our own particular interests, we were unable to anticipate whether or no our spring and summer harvests would find an outlet abroad. We were buoyed up, however, by the hope that the nature of the products which our country offers to the foreign market would oblige the consuming countries to obtain the means of acquiring them; and fortunately we can say now that our exports of wool, meat, and other live-stock products, besides agricultural produce, have been effected without difficulty, at satisfactory prices. Now that general movement as regards export trade has been re-established, everything induces the belief that no further difficulties will supervene and that we shall continue to dispose of our produce under favourable conditions.

Since the middle of June, when the anticipated rise in the price of steers for freezing took place, up to the present time (13th October), prices have been sustained, and, always excepting the natural fluctuations arising from the greater or less supply of fat stock, we may hope that they will continue firm for a long time to come. Wool and cereals offer similar good prospects whatever course the war may take—even should peace be made during the current year—because there will be a constant and permanent demand, especially for wool.

It is clear therefore that we enter the new season under favourable conditions, and if the grain is harvested without any further climatic difficulties, it can safely be affirmed that the commercial and economic situation will improve notably during the incoming year.

Referring to live-stock the report says, "We have now to make a detailed analysis of the particular situation of each of the various branches of the agricultural and live-stock industries. As regards the latter, we present the report on the results of the exhibitions held, principally the great exhibition of breeding stock inaugurated on August 15 and closed on August 23. The fact that no case of foot-and-mouth disease occurred during the Exhibition of 1914 at Palermo confirmed the desirability of holding the show this year at the same period as last, with the result that no case of contagious disease has to be recorded.

Sales in 1914 amounted to $1,912,250 m.n. in 1915, to $3,063,775. The highest price for bovine cattle in 1914 was $26,000 m.n. and the lowest, $220. In 1915 the highest was $60,000 and the lowest, $250. Average in 1914 (bovine cattle) $2,177.62; in 1915, $3242 m.n. An improvement was also shown in the equine class. Whereas in 1914 the highest price paid was $4000 and the lowest $300, in 1915 the highest was $4200 and the lowest $250. Average in 1914, $796.87. In 1915, $1196.

In the sheep class, the highest price in 1914 was $2200 and the lowest, $60. In 1915, $5100 and $83.33 respectively. Average in 1914, $282.17; in 1915, $438.86. In the pig class the difference was not great. Average price in 1914 was $135.16 and in 1915 $139.60.

As will be seen, the result of the last Exhibition could not have been more pleasing, since it demonstrates clearly the progress attained by the industry and the eagerness of breeders to improve their stock.

Dealing with the encouragement of specific live-stock industries the report first considers the dairy industry and says: "In accordance with the intentions announced in the last report, the Committee have continued to take an active interest in the development of the dairy industry. It must be confessed, once again, however, that we are still far from attaining in this industry, the degree of progress which could be expected taking into consideration the enormous stock of cows we possess, and having regard to the results obtained in other countries. The special committee have worked unceasingly, making an energetic propaganda to promote the dairy industry. We have organised various trial exhibitions, offering money prizes and all possible facilities—but we have not achieved any appreciable results. None the less, the recent exhibition registers an increase in the number of cows entered, which shows that we have made some little progress. 65 cows were entered as against only 15 in May last. We intend to carry on the work started with energy, and with patience and determination we shall at no distant date succeed in bringing this neglected industry to the degree of perfection which it merits.

The Pig Industry.

This industry is no less important and it most certainly deserves every attention and care in favour of its development and establishment on a large scale. Since last year, when it was made known that the "frigorificos" were making preparations to slaughter pigs, the committee have been studying the possibilities of the business with special care. It can be said, in synthesis, that the freezing establishments, the only ones which for the time being are in a condition to give an impulse to the consumption of pigs and their derivatives, have begun to make a start in the business on a small scale. It has to be borne in mind that in order to introduce a new product in the consuming markets, time and perseverance are necessary, and also that a scientific exploitation of the pig demands special and costly machinery and installations, so that it is only logical to suppose that the "frigorificos" will not enter into the business on a large scale until they have assured themselves that the product will be well received and well paid for in the consuming markets. Recently the Frigorifico Armour de La Plata have announced that they will undertake the business of pig slaughter and they have made certain indications to breeders of these animals as to the method of preparing them in acceptable conditions. This company recognises that the country has a sufficiency of animals suitable for their purposes, and that the land, climate and feeding stuffs available assure a favourable result for pig breeders.

It is necessary therefore to wait some time for the industry to become definitely established; but holding the firm belief that this will shortly occur, we advise pig breeders not to lose heart, but to go forward in the perfecting of methods of breeding and fattening with the assurance that they are engaged in a profitable business always provided it be undertaken with prudence and within reasonable limits.

Agriculture.

Our exports of wheat, linseed and oats may be considered to have terminated under conditions highly favourable to growers. The excessive rains of last summer undoubtedly caused considerable damage, but the high prices which have prevailed have left a good margin of profit to compensate labour and expenses. The prospects for the forthcoming harvest, after the recent rains, are favourable, and so far as prices are concerned, these must be maintained because the demand must be constant. Malze continues to be exported in considerable quantities, but the prices are not remunerative. It is to be hoped that a rise will occur soon which will benefit the tonnage which has yet to leave the country.

Several proposals for the establishment of grain elevator systems have been presented to the Government, but unfortunately we have still to wait some time for their resolution—for various reasons—to see the realisation of these initiatives for the meeting of a generally felt necessity.

Modifications in the Sanitary Police Regulations.

The Government have just dictated, through the Ministry of Agriculture, a decree which modifies partially—and in a matter of great importance to the live-stock industry—the regulations hitherto ruling as regards Animal Sanitary Police. The amendment permits the import, under certain conditions, of breeding stock native to countries which were unable to sell to us hitherto, owing to the prohibition imposed by the regulations. A modification is also effected in the regulation requiring six months to elapse after the disappearance of foot-and-mouth disease in England, as a condition for the admission of breeding stock from that country, the period being now reduced to 3 months. Both these modifications are highly important to stock raisers and breeders and they have been decided upon after laborious and constant diplomatic, and administrative action, in which we have had the honour of participating by courteous invitation of the Ministry of Agriculture. The regulations which have been annulled were antiquated and were bound to disappear once events had modified the situation of our meat industry, for the benefit of which they were established in 1903. Their maintenance in recent years has been highly prejudicial because they restricted our commerce in live-stock and freezing cattle to certain specified countries, shutting us out from consuming markets of recognised importance and preventing us from importing breeding stock of meat and dairy races susceptible of ready acclimatization in the Republic.

The modification affords a great opportunity for the improvement of our dairy cattle races. The possibility of acquiring breeding stock from the famous races of the Continent of Europe will permit of the transformation of the characteristics of our dairy cattle in a relatively short time, with the benefit of an increased yield of milk and an expansion of the industry in milk products.

As regards importation of meat cattle from the Continent of Europe, the measure is likewise important, as excellent races undoubtedly are raised there, but our breeders must proceed slowly and with caution in adopting them remembering that there is little object in exploiting those breeds if their meat is not going to be received freely and with acceptance in the consuming markets of the countries which provide the breeding stock. This is a question which can only be cleared up at the end of the war when definite information will be available concerning the economic policy which those nations will follow as regards consuming our meat. Finally, the reduction of the period of 6 months, to 3 months of the period required for the admission of English breeding stock after an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in that country is also beneficial, in that it will allow of the constant supply of new blood required by our breeders."

THE GARDEN AND ORCHARD

TALKS WITH AMATEURS

(By "The Rustic.")

THE WEEK'S PROGRAMME.

Garden.—Rake over and loosen earth in beds and plots. Keep garden and paths free of weeds. Water small plants in the afternoon. Trim bushes, runners and evergreen fences. Pulverise roses, chrysanthemums, lillies, sweetpeas, daisies, etc., etc., with solutions for destruction of aphids (kerosene solution, tobacco juice, or pyrethrum). Replace plants in garden beds which have finished flowering with new ones from the nursery. Place in the ground or transplant the bulbs, Dahlias, Amarillis, St. Joseph Lillies, etc. Sow Asthers, Balsamine, Cyclamen, Carnations, Sweet William, Cosmos, Coxcombs, Chrysanthemums, Flox, Geranium, etc.

Orchard.—Plough superficially fruit tree plots, or dig and loosen earth around trees. Apply pulverizations as above for woolly aphids on apple and pear trees, in peach trees and orange and lemon trees. Sulphur vines and tie and train same. Thin out fruit trees of excess of fruit. Trim orange trees and destroy chrysallis of orange butterfly on same. This chrysallis is enclosed in a hard shell, which has the shape and colour of a piece of wood, and is found standing out at the base of the larger branches attached by a silken thread, resembling in every way a twig of the tree. It is one of the examples of insect mimicry, and a very good one. It is interesting to put one of these in a box in a warm place and watch the butterfly come out after a few days and gradually unfold its wings. The butterfly is rather a handsome one. It is black with yellow spots, and one of the larger ones known in these parts.

GENERAL NOTES.

The transplantation of small plants has to be done carefully to be accompanied by success. The plants should be lifted out of the ground with a small trowel, not pulled out after merely loosening the soil, as is often done, and if a certain amount of soil is attached to the root, all the better. Then a convenient hole is made where the plant is to be placed, also with the trowel and not merely with a stick and the plant placed in same, and the earth put round and gently pressed, not beaten in hard, and water poured on at once. Only a few plants should be taken out at a time from the nursery, so as to have them out of the soil as short a time as possible, and of course, the work should be done during the latter part of the afternoon. These rules, of course, cannot always be carried out in large plantations, but it is worth while trying them where possible, as they are attended with more satisfactory results. In cases where large plantations are being made, such as vegetables, strawberries, etc., the small plants should be put in baskets lined with old sacks well soaked in water and then covered over with same, and if they are planted with a stick, the earth must be closed round the roots well, and watered as soon as possible.

The present is a very appropriate time for sowing lawn-grass. The ground must be well dug up or ploughed. The deeper the ploughing the better, just the same for lawn grass as for alfalfa, wheat or any other sowing. This is a principal which is not very general in this country, and its advantages are not recognised to their full extent. Once the ground is well ploughed, or dug up, as the case may be, it should be repeatedly passed over with a brush harrow, that is, a harrow made of branches of brushwood tied on to a heavy log and drawn across by oxen. This method is for a large extent of ground, but in the case of small lawns, etc., the rake is to be used. The ground should be levelled as far as it is possible. After the ground has received some rain and has been allowed to dry somewhat, the seed is sown. To sow seed is not so easy as it might appear. The action is only obtained after long practice. The idea is to take a handful of seed, holding the thumb just above the centre at the palm of the hand, and whilst walking with regular and long paces, throw out the seed at every forward motion taken, with a circular motion of the arm, spraying the seed in fan-shape before you. In the case of very small or light seed, a certain proportion of fine Montevidean sand should be mixed with it, in order to assure it equal distribution. The sower should follow a direct line backwards and forwards, by placing marks (sticks or flags), at equal distances at either end of the field as a guide. The brush harrow should follow immediately to cover over the seed, and then the field should be rolled with a light roller. This practice is very little known in Argentina, but it is resorted to in many countries for all class of seeds, not only with grass, but also with cereals, etc.

The locusts have made their appearance in Buenos Aires after a long absence, and are evidently doing considerable damage in gardens and orchards in the suburbs. Though locust destruction to be effective has to be done on a large scale, and is directed by the Defensa Agrícola, it is possible to save the plants from a sudden invasion by scaring the locust away with noise, smoke, etc. Fires should be lighted all over the place, and all hands available make as much noise as possible until the locusts take flight again. The same means as those used for frosts can be resorted to for producing smoke, that is, small heaps of rubbish, dry stable manure, dead leaves, grass, etc., are sprinkled with kerosene and tar, and set on fire and allowed to smoulder. The "volodora" may come to eat, or it may just settle in a convenient place for the purpose of laying, but the "mosquita" or "sol-tona" are the most destructive. There

THE FREIGHT MARKET

VIOLENT FLUCTUATIONS

DUE TO POLITICAL CAUSES

The freight market is fluctuating violently at the present time, and it is very difficult to calculate any probable movement or developments in its condition.

Locally, it shows amazing inconsistencies, and this is rather because of the irregularities of politics than to the influence of shippers and owners.

The Balkan trouble seems to be the seat of the evil and to have caused these meteoric changes in wheat and maize prices. Moreover, the market will be affected by the necessity of another military expedition, which in its turn causes the requisitioning of another large number of steamers. There is also the constant fear that some 450 Greek "tramps" may be withdrawn from the oceans of the world.

The possible Government buying of grain, indicated by the extraordinary movements of grain prices, shows another cause for the freight rises and declines.

Some months ago, the market was dislocated in the same way through the direct intervention of the British Government in the grain trade.

Then there is the closure of the Panama Canal, which is reported to have held up dozens of steamers on each side. Following these effects, there is the extraordinary tonnage demanded from the United States which is only now entering upon its full grain shipping season.

Last week, the wheat shipments (including Canada) from North America reached 300,000 tons, irrespective of a really huge general cargo trade.

Succeeding these vital influences on the freight market, comes the imposition of the large war tax on British shipowners, which has apparently caused them to increase their demands.

A steamer, during the week, could have fixed up the round voyage to the Plate and England at about 120/-, and as the expenses, including extra insurance, wages, etc., do not exceed 40/8, it leaves a full profit of £4 per ton to the carrier for a four months' voyage.

The market opened last week easy at 65/-, advanced sharply to 70/-, and then dropped about five shillings once more.

Present indications seem to point, however, to a gradual fall. The difference between dead spot and November boats has widened to about 2/8, and no charters for the last month of the year have been effected.

Charterers are not keen for tonnage for the closing weeks of the year, for they expect maize exportation to drop sharply inside of three or four weeks, and the direct consequence will be, or should be, a reduction in the freight level.

are more means for attacking these latter than for the former, as the places to be protected can be surrounded by the barriers which the Defensa Agrícola lend, I believe, free of charge. Maize fields of hundreds of acres are thus saved every year. Trenches can also be dug, and barriers of fire made, and the locust directed against them for their destruction. It is also possible to pulverise all the plants, grass, etc., with arsenical solutions, so that the locusts will be poisoned when they eat them, but this is a very dangerous practice, as it might prove fatal to the fowl yard, as the fowls which eat the dead locusts would certainly be poisoned, not to mention the animals which graze on the grass. There are on the market solutions which are guaranteed to destroy the locust whilst being harmless to other animal or plant life.

PROGRESSIVE PARAGUAY

VIEWS OF MR. DANIEL MOONEY

U.S. MINISTER IN ASUNCION

The Hon. Daniel F. Mooney, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States for Paraguay, who arrived in Buenos Aires on Friday and was staying at the Plaza Hotel left, on October 24, for Valparaiso, Chili, where he will remain for a few days. He will then proceed northward towards Panama, probably halting at Callao. After a very short sojourn at those two cities, he will direct his course homeward, making straight for New Orleans. His return to Paraguay will probably materialise by the following March.

His short session in this city has been of helpful enlightenment to many who were hitherto unstudied in the conditions of the smaller northern republic, and his interview with a HERALD representative yesterday has left a trail of valuable information behind him.

"The present Paraguay is far advanced in progress and wealth compared with the Paraguay of yesterday," said the Minister, "and a good deal goes to the credit of the existing superiority in transportation, which was somewhat neglected formerly."

"The River Plate system possesses the most extraordinary possibilities for transportation facilities and traffic, and its uses for navigation are not only very extensive but beyond anything in the navigation line in the United States."

"To the splendid navigation can be attributed the fact that railroad competition is not so keen here as in the States, besides considering the natural advantages of the River Plate which makes it a highway for commerce."

"The boat companies operating on the river offer acceptable service and the passengers are looked after very comfortably," he remarked.

The main resources of Paraguay are stock raising, agriculture and timber.

Paraguay, figuratively speaking is divided into two distinct sections, the Paraguay Proper and the Paraguay "Chaco," a term derived from an old Indian usage to designate Hunting, which is located to the west of Paraguay River and north of Pilcomayo River, and its broad expanse of territory is equal in size to the State of Pennsylvania.

"Paraguay Proper has been settled for a long time, while no attempts have been made to settle in the Chaco, until comparatively recent times," said the Minister.

"The Chaco is an ideal stock country, and the ground is underlaid with deposits of salt, while the water is brackish and very useful for cattle, as it contains natural ingredients that tend to eliminate the 'tick.'"

"This insect general breeds in tropical countries, and also exists quite abundantly in Paraguay Proper and the Provinces of Brazil lying north of Paraguay."

"Very numerous estancias have been established in the Chaco, lending to that part of the country, a commercial importance which thirty years ago was practically non-existing."

"The agricultural industry in the whole of Paraguay is a great wealth-producer, as the soil seems to be well adapted for the raising of maize, tobacco and all classes of tropical fruits."

"Besides these two central commercial features, i.e., stock and agriculture, the timber industry ranks next in importance."

"Much timber is being cut and exported at this moment, especially the celebrated Quebracho wood. This particular sort of wood is devoted principally for manufacturing extracts, used in tanning leather, and the Paraguayan people are developing this industry, very extensively, an activity which is accentuated by English, German, American, French and Austrian capital, that practically control its production, while the exportation of the article at the present time is largely confined to the Netherlands and North America.

"Paraguay," continued Mr. Mooney, "has awakened from its slumber. It is now a very enterprising country, attracting the notice of great financiers throughout the world, among whom American capitalists figure prominently. The American trade which is rapidly growing in Paraguay cannot fail to stimulate American investment."

"One of the leading American Companies now operating in Paraguay is the New York and Paraguayan Company, who own nearly one million acres of land, raising many thousands of cattle and utilising much Quebracho. This Company is of vast magnitude, and operates on strictly modern principles, owning its own railroad, and possessing its own machine shops."

"Then the Paraguayan Congress has offered a concession for a Frigorifico, which will bring down an avalanche of activities, and which will most probably be controlled by American capital, under the guiding spirit of 'Tex' Rickard, the most renowned Western cattle dealer of the United States, who staged the historic Johnson-Jeffries fight at Reno."

"Rickard's ambition is devoted to seeing Paraguay emerge from its long stage of quietude, into a bustling cyclone of energy, and if there is any person in the world who can instill life in Paraguay and make it exist as an object, more than a geographical delineation to be discovered on the map, that man is Rickard, who will evidently direct this great Paraguayan acquisition—the Paraguayan Frigorifico," said the Minister, full of enthusiasm.

"The Government has also recently granted to a Company, the capital of which was provided by contributions from North America, England, Scotland and France, known as the Engineers Construction and Finance Co., the privilege of installing up-to-date port works at Asunción, the capital of Paraguay. The work of constructing this port will be given to McArthur Bros., one of the leading Engineer firms in New York, and the inauguration of that modern convenience will certainly add to its commercial importance, and will render the relations between North America and Paraguay more intimate."

"Many modern constructions are being built in Asunción and slightly buildings loom up almost every day. The primitive architecture which was once the landmark of that city is disappearing, and the quaint, curious houses with their gaudy colouring are being substituted by large American structures with solid foundations."

"The streets are lively and buzzing with good humour, and though perhaps they cannot be compared with the Buenos Aires artistic elements and cosmopolitanism, bids well to assume that appearance in time."

Mr. Mooney then formulated his opinion about Buenos Aires saying:—

"The highest compliment that can be paid to the largest city of South America is that it strongly resembles one of the large American cities, in its commotion, and life and commercial aspects."

"From a business standpoint it is purely American, while in its social fields the tendency leans towards Europe."

"If Paris and Chicago could be melted together, the result would be very much like a larger Buenos Aires," concluded the Minister.

NOTES FROM PARAGUAY

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Asuncion, Oct. 17.

The Weather.

The storm on Wednesday and the cooling of the air were a blessed relief to those who suffer from the long-continued heat of Paraguay. If there was only a Mar del Plata, or some cool spot in the mountains where one could go to get a breath of fresh air! San Bernardino, delightful in winter, is unbearable in hot weather. There is Tacumbri, on the Paraguay river, a very fair mountain to be seen from the steamer just a short time before arriving in Asuncion. An hotel, an inn, or even a boarding-house ought to do well there. It is a lone mountain, and must catch any breeze there is. It is a spot used for picnics, and might turn out a success for summer visitors. There have been some people here lately looking for places to invest money, a tip for them. Then if the electric tram company would run a line out, that would be another good thing. There used to be a track there during the mule régime, but I suppose it was not considered profitable enough to build the electric line. Perhaps it will happen some day, when we are not here to see it.

Tennis and Sport Societies.

A tournament is to take place today at the Asuncion Lawn Tennis Club. Mr. F. Oliver, the British Chargé d'Affaires, kindly gave the Club two fine racquets. One is to be a gentleman's and the other a lady's prize. A good attendance is expected. There are few ladies to play, and unless at least four can take part, the tournament for them will be postponed. The other Tennis Clubs and Sports Societies are giving teas, garden parties, etc., to end up the season, the English-speaking Club being the exception.

October 12th.

Asuncion has been quite lively again with the celebration of the anniversary of the discovery of America. "The feast of the Race" it has been called. The evening before a gala performance took place in the theatre. In the morning of the 12th a civic parade marched to the plaza of the port. A speech was made by Sr. Artaza, President of the "Centro Estudiantil." From there they proceeded to Calle Colon, and 15 de Mayo, where the foundation-stone of the monument to Columbus was laid. In the afternoon an entertainment was given in the Normal School, and also in others. A Solemn Mass and Te Deum took place in the Cathedral.

The concert in the theatre was accounted a great success. The President was there in the official box, with a number of his Ministers. Also all, or nearly all, the diplomatic corps, including the American Minister (Mr. Mooney), and the British Chargé d'Affaires (Mr. F. Oliver). The boxes were filled with the majority of the first families of Asuncion, and when the excellent programme came to an end, all those invited to the ball in the "Centro Español," passed on there, where dancing was kept up until dawn.

Personal.

Mr. Daniel Mooney (the American Minister) leaves on Tuesday, the 19th, for Buenos Aires and the United States for a vacation of several months. Mr. Millmore, Secretary of Legation, will act as Chargé d'Affaires. Mrs. Daniel Campbell left on last week's "International" for Buenos Aires, to spend some time with her mother, Mrs. Eccleston, of Belgrano.

The engagement is announced between Sr. Don Guillermo Strong Bindon, of Lomas de Zamora, Buenos Aires, Argentina, and Miss Gladys Hall, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Hall, F.C.I.S., formerly of Buenos Aires, now of 8 Marlborough Crescent, Bedford Park, London, W., August 22, 1915.

DAY BY DAY IN ROSARIO.

(From Our Correspondent).

October 26.

Mrs. Every Miller is going down from Rosario to attend the annual meeting of the Women's Association, to be held in Buenos Aires on Thursday. She will make the Reply to Mrs. C. H. Pearson's Address of Welcome. Several other ladies of Rosario and district will attend, and Mrs. Blair, of Los Cocos, formerly of Alberdi, will read a paper on Prayer.

Mrs. J. P. Crouch is arranging a very attractive programme in connection with the Garden Fête and Sale of Work to be held at "La Quinta" on Saturday and Sunday, November 20 and 21, in aid of the Officers' Widows and Families Fund.

There will be no meeting of the Alberdi Ladies' Work Party on November 1, but on every succeeding Monday until the date of the Sale of Work, December 8, all interested are invited to attend at the High School. The stalls to be furnished are plain and fancy work, produce, arts and crafts, confectionery and toy stalls, not to mention the fishpond, and any contributions will be gratefully acknowledged.

On October 30 the annual general meeting of the Rosario Golf Club will be held at the Britannia Hotel, by courtesy of the proprietors.

A meeting was held this evening of the newly formed Committee which is to study the proposal to enlarge the British Patriotic Committee into a Society which shall better represent the British community. Details will be found elsewhere of the general meeting held on Trafalgar Day at which the election of this Committee was one of the chief items on the Agenda.

To-morrow night's "White Dance" at St. Bartholomew's Hall is likely to be a success, given a fine night, for the sale of tickets has well fulfilled the expectations of the Committee, and opportunities of the kind are not too numerous, especially in these war-shadowed days with so many of the livelier members away.

A Mixed Doubles Tennis Tournament forms part of the programme of the Epworth League for November 1. A Feast Day. The courts in Boulevard Oroño are in splendid condition, and the general standard of play has greatly improved thanks to the increased facilities which are now afforded.

The Sale of Work and concert which had been fixed for to-morrow night at the Methodist Church have been postponed, probably out of regard for the dance at St. Bartholomew's, and a date in next week has, I understand, been decided upon: probably Wednesday.

On November 1 the Baptist Sunday School are taking advantage of the feast day to hold a picnic on the banks of the Paraná, at Sorrento. Tickets at 50 cents each may be had upon application to the officials of the church. Games for the children will be a feature of the programme.

At Talleres Church on Sunday next, at 8 p.m., there will be Evensong followed by Holy Communion, the Rev. S. C. Deacon being the celebrant. A hearty welcome is extended to all; books are provided.

St. Andrew's Day is drawing near, and the Committee are already beginning to consider the manner of its celebration. The Treasurer will be glad to receive suggestions in the form of financial support, for everything will depend upon how deeply the local Scots dive into their pockets.

Messrs. Dunlap and Schrivener made the trip to Alta Gracia to witness the golf tournament for the Captain's prize.

The recent rumours circulated in reference to the supposed death of Mr. Fitzroy Roose, while fighting at the front have proved unfounded, a letter having been received in this city to-day from friends in Paris stating that Mr. Roose is in good health and located in the fighting line "somewhere in France."

The directors of the Cordoba Football League are holding a meeting to-night in reference to the holding of the matches against Buenos Aires and Montevideo. As the Belgrano team had previously arranged a match to be played here against Rosario on Oct. 24, it may be decided to play Buenos Aires, and Montevideo on Oct. 31, and Nov. 7, instead of October 24 and 31.

OMAR KHAYYAM.

"D—n my straps and whiskers, said Tom Smart."

In these days of clean shaving, how great is the decay of whiskers. "Sideboards," Patillas, whatever they may be called, seem to have been much of a novelty when they appeared at the beginning of the 19th Century. Nero is suspected of having at one time worn his beard in this manner, but through the Middle Ages, and Renaissance, illumination, effigy or painting never represent men with whiskers. Their vogue when they did arrive was extraordinary. Everybody except old-fashioned people decorated themselves with the new hairiness. All the military dandies wore them. Those of Prince Joachim Murat, most gorgeous of eccentric martial fops and beau sabreur, were of great luxuriance. Ney, bravest of the brave, had them bushy and red. Some wore them as a hirsute frame encircling the face, an ugly fashion, not yet wholly extinct in Britain and America, but of many the whiskers were almost imperceptible, while others wore them large, bushy and fierce. French Hussars especially affected this fashion, as did many British sailors. The heroic period of Argentina was the very height, flood-tide and heyday of the whiskers' popularity. San Martin wears majestic sideboards of a Spanish mariner, and the habit persisted here as in Europe for many years. Some gentlemen carefully rolled their black whiskers till they resembled pistol barrels, and the high-necked coat, with stiff stock and choking cravat, is invariably associated with whiskers. Long afterwards even a Continental novel dealing in a highly illuminating way with English "le high life," asserted that "Sir Smith, being an Englishman, wore whiskers." The British military appendage was cut and kept to regulation size, such as one sees on portraits of the Great Duke. Even now occasionally in Buenos Aires a handsome Spaniard may be seen with imposing sideboards such as the traditional Toreador is credited with, but in England the whisker has fallen from its high estate. It is almost a badge of servitude, and it is fairly safe to offer a shilling to a man with mutton chops with the assurance that he will pocket the insult. To Mr. Jeames de la Pluche and his kind, this is largely due, for calves, in white stockings, and whiskers were his speciality. The whisker solus received its first blow when the Crimean full beard came in, but later it regained its popularity coupled with a moustache, for military men, and even developed into that appalling fashion the "Dundreary," surely one of the most inane and insane methods of wearing hair ever devised by man. The long whisker broke out in the Services, but was rigorously suppressed in 1867 by the War Office, and cut down to 4 inches or mutton chops. When the Navy ordinance commanded "Full board or clean shaven," the fabric of whiskerdom trembled. The Army order for moustaches practically finished it, and now the cheek appendage of haughty peers, kings, generals, and Persons of Consideration actually tends to mark a man as a "dem'd menial," and the free-born and independent British waiter rather inclines to remove it altogether, wherein no one can blame him. This is a fairly full, true and horrible account of whiskers from their first rise in the West, for they certainly came hither from the "Whiskered Pandours" and the "fierce Hussars" of Austria, until their well nigh total extermination.

"The old ornament of his cheek Hath stuffed tennis balls."

only they use "air" for that now, not "hair," as in Shakespeare's time.

BRITON.

Our Point of View: "Herald" Leading Articles of the Week.

"VICTORIOUS" GERMANY CALLS FOR PEACE

FRIDAY, October 22, 1915.

Considerable attention has been attracted by the report of the interview between the correspondent of the New York World, Mr. Karl von Wiegand, and Mr. Maximilian Harden, editor and part proprietor of Die Zukunft. Both men are patriotic Germans; both are endowed with an exceptional measure of intelligence; both are admittedly using that intelligence to further by every means in their power the cause of the Germanic races. From the outbreak of the war, Mr. von Wiegand, in his double capacity of American journalist and German hochvolgeboren, has been able to communicate to the outer world the views of the leading men in German naval, diplomatic, and military circles, flavouring them with the necessary comment when required, and, it is needless to say, whitewashing the cause of the Central Empires on any and every possible occasion.

Maximilian Harden is a man of another calibre. For the past ten years he has been a power in Germany; a power that has waxed rather than waned during the present war. His first appearance on the stage of Europe was in connection with the denunciation of the scandals and immoralities of the Eulenburg camarilla, but important though that action was, it is doubtful whether it has not been outweighed in practical value by the steadily progressive preaching which has characterised the extraordinary little fortnightly review that is read and re-read in every German home with any pretension to intellectual interests. Right down to the beginning of the war Harden was distinctly persona non grata with the Court Circle and the General Staff. If we remember aright, his paper was suppressed for a month; he was dubbed the Bernard Shaw of Germany, and popular papers, such as the Berliner Tageblatt, were beginning to denounce him as a traitor, or at the very least, as a luke-warm Teuton.

Then came, as far as can be realized from the outside, a complete change. Like everything else in that country, it appears to have emanated from the All-Highest. Harden and his views were given official sanction; nay more, they were spread abroad through the medium of the official press bureau; finally, they are largely quoted in the more intelligent propaganda journals sent to neutral lands. It is this fact that gives importance to the recent interview with the American-German journalist. Harden, the publicist, criticises the Balkan diplomacy, and does so in the light of many years' careful study of a very complex problem. He cynically admits, if not in so many words, at any rate by the context of his remarks, that the Balkan problem has been chiefly if not solely a matter of price. He scoffs at the operations in the Dardanelles; declares the landing in Enos to be but another and more costly mistake; predicts that Egypt will be the next objective of the German general staff, and, on the top of it all, talks of peace. Of Peace, granted by Germany to defeated England, Russia, France, and Italy; defeated without their knowledge, says Harden, but none the less unable to attain their ends and therefore subject to the wishes of a triumphant Germany.

We are tempted to enlarge at some length on the remarkably striking example of the Teutonic obsession that such a view of the situation proves, but this would be to leave the main object of this article which is to point out the strong probability of another "peace" campaign being set a-foot by Germany all the world over

THE POSITION OF GREECE

SATURDAY, October 23, 1915.

There is every reason to believe that Greece will yet be induced to side with the Allies, and that our earlier pronouncements as to the Greeks as a nation being favourable to the Allied cause will be proved to have been correct. It may be admitted at once that the active participation of Greece in the war is almost essential to the success of the Allied plans, assuming the reports of the flight of the Serbian army to be correct. The earlier statements of success by the combined French and British forces have not been confirmed, and it is evident that the Serbians, though gallantly maintaining a determined resistance to the whole weight of the Teutonic and Bulgarian forces, are being pressed back. What number of men France and Britain already have in the field it is impossible to say, but clearly the available force is not a very large one; certainly not large enough to make the necessary counter-attack against Bulgaria which would relieve the pressure on the Serbians. That the Anglo-French force is being strengthened as rapidly as possible, goes without saying; but the vital question is whether sufficient numbers of men and material can be landed quickly enough to take up a strong line of defence, cutting off the Bulgo-Teutonic forces from Turkey.

Whatever forces Greece has available should by now be ready for the field. Their mobilisation was ordered some time ago. It is more than probable that the strong bid which the Allies are now making for the active support of Greece is designed to secure the immediate use of these forces. A Greece actually hostile to the Allies at this moment would mean a disaster to the expeditionary force, and a Greece standing idle with a fairly powerful force merely looking on is certainly not what the Allies want. Hence the desperate efforts being made to get Greece to fight at once. It appears to have dawned on the Allies that with the Balkan nations everything is a matter of price. Briin order to save what yet remains of her European trade. It is not the Allies but Germany who has failed in her main objective. The Control of the Seas is still in the hands of the Allied Fleets, and as France and Russia gratefully admit, it is to the British Fleet that this control must be attributed. Germany set out to oust Great Britain from her post of mistress of the seas; she proclaimed her intention far and near, she embroiled the whole world in order to bring about her aim. When her High Sea Fleet found discretion the better part of valour, she took up a new arm of attack, using the submarine ruthlessly and at first with apparent success. That too has now been scotched, and the Zeppelins, the gases, the liquid flames, though adding to the misery of war, have proved useless from the aspect of military strategy, as Germany herself admits.

We know that the Central Empires are feeling the strain to be almost insupportable. A breathing space is urgently required, hence the cry for peace. It is a cry that will find small echo in the hearts of the great Allies, coming as it does from a source that is tainted with suspicions of the ulterior motives involved. France, England, Italy, Belgium and Serbia, one and all feel that, despite their exhaustion and distress, to give their diabolic enemy one moment's time to apply his admitted genius for organization to the strengthening of his position would be fatal folly. The wrestler, despite all his unfair tactics, is thrown. There yet remains the hard but not impossible task of pinning his shoulders to the ground.

tain has offered the island of Cyprus as her share of the payment for the intervention of Greece, and the offer is reported to have created a favourable impression in Athens. In London it has been received with some measure of hostility by certain sections of the Press. The London Standard has described the transaction as a bribe, and a useless bribe, because, the paper asserts, it is not right to offer British territory to statesmen who have been guilty of perfidy, and from whom there is no guarantee that the bribe will not be useless.

On the grounds that the offer of Cyprus may be useless, because it is not large enough for Greece, there may be some argument, but on the objection that it is a bribe there is none, and it is difficult to understand the attitude of the papers which subscribe to the Standard's views. A week ago it was the consensus of opinion in British Press circles that the old style of diplomacy had failed miserably and dangerously. Many newspapers had for months seen that the Balkans were being bought and sold, and they railed at the fatuousness of British officialdom which refused to see this and to act accordingly. This being so, it is obviously inconsistent for any paper which condemns the incapable diplomacy of the old school, to object now to a transaction that accords with the new conception of international bargaining. The Allies are merely taking a leaf out of the enemy's book, and unless they are to be hopelessly beaten they must do so. The price of Bulgaria's alliance with the Teutonic cause is the German promise that she shall have what she wants in the way of Serbian territory.

The Standard says that the only thing which distinguishes the British offer from German bribes is that Germany offers territory belonging to others, while Britain offers her own. But the difference is a big one, and it may count to Britain's credit in the long run, that she prefers to bleed herself rather than carve up others. However, the great desideratum is to get Greece to drop into line with the Allies and render them timely assistance. If Greece does not of her own volition choose to act in accordance with her treaty obligations, then Britain is absolutely right in offering her inducement to do so. The offer so far made is not so foolish and useless as might at first sight appear. Although a valuable possession, Cyprus is not so valuable to Britain that it may not be offered to Greece in payment for services to be rendered, and to be handed over only when those services are rendered. Evidently in the eyes of Greece it is a coveted thing, and the proffering of it may result to the immediate material advantage of the Allies. And as a price it is more substantive than any promise to Greece that she shall profit at the expense of Bulgaria or Turkey.

Quite probably Britain is acting in this instance in accord with the plans of M. Venizelos. A great deal is yet wanted by way of explanation of the movements of this extraordinary man. Clearly M. Venizelos is strongly in favour of the cause of the Allies, and the story of how he engineered the landing of the Allied troops at Salonica is further proof of our earlier contention that he is still the great power of Greece and has behind him the sentiment and support of the people. If what he did in connection with the landing of the Allies were done solely on his own responsibility and contrary to the desires of his people to remain neutral, then he would quickly have disappeared from the scene as a traitor. He has not done so; neither has his action been repudiated or its consequences undone. There has been some formal protest, but nothing more. If Venizelos were really beaten and disgraced, then the Allies would not to-day be making a base at Salonica. It is a fair assumption that Venizelos holds the key of the situation, and that the Allies are working in close touch with him, even in the matter of the offer of territorial gains.

THE MURDER OF NURSE CAVELL

SUNDAY, October 25, 1915.

The brutal crime of the execution of the British nurse, Miss Cavell, has rightly aroused a feeling of horror throughout the British Empire and the neutral world. The unfortunate woman was murdered by a gang whose hands are already red with the blood of countless innocents, sacrificed to the lust of a maddened nation. There is no other way of describing it. We do not require a lesson on the principles of humanity or the laws of war from individuals who are just now endeavouring to think, and whom the inscrutable Providence has not endowed with the physical apparatus for that exercise, to enable us to distinguish murder from legal execution. There is no room for legal argument in the case of the unfortunate British nurse dragged from a prison and shot off-hand by butchers, and the moral iniquity of the crime could not be better expressed than it has been expressed by the German-American editor, Ridder, who said: "There should never be any necessity for the execution of a woman under any circumstances."

In our issue of May 6, when dealing with the case of Private Lonsdale, who was sentenced to death, but subsequently reprieved, we gave our interpretation of what law and morality demanded in such cases as that of the soldier and Nurse Cavell. In that interpretation we demonstrated, we believe clearly, that it is not an offence subject to capital penalty for a soldier to use violence in endeavouring to regain his liberty. Neither is it a capital offence in civilised countries for an alien enemy subject to endeavour to assist the escape of enemy soldiery. Miss Cavell merely exercised the unwritten right of an enemy subject to assist her countrymen to escape. Had she been a German subject then unquestionably the law of nations would have admitted the legality and the morality of the death penalty, because she would have stood in the position of a traitor. As it was she was subject to no other penalties than those dictated by the necessity of preventing her and others from assisting their countrymen—imprisonment. To kill her was, and is, a crime, amounting, without the justification of moral or legal necessity, to murder.

The British Government is doing right in bringing the matter formally under the notice of neutral powers. It is well that world-wide attention should be directed to such crimes, because they convey important lessons, even though they produce no immediate results in the shape of protests or other condemnatory action. It is an unfortunate fact that the neutral world has so far remained quiescent in face of many horrors perpetrated by Germany, exceeding in their brutality and cold-bloodedness the execution of the British nurse, but it must not be imagined that the neutral world has remained indifferent. The wholesale butcheries of Louvain and Dinant have duly impressed neutral peoples, even if they have not stirred their governments to action. It has been demonstrated that the much-vaunted culture of the Germanic races is merely a veneer covering the most savage primordial instincts of slaughter and vile hatred. The sufferings of tortured Belgium and invaded France have left their imprint on the minds of countless millions of intellectual people who look beyond the display of mere brute strength for the decency of soul and sentiment that should exist in a nation aspiring to dominate the world. By such crimes as that of the murder of Nurse Cavell all Germany's culture and civilisation is discounted. The beast, savage and hateful, stands out superior to anything else. Civilisation wants none of it. The horror and disgust engendered in the world against brutal Germany has transformed Miss Cavell into a martyr whose death will not have been in vain.

NEWSPAPERS AND CRITICS

TUESDAY, October 26, 1915.

Newspapers of character, like men of character should have their critics and their enemies. The man without critics and enemies is a man without character; so is a newspaper. The absence of one denotes the absence of the other. The number of critics of a newspaper is in direct ratio to the extent of its vigour and activity. If it have neither character, vigour, nor activity, then it not only does not possess critics and enemies, but it suffers the additional misfortune of being surrounded by mournful sympathisers. A newspaper does not want sympathy; it must command respect, which is an entirely different thing. THE HERALD has its critics of both classes, kind and unkind, and it is proud of the fact. The position it occupies to-day is due to its character of candour and courage, which has never permitted it to pander or truckle, or trim its course to the winds of favour or disfavour. For the criticism of its friends THE HERALD owes its thanks, and recognising as it does that that criticism is impelled by good intentions, and is designed to be constructive, it is compelled by the dictates of courtesy and respect, no less than by its appreciation of the interest shown in its welfare, to give serious attention to its friendly critics.

The other class of critics merits little attention. They are generally as ignorant of newspapers as they are devoid of commonsense. For some of them there is the substantial excuse that their acquaintance with the Press has been limited through many years to the journal of the parish magazine type. Accustomed to a time-serving policy, or no policy at all, pampered with praise and platitude, and fed daily on a diet of boneless hash, it is not surprising that they cannot digest good invigorating mental food. These individuals literally do not know a newspaper when they see it, and they are no more fitted to judge of its character and contents, than they are competent to conduct a spectrum analysis. The type of journalism which by some extraordinary process of reasoning they have come to accept as a standard, is no doubt responsible for having fostered the delusion that a newspaper is a spineless, soulless thing that may be kicked and insulted, bullied and threatened, and will not retaliate. It shocks them to receive occasionally a demonstration to the contrary.

Some of these critics cannot distinguish between a headline and a leading article. They do not know that a newspaper does not express itself in headlines, but in arguments; that news is news and cannot be confounded with commentary articles, and that a newspaper, like most business concerns, arranges its stock according to its value. The most important news—and news is the stock a newspaper has to sell—is displayed in the most conspicuous place, and should be properly and effectively labelled, yet some of these amusing critics would have news thrown into a newspaper haphazard, or worse still, have certain items deliberately suppressed or placed where they could only be discovered with the use of a microscope. In relation to the war, the extraordinary view of these remarkable critics is that all items of news of an unpleasant nature, should be kept out of a newspaper, or be stowed away in obscurity. If they had the management of the newspaper, and it should so happen that the news of a great disaster to the British fleet came to them by way of news, simultaneously with the report of the capture of a German trench, the latter item would obscure in importance the former. And certainly they would not describe the former as a disaster, but, by some superior process of journalistic juggling of which we do not possess the secret, present it in the nature of a glorious triumph over our foe.

To such critics as those we have

PHRASES AND FALLACIES

THURSDAY, October 28, 1915.

It would be paying too great a compliment to the majority of those who have endeavoured to stem the rising tide of truth and courage—manifested in relation to Britain's problems—to say that they have arguments to be answered. They have not. Their stock-in-trade generally consists of time-worn and tiresome phrases and platitudes. Bring forward an arguable case in favour of some reform, or some movement calculated to improve the position of the Nation, and they produce by way of proving that things should be left as they are, some ancient piece of verbiage. The newspapers agitating for reform are "the half-penny Press," and the men contributing to their columns "penny-a-liners," and it is pathetic to see some supposed leaders of local public thought adopting these very phrases. They could not, we are sure, tell just why a half-penny paper is, by reason of its price, less sane, or less reliable, than a penny paper. Nor do they appear to realise that some half-penny papers support the old order of things, and that if price is to be accepted as a criterion of common-sense, these journals must either sell at a penny or come under the general condemnation.

The idle mouthing of many of these foolish phrases, like the thoughtless shouting of supposed patriotic ditties, is largely responsible for a great deal of the mischief that serious-minded people have to undo. It is a mystery, worthy of the attention of the greatest psychologist, how many people have managed to delude themselves into the belief that by singing songs, muttering phrases, and indulging in wholesale abuse and contempt of the enemy, they are patriotic, and are seriously helping forward the Allied cause. Though we have long since realised the absurdity of it, the phrase "Business as usual" is still being glibly used. At one time it might legitimately have been employed to described we owe nothing more than a small debt of gratitude for the fact that by their patent foolishness and aggressive presumption they give us a certain amount of publicity, and publicity is the lifeblood of newspapers as it is of all business. The position of our friendly critics is, however, entirely different. Some of them, actuated by the kindest motives, foremost among which is the desire to see THE HERALD become a greater power in Anglo-Argentine interests, have questioned the wisdom of our strong policy in relation to the British Government's handling of the national affairs. They suggest that we might throw a more roseate light on the stage whereon all patriotic eyes are now centred, particularly because here there are neutrals who are liable to misunderstand too much frankness in a British newspaper.

This advice is well-meant, but it is advice that we cannot follow for two good and all sufficient reasons. The first is that we do not think it would be honest to depart at this stage from the course which we have followed since the war began. The second is that it would not be wise. We cannot make a volte face to please our best friends. To elaborate the reasons given is to open up the whole discussion of what is the right British attitude toward the war, and what is real patriotism. To follow this discussion through to its logical conclusion; to justify our policy and to demonstrate its rectitude, necessitates not one, but a series of articles, written in close relation to the great problems which are now agitating public opinion in the United Kingdom, throughout the British Empire, and in fact wherever Britons are assembled in any number. We propose to devote these columns throughout this week to the fullest discussion of the whole subject.

express the national determination to maintain our world-wide commerce throughout the war just as in time of peace. This was before the formidable nature of our war task was realised; but when it was seen that we were at deathgrips with a well organised, powerful and utterly unscrupulous enemy, it should have been dropped. Instead of it being realised that in this unusual struggle, nothing could be as usual, the sentiment of "Business as usual" has been mischievously applied even to our methods of conducting war.

Many similar platitudinous phrases, most of them fallacious, have been, and are still being, employed. It is no uncommon thing to hear people asserting, that "we can muddle through." We cannot; and the sooner the fact is driven home with brutal frankness and force, the sooner will every entity of the Nation be brought into systematised unity of effort to bring about our victory. Victory will not be gained by muddling, nor by tolerating and excusing muddling. It will not be gained by reiterating phrases, for there is no verbal formula for ensuring victory. If there were, some of our critics would have made victory certain long ago. As we believe we are right to drop the "Business as usual" cry, because business is not as usual, and in the nature of circumstances cannot be as usual, and as we believe we are right to discountenance the idea that we can "muddle through," so we believe we are right to disregard many such phrases.

There is no call on the British Nation to "trust the Government," merely because it is the Government. It might easily have happened that the outbreak of the war found the British Nation under the government of the most incompetent body of politicians that ever constituted the National Council. Should we then have "trusted the Government," and out of a mistaken spirit of loyalty, to a phrase, have witnessed our ruin? As a matter of cold fact, the Government did not trust itself, for immediately pressure was applied, it brought about its own reconstruction, acting apparently in accordance with an idea that it did not possess within its own ranks all the necessary, and all the available talent and power, which the great task called for. Even the Asquith Ministry did not see any substantial objection to reconstruction—when the necessity for it was revealed by criticism,—but there is not one of the old school of platitudinising patriots who will not raise a din about "swapping horses while crossing the stream." They generally misquote Lincoln's famous saying, but that is immaterial. It appeals to them as a good old stand-by, and a final answer to everything. They never appreciate the fact that there might be some advantage in "swapping horses" if the first horse merely bogged them in the middle of the river, and could not, or would not, pull them out.

THE HERALD long ago refused to be a purveyor of platitudes, or a vendor of vapor verbiage. Rightly, or wrongly, it decided on a clear course, deviating materially from that followed by the conventional crowd. It may have been accidental—we do not think so—but we found ourselves closely in accord with many of the most influential newspapers of the United Kingdom, and in direct opposition to the phrase-mongering worshippers at the Shrine of Shibboleth. We are aware that many absurd stories, supposed to be explanatory of our policy, are in circulation. We have been described as "anti-English" and "unpatriotic," but we have sustained these descriptive phrases in very good company, and in company that not so long ago was regarded as ultra-respectable and proper. It has also interested us to note that the company we keep is rapidly securing recruits from the other side. We are encouraged to believe that the policy we have adopted will prove successful, and, of course, when it is successful, then it will have been all along the correct policy.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN

SUCCESSFUL CONCERT

Wednesday, October 27

Mrs. Herald met with splendid success in the concert that she arranged for the St. John's Missions to Seamen last evening.

An excellent programme was provided, and as usual, although somewhat small owing to the scarcity of ships in port, the audience were most enthusiastic.

Mrs. Herald herself received an immense ovation and constant recalls for her various items. She is always most generous in this respect, and as the many things she does are well done, humorous and original, she always very fully entertains her audience. She was in excellent form last night and repeatedly encored.

Miss Dorothy Stuart Small at the piano in the first item of the programme chose Moszkowski's "La Jongleuse" and as an encore Liszt's "Dream of Love." In the second half, her dance was the dainty and quaint "Les Millions d'Arlequin" (Drigo.) It was well done and an encore was demanded and the dance repeated.

Mr. E. Gough always captivates his audience, and last night was no exception; he received encores for all he did, and roused his audience into joining in his choruses in a most hearty manner. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hogan.

Miss Woodwell chose two delightful violin solos, "Erin's Wreath" and Schubert's Serenade as an encore, and played them with feeling and expression, and none could have guessed that she was labouring under the difficulties of a broken violin head. Miss Woodwell always plays tastefully and well.

Mrs. Hansen sang "The waltz dream," "Somewhere a voice is calling" and "Rosebud" very charmingly. Mr. Brady, in just as good voice as ever, Mr. Crawley in a humorous song at the piano, and a trio from "The Yeomen of the Guard" by Mrs. White and Mr. and Mrs. Herald were the other excellent items on the programme. It was a good and most enjoyable concert, and of necessity prolonged until a late hour. The programme was as follows:—

Part I.—Piano solo, Popular Airs, Mrs. White. Song, "The Kerry Dance" and "Marie my girl," Rev. H. W. Brady. Song, "Waltz Dream," encore "Somewhere a voice is calling," Mrs. Hansen. Trio, "A man who won a fair maid" from "The Yeomen of the Guard," Mrs. White and Mr. and Mrs. Herald. Humorous song, encore Mr. Crawley at the piano. Piano solo, "La Jongleuse" (Moszkowski), encore "A dream of Love" (Liszt), Miss Stuart Small. Song, "Japanese Love Song," encores, "Irish! and proud of it too" and "Immigrate," recitation, Mrs. D. Herald. Comic song, "Lala," encore "If you're going back to London," Mr. E. Gough.

Part II. — Violin solo, "Erin's Wreath," encore "Serenade" (Schubert), Miss E. Woodwell. Comic song "Are we down-hearted," encore "We must all fall in," Mr. E. Gough. Song "Rosebud," Mrs. Hansen. Dance "Les Millions d'Arlequin" (encored), Miss Stuart Small. Recitation, "The walls of Jericho," encore "How young Hockey enlisted," Mrs. David Herald. National anthem.

EXPLOITING RIVADAVIA OIL

(La Prensa.—October 21).

Again and again, says La Prensa, it has drawn attention to the immense importance of the oil question in Argentina, its direct bearing on the fuel problem, especially in war time, its utility as a motive force, and its bearing on the exchange problem in so far as it concerns the remittance of money abroad to pay for imported coal. All these reasons combine to urge upon the Government the need for concerted action that shall incorporate this source of energy and wealth with the national economy. Nevertheless official lenitude of administration has been such as to leave the problem still unsolved. Years have gone by in delays. Much has been made in official announcements, in ministerial reports and excursions, of the opening up of new surgent wells, but practical action has been conspicuous by its absence. Imagine, says La Prensa, what things would have been like had such a property been in the hands of the United States, England, or Germany? On Government and on Congress lies the heavy responsibility for the delay that is daily damaging the country's most important interests.

The country consumes large quantities of coal and petroleum, all imported, whilst it has been fully proved that the output from Comodoro Rivadavia might well replace, in part at least, both combustibles. Indeed many industrials have adopted it, and more would do so could they be but certain of regular supplies, hampered by lack of boring, insufficient transport, want of storage capacity. Such delay La Prensa characterises as unpardonable. There is no justification to be found for such a state of affairs, attributable only to the Governmental habit of making delay after delay, counting the months as days and the years as if they were months. Think of what it all means, exclaims La Prensa! The fuel problem solved; the distant regions of the South opened up, as has happened in similar districts in the United States, where the finding of petroleum has led to the establishment of whole towns. Realise all this, and it will be seen that the need for action is imperative.

BUENOS AIRES PROVINCIAL DEBT

(La Nación.—Oct. 22.)

In yesterday's issue La Nación states that it published a cable received from New York and stating that according to information received from Berlin, the Frankfurter Zeitung am Mittag gives expression to the bad effect that has been caused in German financial circles owing to the fact that the Government of the province of Buenos Aires has not met the interest on the 5% loan of 1908 since the payment made in October, 1914. The provincial Government have thought it advisable to explain this apparent lapsus, and therefore draw attention to clause 4 of the said loan, wherein it is stated that "all payments relative to this loan, whether for interest, amortisation or repayment shall be made by the Government in English pounds sterling at the London office of the bankers issu-

THE POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK

(La Nación.—October 21).

The profuse propaganda undertaken with a view to acquainting the public with the advantages of the Post Office Savings Bank show laudable zeal on the part of its administrators, says La Nación, but at the same time the results attained so far do not warrant its proclamation as a proved success. Five months figures show a total of 43,000 depositors with a credit balance of $1,136,328, paid in at 440 agencies. This is the result of the widespread postal facilities, but neither the amount of the deposits, nor the balance sheet showing how far the concern covers its working expenses make good its claim to be firmly established. Salaries must be paid to its staff from the highest to the lowest, and however small may be the amounts handled, the work called for is just the same as if the figures ran into millions. Hence, concludes La Nación, until the institution leaves its embryonic state no verdict of any value can be expressed as to its working.

It must be remembered that in the Federal Capital, its chief centre of operations, the concern has to face competition in the shape of the Municipal Loan Office, which also accepts small deposits. Indeed the only person to benefit so far has been the Government, which has been able to place a million dollars worth of bonds with the Post Office Bank, it being a forced client of the state's loans. And, as La Nación points out, these forced loans are not without their drawbacks; witness the case of the National Pension Fund, with a capital of close on $60,000,000, yet unable to carry on its operations for lack of ready cash. The Post Office Bank may also find itself in difficulties for the same reason, since it is compelled to invest 85% of the money received in bonds, leaving but 15% for repayments. True the law has foreseen the difficulties that may arise, and has therefore allowed the executive under certain conditions to alter the rules governing the withdrawal of funds. In conclusion La Nación states that these remarks are not engendered by a wish to be systematically in opposition to the scheme, but are rather calculated to support the view that it is advisable to proceed cautiously, and not to hail the first few months working of the Bank as a proof of a surprising and certain success. Wait, says La Nación, until the Bank has been running for a year, and then see whether it is paying its way. In the meantime the concern is an official experiment.

ing the loan, or at their duly appointed agencies.

The service of this debt is included in the Funding Loan authorised by the law of 28 December, 1914. Moreover, the province of Buenos Aires has no direct relation with the National Bank für Deutschland, in Berlin, the contract for the original loan having been signed in Paris on the 15th November, 1908, by D. Frederick Portalis and Messrs. Emil Erlanger and Co., of London. If some holders of the bonds have not been duly paid their interest, the fault does not lie with the province of Buenos Aires, but with the bankers. An ironical touch is added to this explanation by the statement that possibly some difficulties have cropped up in regard to settlement owing to the war.

FATAL ACCIDENTS ON THE TRAINS

(La Prensa.—October 23).

Various recent accidents on the trains have, says La Prensa, caused a deep impression on public opinion, not only owing to the position of some of the victims, but also as showing a certain amount of carelessness on the make-up of the suburban trains. These trains handling as they do a numerous passenger traffic, are a steady source of revenue to the companies, and ought therefore to have special attention at their hands. La Prensa is surprised that the use of an accordion connection is not general between the coaches, since this means the absolute safety of the passengers who must pass from one carriage to another. Indeed it ought to be legally insisted on in all trains carrying passengers, since the open and frequently separated or badly levelled connections between one car and another are positively perilous when the train is travelling at high speed.

This may be considered arbitrary in the case of long-distance trains, though as a matter of fact they are usually equipped with the accordion connection, but is absolutely indispensable in suburban traffic where it is frequently necessary to go from coach to coach. Here the open connections are dangerous man traps, and frequently give one a chill of horror when one sees passengers crossing them, more especially the aged or infirm, to say nothing of women and children. The Inspector of Public Works might well give the matter his attention, concludes La Prensa, for the last accident cost the life of a well-known old gentleman, whilst but a short time ago an equally prominent doctor was sacrificed. Yet both these gentlemen could have travelled in perfect safety at but small cost to the company had the latter so willed it.

SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT

(La Nación.—October 23).

The revenue returns for the month of September show a slight improvement, and La Nación is of opinion that whilst the customs returns still show a total inferior to that of last year there is nevertheless a reaction in sight. Reduced importation began at the end of 1913, being due to the bad harvest and restricted consumption, plus heavy stocks, and excessive liquidation. Last year therefore was embarrassed as regards its commercial movement by all these several circumstances, and the slight upward movement of the customs returns shows that the old stock has been worked off, and that things are approaching a more normal condition. The heavy drop of close on 150 million dollars for 1914 was carried on into the first quarter of the current year, after which came the reaction, which, as La Nación remarks, may reasonably be expected to be maintained, imports coming back to figures more in consonance with the needs of the consumers and the general state of our markets.

There is also improvement in the stamp duties relative to the transactions in real estate; another favourable sign, tending to show that this market is also looking up. In short the whole position, as illustrated by the revenue returns, supports the belief that the country, having passed through the vicissitudes and difficulties of the critical period that began with the deficient harvest of 1913 and culminated with the European war, is well on the way to recovering its normal tone. Purged of much that was harmful, there is every reason to consider the fiscal returns a reliable indicator. At the same time La Nación concludes by insisting on the need for continued caution; the official finances are still in a precarious position, and will call for tactful handling and an avoidance of the financial and administrative megalomania that has counteracted the country's natural vigour and resources.

THE ARGENTINE SITUATION

(La Prensa.—Oct. 22.)

The course of the war in Europe leads one to think that the end of the tragedy is still far distant, and, says La Prensa, the position of the neutral countries is now more or less defined, hence the directing forces of Argentina are at liberty to adopt a national programme that shall cover several years to come. The war has undoubtedly done its worst in so far as damage to this country is concerned. Europe has hitherto brought us money, labour and enterprise, and at the present time, though deprived of this external aid, we continue to exist and keep ourselves afloat. La Prensa asserts that the inhabitants of this Republic do not realise the fortunate position which they occupy, and in this assertion it includes Government, the men at the head of affairs, and the capitalist class, all of whom appear to have adopted what one may term a policy of abstention. Neither official nor individual initiative is forthcoming, and one would imagine that the country was obsessed by imaginary or fantastic perils, just as though it lacked all means of its own simply because no fresh capital comes hither from Europe.

Save for the United States, no country on earth can show such a satisfactory balance-sheet to-day as does Argentina. Its gold stock is heavy, and will be added to by the coming crop, whilst the plethora of funds assumes the character of an economic problem. Fertile land, skilled labourers, ample markets, capital ad libitum, everything is to hand wherewith to inaugurate a great trade movement. Agriculture and cattle-raising, Argentina's greatest sources of wealth, are positively benefiting by the war, and if Argentina's statesmen did but have faith in the soil, they would make ample preparation to benefit by the great human flood that will come hither after the disaster. Compare the position of this country with that of any other neutral, exclaims La Prensa, and it will be seen that Argentina stands out victorious above them all. The greatest blockade the world has ever known causes but slight damage to Argentine interests. Where, then, does our misfortune lie? What is capital afraid of? Why should capitalists shun the safest and most profitable of all enterprises, the exploitation of our agrarian interests? Do the people with money content at the present time to let it lie fallow, expect to see things still worse than they are to-day?

La Prensa continues by urging the Government to take a lead in curing a state of affairs that has become a disease rather than a merely callous speculation in low values. It is the duty of the State to foment by all the means in its power agrarian exploitation, and it is a great injustice that Argentina, given her actual position, should suffer from the pessimism of capitalists and the neglect of all governmental measures calculated to help the Republic to realise her great destinies.

THE ARGENTINE CONSULAR SERVICE

(La Prensa.—October 25).

The extension of Argentina's foreign trade makes it advisable says La Prensa, to see to it that the consular corps of the Republic is well acquainted with its duties. As a rule this is not the case. They are not commercial men, and the knowledge of their disabilities leads them to leave commercial matters alone whenever such a policy is possible. Hence the need for reform. It is a recognised fact that the expansion of German trade, so marked during the past twenty years, is largely due to the thorough knowledge of foreign affairs shown by its consular representatives. German consuls are polyglots; are well read in the economic sciences; know how their own trade is made; are familiar with the methods of their foreign competitors; last but not least, they serve as guides and counsellors to all their countrymen who seek to push Germany's foreign commerce.

Argentina may not be able to get together such a talented body of men, but as La Prensa remarks, it can do something to improve the existing stock, and this means more care in selection. Personal favouritism ought not to count on such occasions, even although it may be true that Caligula once appointed his favourite horse to a consul's post. For the consular body is the incarnation of Argentina abroad, and it ought not to be thought that even a third rate post is of no importance. The Republic needs capital, immigrants, and trade; it also must study the methods of other lands, and try to find out how such methods may best be applied to the improvement of its own systems. Moreover it should fall to the lot of the consuls to try and place Argentine products abroad, making use of a series of intermediaries, and at the same time trying to find out how the interests of the country may best be safeguarded. To do all this it is clear that a consul must have sufficient preparation. If he is not well acquainted with the economic conditions of his own country it is evident that the consul is merely decorative, and La Prensa avers that only too frequently this is exactly the case. The fault lies in the Government. Nepotism reigns supreme in consular appointments; the distinguished young man who cannot live in an atmosphere of cattle-breeders and agriculturalists goes to Europe as a consul; the scapegrace of the family is another eligible; the political hanger-on; anybody and everybody in fact who is good-for-nothing here is good enough to be made a consul. The time for this method of appointment is over, concludes La Prensa, and the Argentine consular corps ought to be put on a better footing.

PETROLEUM

(La Prensa.—October 26).

When the population of the Argentine Republic was some two and a half million souls and its income about sixteen million dollars gold a year there was no difficulty in managing its finances since the only problem to be met dealt with the flotation of a loan in London wherewith to cover the annual deficit. Things have changed to-day, and Europe no longer provides the required funds, despite the fact that national, provincial and municipal authorities still need money. Remains an internal loan, but as La Prensa remarks, this is something that the Argentine is not accustomed to take into account, hence the only thing remaining is to go out and make the most possible of the national resources. Petroleum come first to the mind of La Prensa, and, says that journal, if the Government has not a rent of at least thirty million dollars from that source coming in, it has only itself to blame.

Rivadavia oil was only found out by accident, notwithstanding that the petroleum of Salta and Jujuy had been known for half a century ere the southern fields were tapped. From 1907 to 1914 the reports on the Rivadavia oil fields lead one to the conclusion that everything was lacking to make the find a success; science, experience, money, authority, and method. In short, mal-administration. From 1913 onwards a plan of exploitation was drawn up, involving the expenditure of fifteen million dollars, which, by some inconceivable error of judgment was reduced to five million, a still more serious mistake being made when Congress cut even this down by one and a half million. What more proof of mal-administration could be required, asks La Prensa?

It is urgently necessary that Government devote its attention to exploiting this source of wealth, leaving for the present, if necessary, all smaller matters in order that the petroleum wells be put on a broad and profitable base. Administrative cobwebs are clogging everything, and must be abolished if 1915 is not to be another—the ninth—year of profitless and needless experiments.

THE LOCUST CAMPAIGN

(La Nación.—October 26).

The agricultural zone, says La Nación, is at present being invaded by large swarms of locusts in the laying stage, and unless energetic measures are taken to combat the plague, wholesale devastation in the cultivated areas is threatened. On the plans which the Defensa Agrícola adopt for the extermination of this pest, and on the rapidity and energy with which those plans are carried out depend the salvation of the crops in the affected districts. As is well known there are two stages which present favourable opportunities for the extermination of the locust. The first is the laying stage, and it is when the insect has settled for this purpose that the most assiduous and energetic measures are necessary, as every insect destroyed before the period of laying means the destruction of numberless germs which multiply and intensify the voracity of the plague. It is necessary that the Defensa Agrícola organise its forces and direct all its energies on the destruction of the insect at this stage in order to prevent propagation. The second stage is that of the mosquito or hopper and the means adopted during this period involve the work of erecting zinc barriers and the digging of pits. Formerly payment for the work and guarantees for the return of the barriers etc. were exacted from the agriculturists in the act, but the Minister of Agriculture has decided that for the proper carrying on of the campaign it is necessary to assist them in every way possible, and to that end it is now proposed to supply the requisite barriers etc., on much less rigorous conditions, leaving the payment until after the harvest in those cases where the agriculturists are unable at the moment to meet the expense. It is quite probable, that much of the expense of the campaign will never be recovered, either the effects of the actual devastation caused by the locust, bad harvest, or from unwillingness on the part of the agriculturist to fulfill his obligation. Be that as it may, says La Nación, whatever loss may be incurred, through any cause whatever is infinitesimal compared to the enormous benefits which a successful campaign against this most voracious pest, must mean to the commercial prosperity of the country.

THE CHEQUE LAW

(La Nación.—October 27.)

When the cheque is duly protected by law against the possibility of fraud, its value as a medium for settlement of commercial transactions will have greatly increased in this Republic, remarks La Nación. Thanks to the passivity of Congress, the country is as yet deprived of these benefits, and it is time that things were altered. People who do not know the facts attribute the error to the Courts, whose judgments have nullified the additional clauses of Law 9077 under which imprisonment follows the issue of cheques with intent to deceive, unless the same is paid within the twenty-four hours allowed by the legal protest. A distinction must be made between overdrawn in error and extending a cheque solely as a trick to defraud. The first case constitutes a fault, the second is a crime, and Congress did not sufficiently differentiate between the two cases. The law as it stands is only a check upon open robbery, and the Courts, in thus reading the Act, did but show up the weak point of the new measure.

A serious study must be made of the whole subject if the country is to have a cheque legislation worthy of its importance. There is ample material, both in Europe and America, to serve as precedents and avoid contradictions. It is universally taken for granted that whilst the drawing of cheques

ENGLISH POLITICS

(La Nación.—October 25).

The situation of English politics is highly interesting at the present moment remarks La Nación. The coalition ministry now in power suffers attack from the Conservatives, who have made compulsory military service their battle-cry, and who count upon the support of a certain number of Liberal members. Hence the incessant and at times violent opposition of Lord Northcliffe's press, with The Times at its head. In reality, continues La Nación, the Conservatives have taken up the question of compulsory service as being the only means of reaching power; power that they must have in their hands if they are to stop the forward and reforming policy of the Liberal Government when the opportune moment arrives, since the war has accentuated rather than diminished the socialistic tendency.

It has not been shown that compulsory service would have given better results than the voluntary system, since as the Prime Minister has pointed out materials not men are Britain's need to-day. Moreover even supposing the voluntary system to be a failure, it has yet to be shown that compulsion, having regard to the general disturbance it would cause, would be more effective. In short, La Nación sums the position up as being a transcendent struggle between Liberalism and Conservatism. The former, almost in their entirety, plus the radicals and the Labour party, see clearly that obligatory service means the triumph of authority over liberty. The workmen in particular fear the loss of their right to strike, remembering that in Hungary, Italy, and in France, the railway strikes were brought to a close by compelling the workers to perform, under military law, the tasks they refused to do as simple citizens. Hence it is the old, old, question of British politics; the individual versus the State. The Conservatives find the moment propitious to seek their own ends, and outwardly they have reason on their side. But their opponents ask, and that not without good reason also. Is it necessary to sacrifice all that has hitherto been gained, all that for which our ancestors struggled and fought, in order to obtain the final triumph?

Hence the impatience with which the coming session of the House of Commons is awaited. Its resolutions will be of far-reaching importance. The Conservatives believe their triumph certain, counting as they do on some Liberals who are only able to see the immediate needs. The majority, including the radicals, nationalists, and Labour members, are however faithful to Mr. Asquith, if the latter, as everything leads one to suppose will be the case, remains faithful to Liberal principles. True, the Conservatives count on Mr. Lloyd George, who, in the case of their victory would become Prime Minister. La Nación however doubts very much whether the latter would oppose his old chief, to whose magnificent backing his greatest triumphs as a reformer are due. In any case comment is useless, since a few hours will bring a solution of the doubts that at present surround the situation.

without having funds wherewith to meet them is punishable either by fine or light imprisonment, there is a difference between this act and that of deliberate fraud by means of bogus cheques. What is needed, therefore, concludes La Nación, is a measure that shall check those who, without having funds to their credit and thereby render themselves liable to correction for a manifest irregularity. When such a law is passed, the cheque will enjoy the prestige it deserves, and business dealings will be still further facilitated.

MONEY AND CREDIT

(La Prensa.—October 27.)

Alluding to the recent renewal of the short-date loan negotiated with the banks by the Argentine Government, now amplified in another $25,000,000, La Prensa points out that the fact of the interest being dropped from 6½ to 6¼ per cent., or more or less the rate paid for the Franco-British loan in the States, does not signify the existence of an internal credit fund, but rather argues in a contrary sense. The characteristics of the existence of internal credit are found when capitalists are ready to show their confidence in the State by subscribing to Government loans, and the fact that the Argentine Government does not make use of this method of raising money, preferring a commercial transaction at short date, is clear proof that internal credit does not exist in this Republic.

Is this due to excessive depreciation of Argentine bonds? asks La Prensa, answering its own question in the negative. As a matter of fact, in Europe Argentine securities stand very high owing to their punctual service and the fact that they are paid in gold, whilst the flourishing production, solvency of the national finances, and peace at home and abroad, one and all guarantee a continuance of similar payments. Yet, despite all this, there is no market here for a Government loan; hence the Government is suffering the very same difficulties that oppress so many men of undoubted wealth and solvency. Meanwhile the banks have abundant funds on deposit, for which they pay little or nothing, and hence are able to hand over to the authorities at 6¼ per cent. the very same money that the private capitalist refuses to part with.

All of which goes to show that there is money in abundance wherewith to finance a policy of decided development. What is lacking, according to La Prensa, is credit, and it once more addresses the Government, now aware by practical experience of the timidity of capital, with a request to study the psychology of the situation. Tonify land values, it continues, increase discount facilities, do everything possible to set the money rolling. For the worst is already over, and all that is wanted is confidence. Foment to the fullest extent agricultural and pastoral interests, thereby doing away with the doubts and fears that have reached such a pitch as to abolish the internal credit of the Republic.

THE WEEKLY HERALD

POPULAR IN THE TRENCHES.

Our offer to post the "Weekly Illustrated Herald" to friends and relatives on active service, at special rates, has been eagerly availed of by many subscribers, and the paper has proved highly interesting and acceptable to Argentine volunteers.

Yesterday we received a subscription order from Mr. A. E. Hoddinott of Arteaga. Enclosed with the letter was a coupon taken from an old issue of the "Weekly Herald," with an annotation by Mr. Hoddinott, "This cutting has come to me from the trenches with an express wish to forward the 'Weekly Herald.'"

GOLD FROM EUROPEArrives in Buenos Aires

250,000 POUNDS BROUGHT FROM LONDON AT HEAVY COST

On October 4, there was shipped aboard the Dutch mail boat "Hollandia," the sum of £250,000, being part of the gold ear-marked to the Argentine legation, and actually held in deposit with the Bank of England. It is stated that the only object of bringing the specie here was to prove that the alarmist press, with its frequent statements concerning the impossibility of shipping gold hither owing to the restrictions of the Allies, was entirely at fault. As an official explanation it must of course be accepted, though it would have been a far more interesting experiment had the gold been drawn from Argentina's balance with Germany, since as far as one can discover, such a balance does exist, though not on the same scale as that in the countries of the Allies.

In any case the experiment was a fairly costly one, at present rates of exchange. Insurance is stated to have been 1%, freight 3%, and sundries, including packing, £60. The total cost is thus £3,500 very nearly, exclusive of 22 days interest, which at 5%, is close on £800. If further shipments are to be brought out at similar charges someone ought to intervene ere more Government money is wasted. Simple common-sense would have told whoever is responsible for this brilliant "ensayo" that inasmuch as the Argentine gold is specially held to the order of this Republic, England would not be likely to repudiate her obligation by refusing to allow shipment. If there is one thing that this war has fortified it is the universal belief that la palabra de inglés is good enough for any man or any state to go upon. Neither in morality nor in finance does one hear the expression, palabra alemana except it may be at times as a term of contempt or derision.

U.S. COALInvades the Argentine Market

HAS IT "COME TO STAY"?

According to Mr. George W. Carpenter, a United States coal expert who has been looking into the question in Argentina, this country offers a huge field for exploitation by the American coal companies.

Mr. Carpenter is the representative of the Clinchfield Fuel Co., and came to Buenos Aires to superintend the use of the first shipment of coal sent by his company to the Ferrocarril de Buenos Aires al Pacifico.

"I cannot give you the exact technical results of this first shipment," said Mr. Carpenter to a representative of the HERALD, but I can assure you that the coal has been pronounced to be highly satisfactory. I am taking back with me a detailed report from the experts of the railway company, and I believe that on this report it will be found that our best American coals compare favourably in all respects with the best Welsh steam coal. So delighted am I with the results of our initial shipment that the report that I will present to my company upon my return will induce them to go into this market permanently. As I pointed out to you on a previous occasion, we are not at the present moment anxious to find an immediate outlet for our products, because owing to the tremendous activity in all classes of manufacture in the States our output is easily absorbed. But we are looking to the future, and I think I may say that within a very little time we shall establish ourselves with our own wharf-frontage and depots and with our own steamers running between the States and Buenos Aires. I expect to be back in the course of a month or two and on that occasion will be most likely accompanied by our president or vice-president."

Mr. Carpenter went on to express his admiration for Buenos Aires, and particularly for the excellence of the railway systems. "I have become an intense admirer," he said, "of the completeness of your railway organizations in every particular. It seems to me they are first class services, and there are many innovations which I have not seen anywhere else. The method of working is highly efficient and strikingly smooth, and the new station at Retiro is one of remarkable beauty and thoroughness. I have seen nothing better anywhere. We have bigger railway terminal in the States, but I do not know of any station which presents the same evidence of solidarity, completeness and good taste as Retiro."

"I am glad to take this opportunity," said Mr. Carpenter in conclusion, "to thank everybody I have met for their kindness and real hospitality. I am going away very deeply impressed with the possibilities of Argentina, not alone from the point of view of my own business, but from that of the United States commerce generally. I am quite convinced that American commerce can come in here and make good."

GREECE AND RUMANIAWHAT WILL THEY DO?

Will Greece participate in this world war? Can Rumania remain neutral under the pressing political subterfuges that envelop her? Are the Allies powerful enough to counteract the deep-rooted plans of Germany in Serbia?

These vital questions were discussed by Emir Emin Arslan, Editor of the weekly review, La Nota, in an interview with a HERALD representative on October 21.

"King Constantine of Greece," said Emir Arslan, "strongly adheres to the Hohenzollern traditions, partly due to the fact that the Queen of Greece is the sister of the Kaiser, and consequently his spirit has pretty well permeated the minds of his councillors; and were it not for the courageous attitude of Venizelos, it might be said that Greece was rather inclined to leaning towards Germanic protection."

However, with Venizelos, the popular uncrowned ruler of the hearts of the Grecian multitude, and his unfaltering energy in having Greece champion a noble and righteous cause, it is very probable that Greece will eventually throw in her lot with the Allies, which materialisation, would have a potent effect in gaining Rumania also as an ally.

The Parliament of Greece has been besmeared with German gold, and its erratic methods during the earlier part of the Balkan crisis, which ended with the resignation of Venizelos, the Prime Minister, for the first time rivetted the attention of the whole world upon its irregularities, revealing a retinue of subtle intrigues and corruption at the bottom. The Greek policy at that time swayed to and fro.

"At the present moment, a more staid and sober judgment has gained the popular sentiments, and although it is a recognised factor that the King and possibly a majority of Parliament are staunch supporters of Germany, Venizelos and the people are quite a match for them, and it is hoped will ultimately succeed in throwing the balance of power, in their favour."

"When this happens Rumania's sole expedient will be to assist Greece and save Serbia from annihilation. With these two countries throwing their armies against Bulgaria, aided by the Allies, it would naturally precipitate a 'Germanic debacle.'"

"If this anticipated turn does not materialise, however, than the inferiority in numbers of the Allies' armies in Serbia, cannot withstand the enormous armies of the enemy who are already stationed at Belgrade.

"The Allies, at the highest are in possession of 500,000 soldiers, chiefly posted at Salonica with a possible move in an attempt to reach Nish, while the Central Powers in co-operation with the Turkish army at Adrianople muster a million men."

"It is obvious that the Allies without the support of either Greece and Rumania, will find themselves in a serious position, having to encounter a formidable German advance, while a Turkish army in the rear will have all the facilities of surrounding and attacking the weakened forces of the Allies."

"Only a miracle could save the Allies in Serbia if they are not aided by Greece and Rumania," continued Emir Arslan, "The German plans have been minutely wrought and their preparedness and strength in the Balkan zone is little short of supernatural, while they have fingered gold so freely for the purpose of bribery that they have been able to overcome practically every political obstacle."

"That Greece cannot remain neutral very long, is evident; her war preparations clearly evince that she is ready for any development, and it is safe to predict, that she will not act doubly treacherous, towards Serbia, by both refusing to abide by her treaty declarations and then to display any direct hostility towards her, so it is fair to speculate that eventually Greece will espouse the Allies' cause. Rumania, due to her delicate situation, and her policy of "watchful waiting," will with the Greek commencement of operations join the Allies, for she has never had any bonds of strong friendship with Bulgaria."

"With these two developments, the German army would be taken unawares, and the Allies would emerge victoriously; but that happening is dependent solely on the intervention of those countries," concluded the Emir.

The net profits of the Prince Line for the year ended, June 30, were £341,139, and £28,726 was brought forward. The net profits for 1913-14 were £280,414, and the dividend was 5 per cent, special appropriations amounting to £240,000. The earnings for 1912-13 were £425,857, and 15 per cent was paid, and £325,000 was added to the different funds. £18,487 being carried forward.—Journal of Commerce.

RAN ON THE ROCKS

S.S. DALLINGTON'S LONG VOYAGE.

The s.s. Dallington, now working cargo in the South Basin, had a voyage of unusual length, leaving England on June 25, and only arriving here during the last few days.

Enquiry reveals the fact that the circumstance was not due to romantic or adventurous happenings with submarines or phantom cruisers, but to the untoward and prosaic fact that she ran on the rocks off Whitby and had to put into Hull for repairs where she spent eight weeks making good defects.

THE NORTH PACIFIC

AFLOAT AGAIN.

In spite of the pessimistic reports of her position on the Punta del Iman reef, the British steamer North Pacific was pulled off the ledge yesterday by the efforts of the salving tugs. Some 4000 tons of cargo has been removed in lighters to Montevideo.

The ship proceeded to Montevideo under her own steam. Her damages have been temporarily patched, and she will probably come up to Buenos Aires to complete repairs.

TORPEDO COMES ASHORE

A sinister apparition has turned up at Punta del Este in the form of a torpedo, 16 feet long. It has probably been lost by an Argentine warship at practice as it is scarcely likely to have drifted up from the south after naval actions. In that case it would have a war head.

WRECK AT RIO

LOSS OF 8 LIVES.

Particulars are to hand of the sinking of the steamship Setima in Rio Janeiro Bay on Monday. The report that there had been no casualties, circulated at first, unfortunately proves incorrect. Among the passengers on the Setima were the pupils of the college at Netheroy, some of whom have perished, the total of lives lost being eight. It appears that the Setima struck with great violence on the submerged hull of a wreck which, half-buried in sand, has long been a danger to navigation off the Island of Mocangué. A great hole was torn in the forward part of the ship, which quickly settled and sank. Some boats from Brazilian Lloyd vessels were quickly on the spot and busy in saving life.

A most painful impression has been caused, and the President, Dr. Wenceslao Braez, has sent his Aide-de-camp to express his condolences to the bereaved families. Another account alleges that the loss of the vessel was due to overloading. No less than 500 pupils of the Salesian Fathers of Netheroy were on board, and it is matter of congratulation, considering the fact, the depth of the bay and the rapidity of the vessel's foundering, that the loss has not been much greater.

MR. ASQUITH AND THE NEAR EAST

Lengthy Statement in House of Commons

BRILLIANT ADVANCE ON BAGHDAD THE DARDANELLES MUDDLE

LONDON, Nov. 2.

To-day the Prime Minister delivered in the House of Commons his anxiously anticipated speech on the military situation.

Mr. Asquith commenced with the statement that the total casualties sustained by the British troops in France and Flanders amounted to 377,000 including killed, wounded and missing. He asserted that the Germans had not made a net gain of a single foot of ground since April last.

The Premier accepted full responsibility for the first attack on the Dardanelles, which resulted in failure, and the loss of several capital ships.

He declared that the step was taken after full investigation by naval experts and was sanctioned by the Government notwithstanding some doubts in the minds of the Government's principal naval adviser.

Reviewing the work of the British submarines in the Turkish campaign, Mr. Asquith said that in the Sea of Marmora they sank or damaged two battleships, five gunboats, one torpedo boat, eight transports, and 197 supply ships.

With reference to the Orient, the Premier said that there was a full agreement between Britain and France to maintain the independence of Serbia and not let her become a prey to the sinister and nefarious combination of Germany, Austria and Bulgaria.

Turning to the financial situation of Britain, Mr. Asquith said that the position was serious. The nation must be prepared to make far greater sacrifices than it had yet done to enable the Government to sustain the burden of the war.

He strongly believed that Lord Derby's recruiting plan had been a success and that compulsion would be unnecessary.

MR. ASQUITH'S SPEECH

The Dardanelles Muddle

CONFESSION OF CABINET'S RESPONSIBILITY

London, Nov. 2.

Mr. Asquith prefaced his remarks concerning the war by saying that his statement had been delayed by circumstances over which he had had no control; but the delay had been an advantage, in that it had enabled him to receive warning counsels from every quarter.

Doubtless the statement would disappoint many expectations—not the least among which would be the expectations of those who thought that he ought to appear as a criminal, or a penitent in a white sheet. However he did not propose to adopt either attitude.

Referring to the campaign in the East, the Prime Minister paid a warm tribute to the fighting qualities of the Russians, and expressed confidence in their ability before long to roll back the enemy.

VICTORIES IN MESOPOTAMIA.

As regarded the British campaign in Mesopotamia, he remarked that the object of the British was to preserve the neutrality of the Arabs, safeguard British interests in the Persian Gulf and uphold the authority of the Union Jack in the East. The British victorious force is now within measurable distance of Baghdad.

No operations had been conducted with greater brilliance or a better prospect of final success than the turning operations at the Dardanelles. From the moment Turkey declared war it was impossible to concentrate attention solely on the Western front, as the Turks threatened our Russian allies and Egypt.

TURKEY'S INFLUENCE IN THE DARDANELLES.

"The advent of Turkey had produced a great effect in the Balkans. The Government had to face a question which was not merely strategic. In a great war like this you cannot determine your policy entirely by naval or military considerations. Sometimes it is not only expedient but necessary to run risks which, it is clear, naval or military considerations would have warned you against.

LORD FISHER'S WARNING.

"In January we had not sufficient military forces available in the East to do more than cope with the Turkish attack upon Egypt, which was defeated. The question was then considered; and after full consultation, notwithstanding the doubts entertain-

CONSCRIPTION

Government Still Undecided

STATEMENT BY MR. ASQUITH

London, Nov. 2.

Mr. Asquith's statement in Parliament to-day occupied an hour and fifty minutes, and was fairly well received.

He admitted that there was a difference of opinion on the question of conscription.

His own view was that it was purely a matter of expediency.

Compulsory service was not outside consideration, but would not be resorted to without general consent.

The Premier declared that the Government was satisfied with the progress of the present recruiting scheme, but he declared emphatically "We are determined to stick at nothing in our determination to win."

As to the financial position, he said that the strictest economy on the part of both Government and people was necessary. The British situation did not compare unfavourably with that of the enemy; but the British were prepared to make greater sacrifices as subjects of a rich and resourceful Empire. However the nation cannot sustain the present financial burdens unless there is greater economy on the part of all.

The average cost of a soldier in the field is from £250 to £300 yearly each.

The essential objects of the British determination to carry on the war were to assure the independence of Belgium and Serbia.

The Prime Minister said in conclusion: "Let us endure to the end."

Munitions from Canada

EXTENSIVE ORDERS PLACED BY THE ALLIES.

Ottawa, Nov. 2.

Mr. D. A. Thomas, the personal representative of Mr. Lloyd George, the British Minister of Munitions, stated before he left for New York to take ship for England that important orders for war material had been placed in Canada by the Allies, estimated to represent a value of 500 million dollars, which is equivalent to about $60 per head of the population of Canada.

ed by the Government's naval adviser, Admiral Lord Fisher, the Government felt justified in sanctioning the attack. The step had been carefully considered and approved by the French, and enthusiastically received by Grand Duke Nicholas.

"The matter came again before the War Council. Before a shot was fired it was communicated to the Cabinet which decided that the first attempt should be made by the Navy alone. I take my full share of the responsibility, and deprecate attempts to allot responsibility to one Minister or another."

MISMANAGEMENT!

Asquith's Ministry Criticised

BY SIR EDWARD CARSON AND LORD CHARLES BERESFORD

London, Nov. 3.

Replying to the statement of Mr. Asquith in the House of Commons, the ex-Attorney-General, Sir Edward Carson, commenced by explaining the reasons which induced him to resign his seat in the Cabinet. He said:—

"I resigned because the Cabinet had formulated no plan for giving assistance to Serbia. Besides, it was plain to me that in the event of our enemies reaching Constantinople it would be impossible to keep our forces at Gallipoli.

"The letter wherein I tendered my resignation said:—'Greece is afraid of the Central Powers. Let us act so that she shall also fear the Entente.' I also expressed the opinion that in the event of Greece not joining us we ought to break off relations with her."

Sir Edward continued that he considered that under present conditions the Cabinet was incapable of carrying the war to a successful conclusion.

As regarded the Dardanelles, he declared:—

"I do not think the Government was justified in undertaking such an expedition, which has cost us hundreds of thousands of men, unless its military and naval advisers considered success possible."

At this point Mr. Bonar Law interposed, pointing out the secret nature of the memorandum which the Cabinet received respecting the situation on Gallipoli, which was not commented upon.

Sir Edward Carson having concluded, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford said:—

"I do not consider that the Prime Minister's statement in any way relieves the anxiety of the nation. The coalition Government was a mistake of the first importance. The Government was aware that our forces would never penetrate the Dardanelles.

"Further, it is not right that Lord Kitchener, who has to direct the military operations, should be a member of the Cabinet.

"The Prime Minister's doctrine of 'Wait and see' is fatal. So far, the Cabinet has had no real policy and no real plan of campaign."

Referring again to the Dardanelles, Lord Beresford said:—"I must state that the Cabinet did not consult the naval authorities on the question of the expedition, but merely said to them 'Obey our orders.' The whole affair has been grossly mismanaged."

Carson's Successor

London, Nov. 3.

The Prime Minister has formally announced the appointment of the Right Hon. Frederick Edwin Smith as successor to Sir Edward Carson in the Attorney-Generalship.

RUMANIA DECIDES ON NEUTRALITY

Intervention Only to Follow Defeat of Central Empires in the Balkans.

KING DEFIES PRO-ENTENTE PARTISANS

Additional Failure of Allies' Diplomacy Causes Sensation in London

LONDON, Nov. 3.

It is announced that the Rumanian Government has declared its intention to remain neutral in the present conflict.

The mobilisation of the Rumanian army is merely a measure of precaution against the interests of the country being threatened.

The news has caused a sensation.

KING'S REFUSAL

To Accept National Cabinet

GREEK LEAD FOLLOWED

New York, Nov. 3.

The King of Rumania has rejected the petition of the leaders of the Opposition for the formation of a National Cabinet.

The partisans of the Allies are striving to overthrow the Bratiano Government and provoke the intervention of Rumania in the war.

The case of Rumania is considered to be analogous to that of Greece, who refused the Allies' proposals in defiance of the opinions of the great majority of the people.

Too Late!

RUMANIA WILLING, BUT UNABLE TO AID ALLIES.

London, Nov. 3.

Authoritative information has been received here that Rumania will remain neutral, and the efforts of the Allies to win her support have failed.

It is stated that the Rumanian Government would prefer to take part with the Allies, but would not move unless the Austrians and Germans in Serbia were first defeated.

Despatches from Bucharest state that it is considered there that the Anglo-French Army landed at Salonica has arrived too late to save the Serbian army from destruction, and that this delay has given the Central Powers the ability, if they choose, of attacking Rumania on two fronts.

MILLION MEN.

Milan, Nov. 3.

Semi-officially, it is announced that Rumania would enter the war only after the Allies have landed half a million men; otherwise it would be impossible for her to carry on a war on two fronts.

A telegram from Paris says that it is expected that before long the Allies will be taking more decided action in the Balkans.

Many thousands of troops have already been landed at Salonica, and those which are now with the Serbians consist of several divisions, fully equipped and provided with munitions. Large contingents of British are expected at Salonica which will at once proceed to the front.

What has happened elsewhere during the present war will happen also in the Balkans. The Allies' preparations, at first incomplete, will continue until they have acquired all the force requisite to paralyse the enemy's plans.

FRENCH ADVANCE FROM KAVALA.

Amsterdam, Nov. 3.

Despatches from the Orient report that the French are advancing from Kavala, and that the Austro-German forces are preparing for an active bombardment of Nish, for which purpose a number of howitzers of the type used against the Russians at Przemyśl have arrived at Pirot.

Other despatches from Salonica say that the Bulgarians are advancing beyond Veles and have occupied part of the defiles of the Babuna range after desperate fighting; but that the Serbians still hold the principal part of the defiles near Perlepe.

The Bulgarians have not repeated their attacks on Krivolak, which is held by the French.

The foreign residents are fleeing before the advance of the Teutonic armies and are taking refuge in Krailievo. They include the families of the French engineers who were employed at the copper mines in the Bor region. The mines have been flooded to make them useless to the invaders.

"We are continuing operations in the Strumitza sector. Our troops are progressing on the southern slopes of the mountain chain forming the frontier.

"Despatches from our expeditionary corps in the Dardanelles report that from October 20 to November the days have been marked by the usual calm. There have been mine explosions at various places, wherein we had the advantage.

"The enemy appears to have given up the idea of renewing his attacks against our lines, which up to now have caused him very heavy losses.

"There has been great activity by our fleet on the coast of Bulgaria. Since October 13 the Allied fleet on the Aegean coast has bombarded De-deagatch.

"On October 20, 21 and 29 the military establishments on Gallipoli Peninsula were bombarded by the British monitors.

"In spite of protecting nets and many fixed mines the Allies' submarines succeeded in passing the Narrows and operating in unison in the Sea of Marmora, where they have rendered particularly difficult any movement of the Turkish boats which are revictualing the Turkish troops on the Peninsula."

Copper from Serbia

THE GERMAN OBJECTIVE.

London, Nov. 3.

M. Chedo Miyatovich, formerly Serbian Minister in London, says that the Austro-German forces are likely to obtain ample supplies of copper in Serbia, whose mines are probably the richest in Europe. The point at which the junction between the Germanic and Bulgarian troops was recently effected was in the mining district.

In a statement which has been published by the "Standard," M. Miyatovich says that the Serbians can hold out in the mountains a month longer. The invaders are likely to find but little booty in a country which has been exhausted by years of warfare, except what they take from the copper and coal fields.

It has since been announced that the Serbians have flooded the copper mines to prevent the enemy from profiting by his occupation of that part of the country.

"EVERYONE MUST DO HIS DUTY"

M. Briand's Call to the French People

FRENCH PREMIER'S ADDRESS ON THE SITUATION.

Allies' Determination to Crush German Militarism

PARIS, Nov. 3.

The new Prime Minister of France, M. Briand, has delivered in the Chamber of Deputies a declaration explanatory of the action which the Government proposes to take to carry on the war with Germany.

M. Briand stated that as the country is at war, the Government intended to concentrate itself on attaining the end it had in view, namely to collect all its efforts on utilising the vital resources of the nation on the war.

For this purpose it was necessary to combine all the public services, as it was only by unceasing co-operation that the victory could be won.

Every one must do his duty, and every fault or failure in doing so will be punished.

M. BRIAND'S SPEECH

Confidence in Victory

THE GERMAN-MADE WAR

Paris, Nov. 3.

Mr. Briand's address continued as follows:—

"Never had France an army more worthy of victory, and it is for the Government and Parliament to find the means for obtaining it to those heroes whom we salute with pride and emotion.

"The valour of officers and men, united in mutual confidence and in love of country, adds each day fresh glory to France. Our soldiers will fight with confidence under the command of a great leader who is at their head, and who infuses into them his faith in ultimate success.

"With such an army and navy, and such a Chief, who have fulfilled the hopes centred upon them, the whole nation is certain of victory, and will follow with serenity and imperturbable calm the development of the operations.

"The exemplary behaviour of the nation for the fifteen months of war obliges the Government to consider the question of the censorship, a question which will be solved in such a manner as the Press has made possible, having itself requested, in the interests of the national defence, the supervision of the Government.

"We call upon you for your co-operation. We are aware that it is your chief aim to second the action of the Government, which is prepared to carry out all its obligations and to take all responsibility.

"We are specially anxious that our acts be open to the criticism of the nation, and we shall take every opportunity to assist in this by supplying you, directly or otherwise, with every information to which you are entitled.

"It is by the unity of the nation, the Government and Parliament that we shall prosecute this war to the end, to the expulsion of the enemy not only from the territory which has suffered from invasion for some months but also that which has been suffering for so many years.

"France had no wish to disturb the tranquility of Europe. She disregarded every provocation and did all in her power to maintain peace. The attacks upon her was premeditated, and the country which imposed war upon her cannot justify himself by his sophistry. France accepted war, and she will not leave off until the enemy is subjugated. She will sign a peace only when victory has restored her rights and she has obtained all guarantees necessary for an enduring peace.

"The Allies will conquer through the close union existing between them which daily grows closer. The bonds uniting them have been further strengthened by the adherence of Japan to the agreement whereby the Powers of the Entente have undertaken not to make peace separately.

"However difficult the co-ordination of action may be in campaigns so far apart and under such variety of circumstances, we are determined to carry it out by means of intimate and frequent exchanges of views.

"General Joffre's visits to Italy and England, the reception accorded to him in those countries, and the decisions immediately formed by the General Staffs enabled the arrangement of more concerted action now and in future.

"In response to Serbia's call, France immediately went to her aid. We are fully in agreement with Britain as to the conduct of operations in the Balkans. France and the Allies will never abandon the heroic nation whose resistance elicits the world's admiration."

No Concessions to Italy

VIENNA DENIES PEACE RUMOURS.

JAPANESE AID

Count Okuma's Statement

MONEY AND MUNITIONS, BUT NOT MEN

Paris, Nov. 2.

"Le Matin" publishes a despatch from Tokio giving details of an interview between a representative of the paper with the Japanese Premier Count Okuma.

Referring to the rumours of the intention of the Japanese Government to send an army to the assistance of the Allies in Europe, the Count said:

"There was talk last November of Japanese forces fighting in Europe. To have done that we should have had to send 400,000 men, with the expectation of losing 200,000 of them, and therefore of having to replace them with 200,000 more.

"We had not the necessary transports for the purpose; for we should have required 2,000,000 tons of shipping to convey the army and equipment to its destination, and our commercial fleet aggregates only about a million tons.

"In the face of these figures, Britain and France understood the impossibility of our taking such action. Our sympathies with the Allies are as strong as ever, and we should wish to give France our financial support at least, which would perhaps hasten the end of the war.

"Japan is not a great financial Power, but we have certain resources. We have just covered twice over a Government loan of 30 million yen. That probably would make the issue of a second loan difficult, but it would prove our sympathy for France, and we should be happy to give our aid, however modest.

"The impossibility of sending troops westwards will not prevent us from giving our Allies naval and military support. Our arsenals are mobilised as in time of war. We also play the role of sentinel of the Far East, preventing your enemies from fomenting a revolt among the warlike Mussulman peoples who might be tempted to profit by your difficulties.

"We are also doing everything necessary to guard against damage to the Transiberian railway, whereby our supplies reach Russia. The principle which governs all Japanese action is that while our Allies are fighting, we shall not allow them to be attacked behind their backs."

Women Spies to be Shot

ACTION BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT.

Paris, Nov. 2.

The French Government makes no secret of having sentenced to death two women who were found guilty of being spies. These were Otilie Vosch and Marguerite Schmidt, secret agents of Germany in France.

Otilie Vosch was arrested at Bourges on May 27. At that time she was going by the name of Jenne Bouvier, but upon being interrogated she confessed the truth. She was born in the Rhine province, was 33 years of age and unmarried. For seven years before the war broke out she was living at Agen teaching German; but when hostilities commenced she returned to Germany to become a spy.

The German Government sent her to Nice, Montpellier, Marseilles and Lyons to take notes as to the importance of the new formation of troops, their sanitary condition, the frequency of the despatch of transport trains and in what direction, the state of mind of the population, the arrival of colonial troops and their number, etc. She received 400 francs for expenses on March 11.

Marguerite Schmidt was 25 years of age, and was born at Triancour. She was arrested at Nancy station on Feb. 17, and confessed that the German Government sent her to obtain and forward information as to the British troops reported to be in the Nancy region, and regarding other regiments camped between Barle-Duc and St. Meneshould.

The women of the province of Liege who refused to work in the munitions factories have been arrested and sent to Germany, and many Belgian men fit for military service have been similarly treated.

The workmen are being employed under the pretext of rebuilding the ruined towns, but in reality are being made to construct shelters for the third line of defences. The Germans hold that the employment of the Flemish workmen at the defence works is the best safeguard against the attacks of the aeroplanes of the Allies.

KING GEORGE V. INJURED

FALL FROM A HORSE IN FRANCE

London, Oct. 30.

Mr. Philip Gibbs, correspondent to the "Daily Chronicle," has telegraphed from the British headquarters in France the following account of the accident to the King:

"The King was reviewing a composite brigade of the First Army drawn up on the field of battle. His Majesty had already inspected a large body of troops, including many of those who fought at Loos. These were advancing in solid formation toward the roadway.

"As soon as the King, accompanied by his escort, moved away to the next point about 1500 yards further on, a General of Division rode down the lines and gave the order, "Caps off and hearty cheers when his Majesty passes. The King is expected back in half an hour."

"The men were wet through their uniforms, but they kept their hearts warm for a great cheer wherein to express their loyalty.

"Presently down the gusty wind came the sound of cheers from one and another corps half a mile away. Ten minutes later a light car came dashing along the road. Mistaking it for the King's, ten thousand men flung up their caps or hoisted them; but when the mistake was seen a roar of laughter went up from the men, then suddenly wavered into silence when a young staff officer sprang out of the car and shouted to a mounted officer, "Yell to the men not to cheer. The King has had an accident."

"It was thought that some of the officers and men heard, and that others did not hear, or did not understand. A moment later the King's car came down the road, and cheers rolled down the ranks, the men showing the greatest enthusiasm. The King was sitting in a closed car with a General by his side. He was smiling, but unable to salute in response to the homage of the soldiers.

"It appears that after inspection, the men who had been reviewed, broke into sudden volleys of cheering while his Majesty was still on the field and the men close to him, and that his horse immediately reared right up twice, then fell, bringing the King to the ground and pinned under the horse. Several officers immediately ran to the assistance of his Majesty, who was quickly helped to a motorcar.

"Naturally the King was severely shaken and bruised, but he was wonderfully calm and courageous, making light of the accident."

'FIGHTING CHARLIE'S' INDICTMENT

LORD BERESFORD CRITICISES THE MINISTRY

London, Oct. 28.

An article by Admiral Lord Charles Beresford on the present situation appears in nearly all the evening papers of to-day.

The Admiral commences by taxing the Allies, since the outbreak of the war, with lack of initiative and quickness of decision, whence the best conceived plans, bound to give the victory to the Allies, have been brought to nought. He says that support was not offered to Serbia until too late. Efforts were confined to bribing Bulgaria, without any seriously conceived plan being prepared. The Allies had to undergo the humiliation of Bulgaria's rejection.

Hitherto the struggle has been conducted by politicians and not men who had experience in such matters. The absurd expedition to the Dardanelles, which has given rise to grave complications in the East is a case in point.

If the Allies want to win the war, there are certain things which it is indispensable to do, and at once, without delay. The crisis through which they are passing is one of life or death.

The Government has no fixed policy or objective. Britain commenced the war with two great points in her favour,—a preponderance in sea power and in funds. In neither case can it be said that they have been used to best advantage.

The Admiral concludes by saying that it is utterly useless to waste time in talking. What must be done is to pick five or six men of action, who can direct operations and concentrate all the great energies of the country on obtaining the ultimate victory. To follow any other path will be to follow the road to ruin.

FOOD FOR PRISONERS

RUMOURED SHORTAGE OF FOOD IN GERMANY.

London, Nov. 1.

Travellers arriving from Scandinavia report that it is currently stated there that the British Government is now supplying the food for the British prisoners in Germany.

In official circles here it is denied that any such step has been taken by the Government.

The report has aroused interest among officials, who express the opinion that Germany might be making overtures through the State for some such arrangement. The belief is growing here that the shortage of food in Germany is becoming serious.

ALLIES MUST DO THEIR DUTY!

"ENGLAND IS TOO SLOW"

SAYS SERBIAN MINISTER

Paris, Oct. 30.

The Serbian Minister at Paris, M. Vestnich, who has just returned from Serbia and is familiar with the latest developments, sums up the position as follows:—

"Serbia asks favours from nobody. All she wants is fair play and that her Allies will do their full duty. France is doing this already, and doubtless England intends to do so likewise; but she is too slow, and unless aid comes at once it will be too late.

"I do not wish this to be interpreted as calling for help. It is not the nature of the people of Serbia to do this. Nor do I speak in a spirit of criticism. Speaking plainly, for the good of the Allies generally, I have often seen in English newspapers an intimation that it was the western front alone that was of real importance. Never was there a greater mistake. The real kernel and cause of the war was the Near Eastern question; thus England and her Allies are interested in what is transpiring there.

"Germany began to interest herself in the Orient sixty years ago. This war is the direct result of her determination to crush the Balkan nations, which, though small, are growing stronger and are threatening to become a stumbling block on the German road to the East.

"England is especially interested in the problem, and therefore ought to act more quickly. There is no doubt as to her loyalty, but speedier action is necessary. There is no use in sending troops after the German aims are accomplished.

"German has invaded Belgium, parts of France and Russia, and is now attacking the Near East. If she wins in this quarter she will dig herself in and fortify her lines as in Belgium, France and Russia. Then her game will be to sit back and consider her part as done. The Allies must not allow Germany to do this. The only way to defeat this plan is not to consider the West as all-important, but to fight wherever the Germans carry the fight."

WAR AND DISEASE

BRITISH ARMY'S CLEAN BILL OF HEALTH.

London, Oct. 30.

The famous British physician Sir James Crichton Browne, in a lecture before the Sanitary Inspectors' Association, said that with a larger army in the field than Britain had ever before maintained, the percentage of disease was lower than in times of peace. He added that although during the first year of the war a million men who had volunteered had been declared unfit for service, it was to be noted that these were men between the ages of 18 and 40 who had been born when imperfect sanitation and disease were prevalent and unchecked. Now the sanitation of Britain was unprecedented.

Sir James went on to say that the latest statistics from the western front showed that there had been 606 cases of typhoid. Of these, 109 had been inoculated and 497 had not been so treated. Out of a total of fifty deaths that occurred among these typhoid patients, only one had been inoculated, and none of the remaining forty-nine had been.

He compared these figures with the half million losses of killed and wounded in action, and said that the British expeditionary forces would have lost another half million of men if the deaths through disease had been as high in proportion as in the South African campaign, when the British lost 80,000 men through sickness.

HUN BALLOON DESTROYED

FRENCH AIRMAN'S DARING FEAT

Paris, Oct. 28.

A sergeant in the French Flying Corps whose initials are given as G.G. and who recently destroyed a German captive balloon, has written a description of the feat to his friends at Fontenoy Lecompte. He says:—

"It was the fourth time that we had attempted to attack the famous balloon, which was so well guarded that we were never able to get near it.

"On this occasion, as soon as I got over the Boche lines I saw the balloon emerging from a sea of clouds fifteen miles away. Being wary, I made a wide detour so as to get to windward and bear down upon it from its own lines, whence it would certainly not expect an attack.

"On the way we came upon a sentinel aeroplane which, being beneath us, appeared not to have seen us. I signalled to the pilot and he pushed the engine up to 1300 revolution a minute.

"We dropped vertically upon the enemy. My position was precarious, my body hanging right out of the machine. However I was able to work the gun, and at 350 yards I opened fire. Instantly the Boche swerved and tried to flee; but he got across us and I gave him a broadside, and he pitched downwards into the clouds.

"We were then within three miles of the balloon. We advanced sideways, jumping a cloud on the way. Still the balloon did not budge, and we got close up. Then I gave the signal and we swooped upon him. When we were 3,000 yards above I fired the second gun.

"All was over in twelve seconds. I leaned over the side and could see the balloon, half deflated, lying among the trees. The German batteries saw nothing of what had passed and did not open fire upon us. We waltzed home delirious with joy."

IN THE OFFICE CHAIR

"And in some corner of the hubbub coucht Make game of that which makes as much of thee."
OMAR KHAYYAM.

Lewis Waller.

By the death of Mr. Lewis Waller the British stage loses a personality which was very striking in the roles suited to his temperament. The minute and dissecting art of characterisation was never Mr. Waller's forte, and wisely he did not essay it; neither was he a sentimentalist of the Wilson Barrett type, but whenever an exponent was needed of the gay, gallant and adventurous character, with mantle trussed round his left arm and ready blade in hand—there was Mr. Waller. In Sir Herbert Tree's famous production of "King John," he played the Bastard Faulconbridge with that rough vigour, decision, and promptness which the character requires. Nature had created him a natural stage D'Artagnan; "Monsieur Beaucaire" was one of his successes, and withal he had an excellent idea of effect and costume. His personal popularity was great, and his decease will be lamented by many.

"Dephlogisicated" Air.

Another of the many German Balcons d'essai, which have been from time to time sent up to ascertain if there be any Peace currents in the upper air, is reported. It should soar high, for emphatically it is a "hot air" proposition. Its most salient feature is extreme modesty. Germany "only wants to be let alone," and will let those whom she has not had time yet, or the power, to murder and rob, alone on the following terms:—To be allowed to annex France up to the line of the Meuse; to be permitted to swallow Belgium and to leisurely digest it; to collar Courland and as indemnity a little ready cash, say, thirty thousand million marks!

Such, however, is the inveterate hatred and wicked malice of the Powers who are gentle Germany's foes, that it is only too probable that this olive branch will be repulsed with contumely. Germany seeks Peace and ensures it. It is always an attitude that looks well from a distance, especially to unreflecting and muddled-minded people, of whom there is no lack, and the bait may conceivably land a gudgeon or two.

"The Wicked Stand in Slippery Places."

By the removal of General von Laubensweig, German Military Governor of Brussels from his post, the great axiom that

"They love not poison that do poison need."

is again exemplified. Whether General von Laubensweig, General von Lancken, General von Bissing, or the Master Mind were collectively responsible for Miss Cavell's murder is uncertain. There can be no doubt of the Emperor's responsibility, for the matter was in debate for days before it was hurried to a close by a midnight assassination. A scapegoat, however, is needful, and General von Laubensweig is the choice. The bloody instrument of crime is hastily disowned in the face of horrid outcry. It is the old excuse,

"It is the curse of Kings to be attended

By slaves, who take their humour for a warrant

To break into the bloody house of life."

This fate, doubtless deserved one way or another, or the General could scarcely have held his rank so long, is the natural one of those who are in attendance or service of such Tyrants as Wilhelm II. There are always to be found officious persons to accept posts in which the dirtiest of dirty work must be done, and many such posts are fat ones, but they have always the danger of being cast disgracefully down, and the crime of which they are instruments being imputed to them by the principal.

San Martin's House.

Yet another example of the transitory nature of fame and the neglect of relics of great men in their life and immediately succeeding times.

A movement is on foot with the laudable object of preserving the remains of the house in which San Martin "El Gran Capitan" of South America, and especially of Argentina, was born. These are, however, no longer the times in which appropriations were light-heartedly passed for the erection of statues, the laying out of Plazas, and monumental extravagances of all kinds. While the project is favourably regarded, as is due to the memory of the Washington of the South, Government very wisely wish to enquire whether the remains of San Martin's ancestral home really exist. This is a facer, for the General has not been dead a Century yet, a mere trifle from History's point of view, and already there is at least a doubt as to the existence of his home! Great is the number of historical "facts," and the multitude of relics likewise which are taken on trust. Iconoclastic minds which look with dubiety on Shakespeare's House, and hold the Coronation Stone in suspicion, will heartily agree with this view and no doubt the attitude of the Treasury is perfectly right and proper even if it be a remarkable contrast to that of past years.

All Hallows.

The Day of the Dead, All Hallows, Hallow Eve, has long had a sinister reputation from a spiritual point of view. Coincident with the ceremonies of eating mashed potatoes out of pots in the dark, bobbing for apples and other venerable customs, are some very grim superstitions regarding the departed, the special license of the Unseen World on this night, Witches' unholy spells, and all manner of similar ideas of the waking nightmare order. Specially unpleasant, perhaps, is that which suggests that any person bold enough to stay in the Churchyard overnight may see the appearances of those fated to die in the ensuing year, and further, a choice collection of his old friends sitting on their respective graves. It must have been of such a grisly gathering that it has been related:

*"Some of the ghosts were short,
And some of the ghosts were tall,
But all sat there in a dismal row
A-top of the Churchyard Wall."*

If these beliefs had any foundation, the battlefields of France and Flanders would be no place of residence for many years.

TUCUMAN TO TAFI

The Minister informed the Deputation that the subject had been carefully investigated by experts, whose report is that the sum indicated is altogether insufficient for the purpose, and that the construction of such a road as would be acceptable to the Provincial Government would cost not less than $800,000.

ROSARIO NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Rosario, Nov. 2, 1915.

The Treacherous Parana.

The lesson of the River Paraná is one which is apt to be forgotten, and from time to time it has to be taught anew by a tragedy of the nature of that which marred this year's All Saints' Day at Alberdi. The lesson is that the river is a treacherous, deceitful snare, set temptingly with islands and something almost approaching the beautiful in its scenery, and sufficiently often innocent of offence to lull suspicion. But the snare is ever ready, and once the occasionally inevitable upset has occurred, there is every likelihood that the victims will be laid by the heels and sucked down to their doom by some undercurrent of irresistible power. That is the great lesson; the moral is that care must be incessantly urged on all who go out in small boats to obey the elementary rule "keep your seat." From all accounts, the infringement of this rule it was which led to the fatality about to be recorded.

Four young fellows went out in a boat to which a motor had been attached. The owner, Luis Balduzzi, was one, his brother Americo another, with Alfred J. Baer and Arthur Seddon, two firm friends. Seddon alone survives, and from accounts which he has given it would appear that the party left Alberdi about 4 o'clock and went upstream towards Paganini. There was a good deal of "sea" running owing to the strong wind which had prevailed, and the water slopped into the boat. Americo Balduzzi must have stood up to avoid the water, and lost his balance; Luis the only member of the party, as I understand, who could swim, seems to have gone in to try and rescue his brother; and the boat, by then hopelessly out of trim, must have capsized. The scene was that nasty piece of water known as the Valerio Whirlpool. Even a swimmer could hardly hope to come out of it alive; and if Luis did succeed in reaching his brother, it can only have been to lose what slender chance he otherwise might have had.

Seddon was saved by a double piece of good fortune. The boat did not sink; and owing to the weight of the motor fixed near the stern it assumed an upright position, the bow sticking out of the water. Seddon caught a rope, and managed to hold on, twisting some of the slack round his arm. It had all happened so suddenly that he saw nothing of his companions; in a moment or two, however, Baer came to the surface, and he was able to catch hold of his chum, and sustain him for a little while. He tried to get Baer to seize a rope, but failed, and gradually his strength gave out, with the roughness of the water, and the swirling eddy of the pool, and his grip relaxed. He remained for about three quarters of an hour clinging to the up-ended craft, and was then rescued by two fishermen. One of these men, Galicia, has a splendid record of life-saving on this same river.

Nothing has since been seen of the other three. The authorities sent a launch up river, but though Seddon accompanied the officials and indicated as nearly as possible the exact scene of the accident, search was vain. The whirlpool, only ten metres from the bank, had hidden its victims only too well.

The brothers Balduzzi were stepsons of Mr. F. Ponti, Inspector of Contracts, Talleres, F.C.C.A. Luis was employed with Pusterela and Co., and Americo with Heinzi and Co. Baer was with Herwig and Co.; and Seddon, whose parents live close by the American Church, is an employé of the London and Brazilian Bank here.

Unprofitable Throat-cutting.

A ghastly discovery was made near the Refineria last night. A watchman, of Spanish extraction, had drawn his pay, and was assaulted by some unknown scoundrel whose motive was evidently robbery. Whether to facilitate his search or to express his disappointment at its fruitlessness may never be known, but the unknown cut his victim's throat and fled. The body lay where it had fallen until half past eight this morning.

BAHIA BLANCA NEWS

(From Our Correspondent.)

October 31.

The Rural Show.

Sunday last being a fine day, large crowds of people were attracted to the Rural Show. A complete success is recorded, and the Show is said to have been much better than that of last year. The exhibits were numerous, and prices obtained at the sales very satisfactory. There was a little machinery there; the Rumeley Oil Pull had an engine on show, as had the Case Company. Messrs. Cooper and Co. had their usual stand for the display of their dip, and in addition a sheep shearing machine which was driven by a small motor engine. The sales were started on Monday morning and began with exhibit No. 9, a bull "Bismark" belonging to Señor Lopez Lecube. The champion and reserve champion were only shown, and not offered for sale. "Bismark" fetched $3000; "Hampton King 21" from the estancia "Dos Marias," was sold to Señor J. Arriga for $2600; "Proud Baron," the property of Senores C. Lopez, and from the same estancia, fetched $3500; "Master Challenger," from La Cochito, was sold for $4100; "Master Challenger 87th" went for $4300; "King Hec 1" for $2500; "Primico 130" $2450; "Captivator," $1500; "Sargento de Espartillar" was sold for $2500, and "Liberator de Espartillar" for $2150. For the first time on record Hereford bulls were shown here, and "Durley 13" (the champion) which was the property of Mr. Yoemans, of Norumbega, was sold pending the arrival of Dr. Newell, Juez de Instrucción, who has instituted inquiry.

The Strike.

Notwithstanding all the work of the agitators, the strike of the stevedores is fizzling out. The attempt to give the movement a broader basis by bringing in other groups of labourers has met with little encouragement, and the tendency to break things and throw pieces of rock is coming to be due to chagrin rather than to any hope that such arguments will succeed. No arrangement has been made, as there have been numbers of new hands only too glad of the chance to get the work which the old ones were scorning; and the last day or two have moreover seen some of these old hands anxious to come back. It is said that Pedro Casas, the ringleader of the agitation, against whom an order for imprisonment has been issued, has disappeared.

The Markets.

Maize has been a firm market, and prices are up some 10 to 15 cents. The supply has not been sufficient to meet the demands to fill prompt steamers; and it looks as though the back of the supply has been broken, though there are in several stations large stocks held by strong houses.

We have had the usual week-end storm and the weather is very favourable for the growing crops, which in many places show a considerable recovery from their condition of a fortnight or three weeks ago, and are rapidly making headway, whilst in the south-west of this district there are some really fine crops to be seen where the wheats are just coming out into ear. Maize is naturally getting a very fine start with these weekly rains and the cool, fresh temperature.

to Señor D. Fernandez for $2050. "Sheridans What's Wanted," the property of Messrs. F. and B. Duggan, went for $1350; "Oscars Herence 9th" from La Catalina, was sold for $2500, and "My Beauty 22" for $2000. Several others were sold at prices varying from $500 to $2000, in all 43 bulls were sold for $77,000, which made an average of almost $1800 each. On the second day the sale of the sheep took place, the champion Lincoln ram from the estancia Las Barrancas fetching $1800, the buyers being Senores Bossero and Zabaleta. All the shed rams put up for auction were sold, and the winner of the Southern Railway Cup went to Señor J. B. Baste for $1400. Prices were good and the bidding keen. Messrs. P. and G. Hughes of La Inca sold 7 bulls on the first day for $14,950, making an average of $2,136 per head.

The sales kept up until Friday, as they were delayed somewhat by the rain, and fell off a good deal towards the end. There was a very good demand for bulls and rams, but the bidding for the horses was especially poor and slow, and some very ordinary prices were obtained for those which were sold. During the sales the firm of auctioneers of Senores Bullrich and Co. sold animals to the value of $226,319, that of Senores Casares and Diehl $156,663, and that of Portillo $50,000, thus making a total of $432,982, without including the last day's sale when the fowls, pigs, etc., were put up for auction.

Library for the Inmates of the Prison.

The question of forming a Library for prison inmates was brought up some time ago, and is shortly to be an accomplished fact, as the inauguration is to take place on November 20. Over 800 volumes have already been collected, and several more have been promised. The book cases, benches, etc., are being made by the prisoners themselves. It is also requested that anyone intending giving books should do so before the inauguration.

The Court of Appeal.

A man named Martin Meneth was arrested some time ago for the murder of another man the name of Andres Frank in Coronel Dorrego. After the case had been heard and proved he was sentenced to seventeen and a half year's imprisonment. This was appealed against, and the prisoner was defended by the defender of the poor, Doctor Vazquez, who showed that the crime had been committed in personal defence. The Tribunal after hearing all the evidence, decided that this had been so, and ordered the prisoner to be immediately liberated, which was accordingly done.

Items in Brief.

An inspection trip is now being made by the Director-General of National Territories, Doctor I. R. Moreno, to the South, principally to investigate the working of the new motor-car service which has recently been started there, under the Government for the transport of passengers and cargo.

A quantity of jewellery which had been stolen from Señor Labourdette was found hidden on some waste land recently, and shortly afterwards two men named Sanchez and Score were arrested by the police and identified as those who had been to the former gentleman's house in order to try and sell him some goods. While one was doing this the other had gone around to the back of the house and entered the bedroom, taking all he could lay his hands on.

The 38th Rural Show is to be held at Olavarria on November 7, 8, and 9.

District Notes.

A sale is to be held next Wednesday in the yards of the Rural Society here at Villa Borden of 3000 head of cattle and 12,000 sheep. This is to start at 10 a.m.

It has now been finally decided to open a branch of the National Bank at Port Deseado.

IS PROPAGANDA NEEDED?

Comments on Dr. Dillon's Testimony

BRITAIN'S GREATEST PUBLICIST AND GERMAN METHODS

(Exclusive to THE HERALD)

Until comparatively recently, the name of Dr. Dillon was little known to the general public. The readers of the Fortnightly and the junior men of the Foreign Office knew him as a close student of European politics, specializing on the Near East, with occasional excursions into Russian and Italian affairs. Thanks to his Irish gift of endowing the most dry-as-dust politico-historical themes with a certain saltiness of phrase interspersed with occasional flashes of biting irony, Dr. Dillon made a name for himself as a writer, whilst his unquestionable discretion and profound knowledge of the subjects on which he wrote gave weight to his words far beyond that attaching to the ephemeral effusions of men who were outwardly perhaps more brilliant, without having the experience or the comprehension of the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph and contributor to the Fortnightly Review.

As so frequently happens in England, Dr. Dillon was not a prophet in his own country, generally speaking. The heads of the Foreign Office had however recognised his ability and discretion, making use of his services on more than one occasion when policy suggested the use of an unofficial agent. In Germany, and especially in the Wilhelmstrasse, his writings were taken far more seriously than ever they were in London. No less a person than Professor Hans Delbruck, one of the really great minds of Germany, was entrusted with the task of proving Dillon a marplot and a danger to the "peace" of Europe. In an article written in the Contemporary Review in 1911, Dr. Dillon said:—"When I read the smooth-tongued, plausible panegyrics on Germany's politics, which are served up to us here in England every year, and contrast them with the systematic aggressiveness which everybody with open ears and eyes hears and sees in Berlin, I behold Germany rise before me in the form of a cuttlefish, with many lasso-like arms, ever ready to seize their unsuspecting prey, and also ready, when itself is in danger, to shed an ink-like fluid which blackens the water and hinders effective pursuit." And to this Cassandra-like prophecy, Professor Hans Delbruck replied by saying that, "as long as Mr. Dillon is permitted to set forth in the Contemporary Review (be it remembered that Delbruck was writing his reply in the self-same journal) his fantastic views, engendered by hatred and suspicion, about German policy, all those will be working in vain who believe that peace between our nations can be secured by arbitration treaties."

To those who would go further into the subject of Dr. Dillon's right to speak with authority one can recommend the resume of the diplomatic correspondence immediately leading up to the Austro-Serbian war, and published by the Daily Telegraph under the title "A Scrap of Paper." It may however be taken for granted that Dr. Dillon's right thus to speak is now generally admitted both in governmental and in other spheres. Hence the deep significance of the remarks on affairs in the Balkans published by THE HERALD in its cable columns yesterday. Supported by Mr. Stephen Graham, a man who has made the Slav races his special study and who enjoys to a marked degree the confidence of the Russian government, he illustrates the old adage against wilful blindness. Ignorance and obstinacy have apparently been the real cause of the Balkan mismanagement by the diplomatic forces of the Allies. The latter have been misinformed, and if it is true that Dr. Dillon's warnings against the trend of Bulgaria's politics have been systematically censored and suppressed, the matter is worse than a blunder and becomes a crime.

Here in South America we are not blessed with any publicist of outstanding merit sufficiently well travelled and well informed to be able to give us a bird's eye view of the whole field of Teuton activity south of the isthmus. One must piece the story together as best one can, but even the amateurs who have taken the trouble to assemble these pieces are astonished and alarmed at the wide ramifications of the octopus. In Chile, in Brazil, and in Argentina, the German trader is entrenching himself in the sympathies of an illiterate population by the aid of cheap goods and free literature. The universal sympathy for the under dog is not yet Germany's portion; that will come after the war, and she is busily preparing to garner all the advantages that are to be derived from that very equivocal position. For the present she plays on the theme of her erstwhile solitary defiance of a world in arms, and everywhere among the lower orders and the lower-middle classes of South America, Germany is regarded as either a demi-god or as a martyr. It is ridiculous to say that it does not matter anyway what such people think; they may be semi-literate and somewhat brutish, but they form the population of the Argentine camp or the Brazilian fazendas, and they buy the goods that suit them. Possibly Germany finds them akin to her in mentality, certainly she appeals to them with far more force than the cause of the Allies can hope to do. All over the three republics the ceaseless spread of German news and views continues. Every branch of every German bank in the three republics is an official centre for the organization of pro-German effort, effort that in almost every case is largely helped by the fact that the manager is not only a trained business man but also a Vice-Consul. And the German Vice-Consul has far greater powers than his British opposite number who, frequently to his disgust, is often little better than a figure-head, lacking time or means to handle the trade problems that he sees successfully tackled by his rival.

Much might be done to alter this state of affairs, and a little is being done in the way of disseminating literature in quarters where it is likely to be read and pondered over. But still more can be achieved by striking the personal note, and, whenever an opening offers, pointing out the inherent fallacy of the German claim to sympathy. Germany may be getting the worst of the struggle now. One knows in fact that she is. But if, Hydra-headed, she loses her African possessions only to obtain a new commercial colony of far greater value in the southern hemisphere, in other words if the valuable South American trade falls into her hands, then in so far as Argentina, Brazil, and Chile are concerned, she has not fought in vain. The possibility of such a state of things may be remote, but it is none the less worth guarding against, and the whole war has been surely sufficient warrant for closing this article with the hackneyed but literally true adage, forewarned is forearmed.

CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH

New York, Oct. 28.

A telegram from Peabody, Massachusetts, reports that a terrible catastrophe has happened there to-day. At the local school while the building was full of pupils a boiler in the basement, for some unknown reason, exploded and produced a fire which spread rapidly. Although help was brought with the utmost possible speed fifty children are missing. Twenty charred bodies have been recovered from the debris.

THE MEAT TRADE

Supplies in Europe

IS THERE A SHORTAGE?

In some circles there has been an attempt recently to minimise the danger caused to the Argentine cattle industry by the artificial inflation of meat prices. It has already been pointed out that the situation is serious, that the British Government is determined to control the market, and that the only result of excessive prices will be to divert trade to other meat producing countries where rates are more favourable to the European buyer.

How effectively the situation has been handled by the British authorities is clearly indicated in a recent issue of the Pastoralists' Review, which combats the assertion that a shortage in Britain will compel the purchase of large supplies. As a matter of fact, from the information published, it would appear that such substantial reserves exist that Britain can well afford to wait and to continue the policy of placing pressure on the market.

The London correspondent of the journal referred to says that prices in England are on the down-grade. This is to be accounted for, first by the extreme congestion in the public Cold Stores, all of which in London, Liverpool and elsewhere are full up; and secondly owing to the fact that the alleged meat shortage is visionary. Freight is the only thing that has been short.

Besides the stock of frozen meat, much canned meat is held by the Government, and the one is not without influence on the other.

The whole situation is one of distinct interest, and its many phases cannot be better gleaned than from the following extracts from the article by the Pastoralist Review's correspondent:—

One of those new supplies of frozen meat which have already given signs of becoming a permanent resource for the trade is the import from Brazil. The later consignments of the meat have shown a distinct improvement in condition on arrival on the market here, and give evidence that the exporters are learning the best methods quickly, and are overcoming the difficulties which mainly lie in the transport to Santos for shipment, from Sao Paulo.

During the past six months about 11,000 carcasses of frozen beef have arrived at English ports from Durban.

Some Chilean lambs were on offer at Smithfield during the week ended July 31, the prices at which they changed hands being from 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d. per stone.

During the last week of July 10,800 quarters of frozen beef reached the London market from Vestey's works at Madagascar, via France. The beef which was marketed by W. and R. Fletcher Ltd., was not of particularly fine quality, and was sold at 4s. 4d. per stone for hinds and 3s. 4d. for forequarters.

From these statements, it will be seen that the meat exporting area is a constantly increasing one.

The position in England is clearly shown in the reports of the big London firms:—

Gilbert Anderson and Co. (Stores Full), August 5:—"The greater Government releases during the last week or two are probably due to the congested state of the stores on this side. Prices have an easier tendency, but sellers are meeting the market well, and clearance is made on limited demand."

Messrs. Thomas Borthwick and Sons Limited (Trade Dull), August 5:—"Trade is not so active, the public apparently keeping off meat as much as possible, besides which the market is now feeling the competition of home supplies. Plenty of Scotch lambs are arriving, and are making 5s. 8d. to 6s. per stone, compared with 5s. 8d. for New Zealand. We have received some pigs from Waitara; these have found a ready market at 7½d. per lb., the export from Holland being prohibited.

C. C. and D. Co. Limited (The Course of the Market), July 8:—"The frozen meat market is now almost completely an agency for the disposal of Government property, and it is to be remarked that throughout the past month prices have been practically stationary. Demand is accommodating itself to the reduced supplies available for the general public, without the shortage being acutely felt in any particular direction, and although pessimists are to be found in the meat market, as elsewhere, it is not without significance that home-grown meat is actually cheaper than was the case a month ago. English ewes have slipped back to 7d. to 7½d. per lb., say, the same price as the best New Zealand mutton. English wethers can be bought round about 8¼d. per lb."

Compañía Sansinena (Chilled Beef), August 5:—"Chilled beef shipments, which have not been averaging over 20,000 quarters a week lately, may show a slightly dearer tendency within the next week or two on account of the week after next being due to show no arrivals, owing to freight shortage. This may be made up to some extent by States consignments, which are amounting to about 20,000 quarters a week just now. The top price for chilled hinds at present is 8½d."

All this, be it noted, appeared during the early days of the rise in Argentine prices. Since that time, the British Government has still further utilised the resources of other markets.

The position in France is stated thus:—

The new cattle and sheep census just taken in France shows a total on July 1 of 12,286,849 head of cattle, compared with a total of 13,120,649 head on December 31, 1914. Taking into account the districts invaded by the enemy, the consumption for the last six months of the war has amounted to 833,000 head, or a little over 6 per cent of the total. The total number of sheep on July 1 was 12,483,189, a decrease of 1,321,121, or about 10 per cent. In 1840 France possessed 32 million sheep.

ROSARIO STRIKE FAILS

NO CONCESSIONS TO THE MEN.

There has been a complete break up of the strike in Rosario. According to semi-official statements the strikers have had no concessions made to them. Three thousand workmen were on strike at the docks alone, chiefly loaders of the country's produce.

So far as the carters were concerned, they paid no attention to the trouble, and with their aid and the help of a body of motor car drivers, cargoes were shipped normally. The strike is a politically engineered affair, and the police themselves were in sympathy with the movement.

Señor Gard, the Sub-prefect of the port, has been eulogised for his energetic measures, which have completely broken up all the plans of the strikers, and even the police have been powerless to prevent work being done in a peaceful manner!! Several arrests were made, but the delinquents were at once set at liberty!

This action on the part of the police was necessary, on account of the endeavours of the strikers to interfere with the tramway traffic, but when the officials of the Company placed armed men on each car, no further interference with the natural day's business occurred.

Thus reads the semi-official statement.

The matter does not end at this point, because strong measures are to be taken and a close enquiry held, into the official action or rather non-action.

The matter of summary arrest and unauthorised release of strikers has given official personages a strong lever to use in future proceedings.

PATRIOTIC FUNDS

BRITISH PATRIOTIC COMMITTEE

The Committee desire to call special attention to the Officers' Families Fund. This Fund renders immediate financial assistance to the widows of officers, assists in the maintenance and education of orphans of officers, and thus reaches a most deserving class which does not benefit by other Funds.

Lady Hope, the Hon. Secretary, in acknowledging a recent remittance from the Committee, writes:—

I am away for three weeks' holiday, and your letter of 24th August enclosing draft of £500, the magnificent donation of the British Patriotic Committee in the Argentine Republic, has been sent on to me. The official receipt has, no doubt, been already sent, and Lady Lansdowne will write in due course, but I must give myself the pleasure of writing too, to tell you how warmly the sympathy of the British community in the Argentine, so generously expressed, is appreciated by the Committee of the Officers' Families Fund. Perhaps nobody, as an individual, is more aware than I am of the grief and anxiety, often accentuated by acute financial difficulty, which the war has brought to the families of our gallant officers, and it is a real happiness to learn through you of the understanding sympathy felt with these troubles by our compatriots in the Argentine.

I am,
Yours very truly,
(Signed) CONSTANCE HOPE.

And Lady Lansdowne, the President, writes:—

You must allow me to add to our official acknowledgment a few words of personal thanks for the £500 just received from your Committee. You have been most generous to us, and your kind support gives us great encouragement.

Believe me,
Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) MAUD LANSDOWNE.

The Committee hope to be enabled to send a donation of £1000 to this Fund for Christmas and appeal to subscribers to earmark their donations accordingly.

It has also been decided to receive subscriptions for the Miss Cavell Memorial. Funds received for this purpose will be devoted to the object already initiated, the foundation of a permanent Cavell bed in the British Hospital.

KNITTING FOR SOLDIERS

"A.K."—Our Bahia Blanca correspondent writes:—

"In reply to your request for the names of the Ladies committee for supplying wool for the making of clothing for the troops, the president of the Belgium committee is the wife of Sr. Epstein, manager for Messrs. L. Dreyfus and Co. in Bahia Blanca. For the French committee applications should be made either to 'The French Patriotic Committee' or the president of this body who is Sr. Dumortier, Avenida Alem 460, Bahia Blanca."

WOOL FOR THE WINTER

HOW TO AID BRITAIN'S SOLDIERS

The British Society are arranging to send the socks, mufflers, etc., which have already been received at the offices of the Society, by the s.s. Araguaya, sailing on November 5. These will be sent to the "Queen Alexandra Field Force Fund," who will attend to the distribution. Therefore those who wish to give any further comforts for the soldiers should, in order to get them away by the "Araguaya," deliver them at the offices of the British Society not later than November 3.

The British Society also have much pleasure in announcing that they have made very favourable arrangements with a local woollen factory for the supply of a good grade of "Grey Knitting Wool," at the price of $6.50 per kilo. Anyone who wishes to make comforts for the soldiers can obtain this wool at cost price by applying at the offices of the British Society.

The British Society have also made arrangements with a Buenos Aires manufacturer to supply and make up parcels of $5 and $10 respectively. The $5 package contains:—

- 1 double-breasted woollen vest.
- 4 pairs woollen socks.
- 1 pair woollen gloves.
- 1 pair woollen mittens.

The $10 package contains:—

- 1 flannel muffler or sweater.
- 1 double-breasted woollen vest.
- 4 pairs woollen socks.
- 1 pair woollen gloves.
- 1 pair woollen mittens.

It will be noted that the $10 package contains the important addition of a very serviceable muffler or sweater.

The sample packages may be seen at the offices of Mr. Watson, 536 Cangallo.

Now that winter is coming on in Europe, and Christmas approaching, no doubt the above arrangements will be fully appreciated.

I should esteem it a great favour if you would kindly publish the above in your valuable paper for the satisfaction of the donors who are mostly workmen earning very reduced wages, but who have shown a great deal of patriotism by responding so generously to the call for funds to alleviate the sufferings of their compatriots at the front.—Yours etc.,

"Dear Sir,—I write to acknowledge receipt of and to thank my friends in Argentina most warmly for the kind remembrances and the box of cigarettes.

"We who have been in Argentina have most of us become accustomed to smoking pure tobacco, and find Virginia and Egyptian cigarettes very tasteless afterwards, so that the present in itself is most acceptable. The knowledge that one is remembered by one's friend is also very gratifying, and I hope that those concerned may learn how very much their kindness is appreciated.—Yours faithfully,

AEROPLANE NO. 2

BRITISH SOCIETY'S APPEAL.

The British Society gratefully acknowledges subscriptions to "Aeroplane River Plate No." as per note herewith.

For a "Fighting Aeroplane" similar to the one already presented the amount of $26,000 is required and of this $14,662 has been subscribed.

The committee earnestly appeals to the generosity and patriotism of the British Community to subscribe the balance as quickly as possible.

The sooner the amount is subscribed the quicker will the Aeroplane get into service.

Every unit counts, and whilst the Society will always be pleased to receive donations however small, it would nevertheless appreciate very much, a few important subscriptions from the wealthy Britons in this country.

In view of the very definite support given by Mr. Herbert Gibson, and the information published in the press, (amongst other items of news appears the decision to send a fleet of Aeroplanes over Germany) it becomes necessary to act quickly, and the Committee desires to intimate that it is not proposed to make an appeal for subscriptions to a third Aeroplane, consequently all those who have not already subscribed should do so promptly, so that when the lists are complete, they will have no regrets.

Clubs, business houses, and others, who have not already received subscription lists, can obtain them from Mr. W. Watson, 536 Cangallo, to whom all subscriptions should be forwarded.

HERO OF FESTUBERT

Bravery of Anglo-Argentine Soldier

AN UNRECORDED ACT OF COURAGE

An interesting communication which is reproduced "hereunder" as the Bosches say, comes piping hot from the firing line and gives some information about the deadly action of Festubert from the ground level; not as in the official despatch or in the carefully collated opinions of conscientious correspondents trying to give the public as much truth as the Censor will let them, but the little bit of intense interest in front of an individual soldier which is to him, the Battle of Festubert. The letter with that delightful vagueness of locality which smacks so strongly of present-day military matters is dated in a large way from "Ireland" (take your choice of locality, the land is before you), and the Regiment is given also "2nd King Edward's Horse."

"Dear Sir," he says, "I write you knowin how keen THE HERALD is to hear of any Argentine volunteer at the front. As you know, many acts of heroism performed by individual soldiers are not observed by any officer and, consequently never set down among the great deeds of the war. What I am about to relate was done by one of our boys who may or may not be known to you, but there are many who know and are fond of him.

"It occurred at the action of Festubert. On May 24, C Squadron of 2 King Edward's Horse were in the first line of trenches. At 4 p.m. the enemy opened a severe and violent shell fire against our trenches. It was our baptism of fire and seemed truly awful. The men in general showed wonderful pluck, no fear at all and standing the ordeal well and, an ordeal it is too, for however lion hearted a man may be, he is not human, if being heavily shelled in a trench for the first time, and unable to reply does not try his nerve.

One of the first casualties was a trooper named Douty. He was badly wounded and had a poor chance of life unless immediately removed to the dressing station. None of the wounded had been moved however, and it seemed certain death to anyone who should dare to venture out of the trench shelter. Seeing however that Douty's condition was desperate and fast becoming worse, and that immediate medical assistance was essential, Trooper Baldock went to his Troop Commander and asked permission to attempt to get the man away. The officer shook hands with him and wished him luck (I was told this afterwards.) He got the man out of the trench and managed to convey him half a mile when he reached further assistance and got Douty put on a stretcher.

From the moment he left the trench to the time he got help, about an hour, he was continually under not only heavy shell fire from field guns, but machine gun fire as well, and how he got through alive is a marvel to me. There was no communication trench, and he had to cross the open in full view of the enemy trenches and snipers. The bullets kicked the dirt up all round him. At one time when the shelling was most terrible, explosions, flashes and flying earth, he put his man down in the shelter of a shell hole and went to a ruined cottage for some water for him. The saddest thing was that he could not get Douty to the dressing station alive after all.

He died at "Suicides' Corner," there were four of them carrying him, and they left the poor fellow with the doctor.

"By the time Baldock got back to the trench, it was dark, the shelling had diminished, and the wounded could be removed more safely. Later Baldock helped Sergeant Armstrong to the dressing station. He had a shrapnel wound in the leg and could not walk without assistance. Baldock helped him into safety, risking his life a second time. Nobody seems to have noticed these heroic acts, and Baldock himself never mentioned them. If you wonder how I know all this, I was in the reserve trenches at the time and saw the whole thing through glasses; besides Armstrong told me afterwards how splendidly Baldock stuck to him through all danger. Baldock gave a very meagre outline afterwards; he didn't know I had seen most of it. Again I would say that many men have deserved praise and distinction but, are not lucky enough to be seen by someone of importance. I say Baldock deserves reward, and I should like Argentines to know that they may be proud of their sons and brothers who are fighting, and especially Baldock's relatives.

"I believe he has been wounded since.

"Ever yours truly,

F. G. CRUE."

Lance Corporal Walter John Buck Rae, whose photograph is reproduced is a son of Mr. W. Rae, of Bahia Blanca. He left the southern port to volunteer, and enlisted in No. 3 company, 7th Battalion of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders.

Lance Corporal Buck was in France for some time, and last week news was received that he had been wounded. No details were available until a cablegram was received on Tuesday from his brother, who is also a volunteer, stating that the Lance Corporal had been seriously wounded in the neck, and had been sent to hospital at Birmingham, where he is now doing well.

Nurse Cavell; Martyr

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL

(By Our Special Representative).

Since the Sunday morning in May, 1910, when St. John's Church was filled with British people mourning their great Sovereign, "Edward the Peacemaker," who had just passed away, no such impressive service has been held in what is now, the Pro-Cathedral Church, as that of October 28, commemorating the valiant end of the martyred nurse, Miss Cavell. There was a large congregation, the building being nearly full. Many ladies were there, as was natural, both from sympathy with their heroic sister, foully done to death by the soulless German butchers, and from the fact that the Women's Association had just finished its annual conference in the adjoining hall. But there were also a very large number of men who had taken the time from their business avocations to come and offer a final tribute of honour to unsurpassable courage and murdered innocence, and by their presence to tacitly affirm the determination of all Britons worthy of the name to persevere until the end, when these things shall be finished and avenged.

The clergy present included the Rev. Canon Stevenson, the Rev. Mr. Somerville, the Rev. Mr. H. Morrey Jones, the Rev. H. Westby Brady, and the Rev. J. Y. Mills. There were present in the Church, among others, H.B.M. Minister, Sir Reginald Tower, the Consul-General, Mr. H. G. Mackie; the Rev. Dr. Fleming, the Rev. Dr. McLaughlin, Mr. Chevallier Boutell, and many other well-known gentlemen. The order of Service was: Organ Voluntary; Scripture Sentences; Psalm 90; Lesson; Hymn 499; Address; Hymn 437; Prayer; the Benediction.

The Rev. Mr. Somerville delivered an address. In view of its dramatic appeal, it is given in the words of the preacher:—

REV. F. H. SOMERVILLE'S SERMON.

"My Brethren,

We are gathered together in the Anglican Pro-Cathedral of this city for a Memorial Service for Nurse Cavell, shot by the Germans in Belgium. We are not permitted to stand with bared head as the coffin passes on a gun carriage, escorted by soldiers with arms reversed to the sound of muffled drums. We are not permitted to drop a flower upon her coffin and thank God, in the presence of that shot-riddled body, that He has given to our native land such brave, self-denying women. Even the worshippers at St. Paul's Cathedral to-morrow will be unable to pay such a tribute, for that precious body is withheld by a ruthless foe. Why we cannot say.

We forbear to speak of the policy of "Frightfulness," adopted by our enemies, for we need here to use restrained terms, and that is almost impossible. Sufficient to say that this latest manifestation is of a piece with the policy we have learned to expect from our foe, and we suppose he is in nowise ashamed of it.

When one has heard it declared that, rather than permit one's womenfolk to fall into such hands it were better to shoot them, we judge of some of the terrors this noble woman braved. She saw round about her the evidence of such frightfulness, and yet heroically she held on her way, and did her duty. Her death will go down to posterity as one of the outstanding features of bravery in a war which has supplied many such examples. Her's was a woman's nature with all a woman's shrinking from such deeds. It has been said that an offertory is an innovation in a Memorial Service, but we deemed it just what this noble practical woman would have desired. It will be solemnly devoted towards supplying another to fill the gap, and we offer no apology.

Nurse Cavell has died, but in her death she will accomplish more than in her life. It is always so; such is the lesson of the life of Our Lord.
A seed that falls into the ground and dies does not abide alone, and the God of Nature is the God of Humanity. Hundreds of men, who perhaps would never have devoted themselves to the profession of arms, will become soldiers. Hundreds of women will be stirred to new deeds of self sacrifice. And the God of Humanity is the God of Grace. May we not hope that in the presence of this noble self-sacrificing woman's death, our enemy may be impressed and learn a lesson which will help to heal the sorrows of the world?

We must thank the Americans of this city for their sympathy expressed by their Pastor, Dr. McLaughlin.
He has spoken out, bravely and nobly, even though he might have to thereby disassociate himself from others.

The war is touching us not alone in the death of such as Nurse Cavell. Our friends here during the last month have lost loved ones and we begin to feel also the far-reaching issues of this war are concealed from us. Surely it is a time when we should give ourselves to prayer to Almighty God. Each Thursday at this hour, a Service of Intercession is held here for those engaged in the war—our Rulers, our Soldiers, our Chaplains, our Doctors, Nurses, and the sufferers. May we not here resolve that it shall be better attended? Those doing our country's service, with whom we sympathise, and who we feel are serving for us, need and look for our prayers.

THE FUNERAL MARCH.

The Service was deeply impressive throughout, and those who arrived late entered in dead silence. When the Benediction had been pronounced, into the interval of silence and waiting stole the first faint walling bars of Chopin's "Funeral March of a Hero," muted and muffled as if by great distance, and through many folds of crape. It gripped the heart and the throat. During the sorrowful melody and the crescendo of triumph that follows, the congregation stood as if turned to stone, and so, until the last notes had sobbed away into silence.
There was again a brief interval, and once more, but this time, with a martial crash of sound that suggested, if it did not mean, the trumpets of an avenging Host, the organ pealed at its full power, "God Save the King," and, on that high note of loyalty and resolve, the Service ended. Assuredly it was a great hour. The offertory realised $268.60.

MURDER OF MISS CAVELL

A READER'S THANKS TO DR.
McLAUGHLIN.

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—It is good to know that at least one neutral is not afraid to protest in vigorous and indignant terms against the cowardly murder of Miss Cavell.

Dr. McLaughlin's sermon should be printed in German, so that some of these inhuman savages might read, learn and mark what honest men think of them.

BOYCOTT THE HUNS!

Sir,—Having read with great interest of the proposed memorial tablet to perpetuate the memory of Nurse Cavell, in Tuesday's issue of your paper, may I suggest that although the above proposition would have the desired effect of putting on record Nurse
Cavell's heroism and German barbarism, a far more effective and stringent method be adopted, viz., that all firms, especially British and those representative of the Allies, should show their repugnance and abhor-rence of the fiendish atrocities being perpetrated by the Germans, by dismissing without exception and consideration any German who may figure on their staff, and also cancel any existing orders with German business houses, and in future boycott these firms.

I would suggest that a list be prepared and published, of all firms who are willing to adopt this policy and thereby help to guard against (if possible?) similar atrocities in future.
This would put on record in a most convincing way their utter disapproval of the methods, etc., of this so-called Christian and cultured nation.

Yours, etc.

A water-colour drawing by Mr. A.

window at Mitchell's Book Store, days. It represents the martyred Nurse, Miss Cavell, on the morning of her execution, and has attracted a good deal of attention, that from Ger-

The Nurse is represented wearing a "British Warm" with the nursing arm-let over it.

The painting is, THE HERALD is in-Spring Tennis Tournament.

Cordoba Athletic Club.

Quite a number of matches were played in the Spring Tennis Tournament at the Cordoba Athletic Club Courts, on Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning. In the Mixed Doubles Mrs. Walters and Mr. G. E.
Morton were successful in their match against Miss Gladys Symonds and Mr.
P. P. Schultz 6-3, 7-5. Messrs. Morton and Zimmer defeated Messrs. Cochrane and McCulloch in the Men's Doubles, 6-2 and 6-1. Two matches were played in the Men's Singles, Mr.
Schultz beating Mr. Morton in a very exciting two in three encounter as follows:—1-6, 6-1, 6-4. Mr. T. G. Ferguson defeated Mr. Harry McCulloch,
6-0, 6-3, 6-4.

English Club Billiard Handicap.

The handicapping of the players engaged in the billiard handicap at the English Club is working out excellently, and the Committee are to be congratulated on their good judgment.
The following ties have been played off during the past week:—Fowler defeated Schultz 150-135, Harris Smith beat Davis 150-123, and Schrivener beat Cochrane 150-132.

Attempted Murder and Suicide.

Last Tuesday night the residents in the vicinity of Pueyrredon No. 50, were startled by hearing five shots ring out on the night air. The police arriving on the scene, discovered Jose
Maria Camera, a tram-car conductor, and a woman named Nicolasa Ace-vedo, both suffering from pistol wounds. Camera, who is a married man, was infatuated with the woman, and when she refused his advances he drew his revolver and shot her four times, and with the fifth bullet he shot himself through the head. Both were removed to the San Roque Hospital, where little hope is entertained of the recovery of either.

Inter-Provincial Football Match.

Estudiantes of Buenos Aires v.

Cordoba.

Notwithstanding the threatening weather between 4,000 and 5,000 spectators were present at the Cordoba
Athletic field, when Referee Doctor
Mas (of Buenos Aires) started the Inter-Provincial football match between the Estudiantes team of Buenos Aires, led by that famous international footballer, Max Susan, and the combined Cordoba team. The teams lined up as follows:—

Estudiantes (Buenos Aires).—M.
Croce, A. Paulowsky, José Susan, M.
Madero, Max Susan, A. Aenz, L. C.
Bownas, J. M. de la Barrera, Leonardi,
A. Paulowsky, and A. Ochandio. Linesman, R. Moroni.

Cordoba Combined Team.—A. Gar-garo (University), M. Unamunzaga (Belgrano) (capt.), P. Andrade (Central Cordoba), M. Flores (University),
L. Salvatelli (Central Cordoba), A.
Lutri (Belgrano), M. Martinez (Central Cordoba), A. Figueroa (Belgrano),
J. Lazcano (Belgrano), M. Chaves and
P. Alberti (Central Cordoba).

Linesman, Robert Barnes.
The visitors won the toss and chose the goal facing west. Lazcano started the "ball rolling," but the ball going out of bounds, the B. A. team took up the offensive, and soon gave Gargaró a chance to save, which he did in admirable style from a hard shot from Max Susan. The play during the first half was very even; both goalkeepers were called upon several times to defend their posts, and both Croce and Gargaró were at their best, no goals being scored in the first period. After the interval both teams played a spirited game, and Lazcano, after some very pretty passing, nearly scored a goal, the ball striking the post. After some 15 minutes' play, Salvatelli advanced the ball toward the B. A. goal, passing to Figueroa, who in turn passed the ball to Alberti, the latter centring perfectly, gave the Intendente Municipal.

The Senate has not agreed to the appointment of Sr. Jerez as Intendente Municipal. This decision has met with general disapproval among people of all political parties. Sr. Jerez is esteemed for his good work and disinterested regard for public welfare during the past year. The town has progressed very much, and there are few Intendentes who have worked for the improvement of the community like this gentleman. The poor people have benefited much. He has cheapened the milk and the meat; also the bread—the principal food—so that any one can buy these commodities. Tonight a big protest meeting will be held, and to-morrow night the people will hold in Sr. Jerez's honour, a banquet such as has never been given in Parana. The invitations to the banquet are signed by the following well-known citizens of Parana: Messrs. N.
Guillem, W. Mackinon, the Manager of the London and River Plate Bank,
Solomonoff, Magasanik, Cantalicio
Diaz, and many others. Also it is rumoured that Mr. W. Mackinon will be elected Concejal Municipal.

The Society, "Hermanas de los Pobres" gave a performance for the benefit of the poor last Sunday with big success.

The Ex-Intendente's Banquet.

The banquet offered last night in the Hotel Gransac in the honour of Sr. Jerez, ex-Intendente of Parana, was a success. There were present many people belonging to local society, and of all shades of political opinion. Mr. Guillem, the manager of Huni and Wormser, Ltd., expressed to Sr. Jerez, the sympathy and appreciation of those present. Mr. Guillem's speech was loudly applauded. He was brief, but he eulogised admirably the qualities of Sr. Jerez, who suitably replied. After this banquet and next Sunday's meeting, the Senate will see that this is not a political question, but only that the people sympathise with the work of the ex-Intendente, and wants Sr. Jerez back in office because he is the right man in the right place.

arrived on Sunday morning, by a coman automobile ride was enjoyed as far made to the Cordoba Athletic Club, where the field was inspected, then breakfast was indulged in at the San Martin Hotel. After the match the teams were treated to a banquet, and the visitors returned to Buenos Aires on the night train. The game was a credit to all concerned, not an unpleasant incident marring the day's sport, and was one of the cleanest games the writer has ever had the pleasure of witnessing. Great preparations are being made for the match next Sunday, when the strong Uruguayan team will visit Cordoba to try conclusions with the combined Cordoba team. The match will take place at the picturesque grounds of the Cordoba Athletic Club in General of spectators will be present.

THE MEXICAN MUDDLE

MURDER; STARVATION; ROBBERY

APPALLING CONDITIONS IN THE REPUBLIC

"There is liberty in Mexico to-day for a possible 150,000 so-called revolutionists," said Mr. D. B. Richardson, manager of the Studebaker Automobile Co. in South America, who has recently returned from Mexico, when interviewed by a HERALD representative on October 29.

"Robbery, assassination and destruction are everywhere. Kindness in Mexico is rewarded by unfaithfulness, appreciation is unknown, politeness a veneer; force alone controls."

He stated that Mexican history is a record of ambitious leaders, where an iron dictator maintained peace for thirty years and sustained an era of artificial prosperity for one-fifth, and of total ignorance, slavery and depravity for four-fifths of his countrymen.

He considered that the civilised world's contribution at that time toward the material welfare of that unhappy country is now being rapidly destroyed.

"Five years ago, November marked the beginning of the process. The emblem of democracy, fraternity and liberty carried by all revolutionists is a hollow mockery. Several generations of powerful control, forced education and greater opportunity might prepare the lowly peon (constituting 80 per cent. of the race) for self-government," he remarked.

"A year ago," Mr. Richardson went on to state, "marked the beginning of serious times for Mexico City, the beautiful capital of the nation. To-day it is starving, unable to assist itself or receive assistance from without any material extent."

"The country is practically overrun by bands masquerading as revolutionists who claim to-day to be Carranzistas, to-morrow Villistas, later Zapatistas, or any other 'ista' in whose section of the country they may find themselves. With the exception of the main armies composing the nucleus of one faction or the other, there is practically no control over these so-called soldiers. Insubordination is so prevalent in the larger bodies of soldiers as to make their presence a menace to peaceful citizens."

"General Venustiano Carranza fled from Mexico City upon the approach of Francisco Villa and his army last November, after the so-called convention, which had been held in Aguas Calientes, broke up in a row. General Villa entered Mexico City at that time with about 40,000 men, mostly border rangers and northern men, together with some 10,000 Zapatistas who joined him."

"Gen. Gutierrez was President of the Convention in Aguas Calientes previous to its suspension in that city, and upon the entry of the Villistas and Zapatistas in Mexico City the Convention was reconvened in the halls of Congress of the nation, General Gutierrez remaining as president. Carranza moved his capital to Veracruz, where up to the latest reports he personally resides."

"Early in January the President of the Convention in Mexico City, Gen. Gutierrez, separated himself and about 5,000 men from the Villista and Zapatista factions whom at that time he presided over, and went north, taking with him as well some 10 million pesos of Villa money, thus splitting up that faction. Gen. Roque Gonzalez Garza was immediately named by the Convention to assume the presidency of this faction, and only praise should be extended him for his earnest efforts towards establishing peace and order. He gained the entire approval of foreigners and the better-thinking Mexicans by his actions."

"His administration, however, could endure but a short time, as unfortunately this well-intentioned man was surrounded by an element with which he could not cope single-handed."

"At one time a strenuous effort was made by Gen. Barona and his following, who were quartered in the Hotel Iturbide, to assassinate President Gonzalez Garza. After a drunken carousal in a dance hall, Gen. Barona with his men rode at 4 a.m. to the Hotel Lascaraiso, where the President was sleeping, and attacked it with vigour. A lively fight followed, in which President Gonzalez Garza valiantly took part, rifle in hand. Only three or four of the defenders were killed, whereas some forty of the attackers met this fate. Their defeat was so decisive that they made a hasty exit from the city, retiring to the hills."

"Not long after, the Convention, controlled by unworthy men, replaced President Gonzalez Garza by General Lagos Chazaro, who continued to act as President of the Convention in Mexico City until the most recent departure of his faction to the hills."

The financial situation in Mexico, according to Mr. Richardson, cannot be worse. All money, either coin or bank bills, which formerly circulated, has been withdrawn and hoarded. The only money which is in circulation is the printed issues of one faction or the other. There are scores of different kinds of currency issued in various parts of the country by one chief or the other, without reserve at the back of it, and forced into circulation by the presence of the military desiring its circulation.

Upon a change of Government, that is to say, the retiring of one faction and the entrance of another into a section, the money left behind in the hands of the public by the retiring faction becomes useless. New paper is then distributed for circulation by the temporarily victorious force. Mexico City has changed hands six times during the past year, each time with increasing difficulties in this particular, as the amount of money printed has reached hundreds and hundreds of millions.

"Transportation," continued Mr. Richardson, "does not exist, except where military authorities choose to use the rolling stock still undestroyed for that purpose. Trains are run for weeks at a time in some section of the country; others run only at rare intervals owing to the impossibility of obtaining fuel or to the destruction of the permanent way."

"For six months Mexico City has been practically isolated from the world. The Carranzistas carried off all available rolling stock on hand belonging to several railroads. Upon the retirement of the Villistas, early in the spring, they took with them all they had brought down plus all which they could confiscate from the Zapatista faction, which had brought it from the State of Morelos and other States to the south of the capital."

"There has been no opportunity to import anything into Mexico City since before the occupation of Veracruz by the American troops. A few cars of merchandise did reach Mexico City last February, when it was in the control of General Obregon, in command of the army of the Carranzista faction. This merchandise was not, however, of any special use to the public at that time. As all transportation in and out of the city had ceased to exist in every other direction, the situation rapidly became serious."

"What has been said in reference to importation applies equally well to exportation. It is known that some shipments were made to the United States from Mexico City via Veracruz. These shipments consisted of hides which had been purchased at a ridiculously low figure in Mexican money and were permitted to pass into the United States through Veracruz by the Carranzistas in order that the enormous export duty payable in Mexican gold coin might be realised, as well as the very high freight rates charged, not to mention "graft" on the part of officials for permitting them to pass over the railroad at all. The way-bills for such freight shipments

LURED TO DESTRUCTION

GERMANY'S IMMINENT FATE

EXPLAINED BY DR. BARROETAVEÑA

(HERALD Special Interview)

Dr. Francisco A. Barroetaveña, the noted Argentine author, who recently created a sensation with his book, "Alemania Contra el Mundo," does not doubt for a moment that the Allies fortitude and steady advance in the Balkans, and Russia's formidable defence, will ultimately spell victory.

In an interview with a HERALD representative, on October 29, he said: "The sudden concentrated attack upon Serbia, by the Central Powers has done a great deal in lending to appearances a favourable colour to their efforts but this is only of temporary duration, because the Germanic forces will be unable to sustain superiority in the Balkans for any length of time."

"Italy has important interests invested in the Balkans and it will not be long before she will be able to despatch a large army to aid Serbia, while Greece and Rumania are leaning strongly toward the Allies and are sometimes shown by one military faction or the other in order to demonstrate to investigators that their railroads are doing business. The real situation is easily ascertained."

"From the port of Veracruz the Carranzista faction has shipped enormous quantities of foodstuffs, such as beans, corn, cattle, etc., to the United States in order to obtain a much greater profit and thus establish a credit in that country for purchasing arms and ammunition. No more deplorable situation could be met with anywhere."

Mr. Richardson then stated that the mail service into Mexico City has been almost entirely non-existent since the 29th day of January last. Upon an urgent appeal made by all foreigners in that city to Gen. Carranza in Veracruz to permit mail to come through during February, while his forces were in control, he replied by ordering the general post office of the nation to be closed.

"Commerce and industry are also at a stand-still. Civil Courts and Civil Government have long ceased to be; conditions are altered from day to day by arbitrary military decrees. The finest residences belonging to wealthy Mexicans have been confiscated and used for barracks. Automobiles are taken everywhere, as they form a very convenient means of transportation for officers, who form a large proportion of the military."

"General looting goes on unchecked when it concerns the interests of those temporarily in power. The Mexico City Light and Power Company, which also controls the tramway service, long ago ceased to be run under its own management. Labour unions have been encouraged, with the idea of obtaining recruits by this means for the army."

"Scarcity of food is being seriously felt, and thousands of people have been reduced to the most abject stage of misery."

He claimed that foodstuffs consigned to Mexico City by the American Red Cross were not permitted to reach there; foodstuffs available in the country surrounding the capital rarely reached the now starving people in the city unless bribes were paid the officials for permitting it to come in, and finally even this means of obtaining food supplies was not only withdrawn from the few merchants who still endeavoured to buy and sell, but also from the International Benevolent Committee, composed of foreigners, who were dedicating their time and their money to feeding the starving Mexican people as best they could.

will eventually join their side.

"Japan also is taking an active hand. She has sent many guns of the latest type to Russia, and probably 500,000 soldiers will be soon on their way toward Russia or the Balkans, under a standard of discipline and efficiency which is unrivalled by any other country."

"The possible subsequent dash of Austro-German armies to Bulgaria, to be ready to aid that country against a possible attack from Rumania, thus establishing, with her present position, a chain of armies stretching from the Baltic to the Bosphorus, comprises the intended "master stroke" as voiced in the German and Austrian Press, and heartily endorsed by the public of both countries, especially of the Dual Monarchy."

"Such a plan, if executed promptly, and successfully, would, in the opinion of certain military experts, not only settle the entire Balkan question, but would enable the Central Powers to reach Constantinople and attack Egypt, thus realising the great ambition of the Kaiser to become "Liberator of the Orient."

"Should these impossible feats be accomplished," continued Dr. Barroetaveña, "Germany's success would by no means be pronounced in the Orient. Such signal victories will only chronicle as 'mere episodes' in this war, and can only serve as a means of indefinitely prolonging the war, while any victory on the Allies' side will be of decisive importance."

"Of Russia there need be no apprehension. The Kaiser is being drawn yard by yard into the same trap which caught Napoleon, and it will not be long before that chapter of unmitigated horror will be repeated, in which the French fled before the pursuing Russians, when life became hell and death a boon to be craved for."

"The Kaiser certainly possesses a keen knowledge of history, nor can he ignore why and how Napoleon failed, but the War Lord has become blinded by his all-absorbing egotism, and thinks he can ignore all the obstacles which caused the downfall of the Little Corporal."

"Besides his various ventures in the Balkans, he is aiming at Petrograd. When he gets there, if the Russians permit him to get so far, he will find a heap of smoking ruins. He will not be able to escape by sea with his army, for if the winter has not locked the waters with a key of ice, the British fleet will take care of him. That he will endeavour to avoid the mistakes Napoleon made is to be expected; he will doubtless attempt to build a railway behind his armies to facilitate retreat and bring up food, ammunition and clothing, for he must be aware by this time, that the Russians will never permit him and his to live upon the country; they will make it a desert and what a God-forsaken desert the Russian soil can be in midwinter all travellers know."

"The Cossacks will take care of any railway the Germans may build, and will make it impossible to maintain the long drawn out lines of communication, for to guard such a railway, the Germans would need three million soldiers and Germany has not three million men to spare for the job."

"Foiled by Russia's indomitable defence, she will be unable to cope with Italy, Japan, France, England, Serbia, Greece and Rumania in the Balkans."

"Such an invincible co-operation will suffice to destroy the faintest hopes that she might entertain."

Dr. Barroetaveña then stated the best means of destroying Germany's power is by a financial war. By completely blocking her trade, the author thinks Germany's absolute submission can be obtained.

THE GRAND DUCHESS OF LUXEMBURG

Retta Melinburg writes in the "Record" of Luxemburg's Duchess.

"They have stolen my country. Like so many thieves they sneaked into my beautiful land, and overnight they turned my flower gardens into open-air stables for their cavalry horses."

She is only twenty-one years of age, this beautiful girl-ruler of Luxemburg, slender, handsome, unmarried, and with five younger sisters to take care of; the youngest, Sophie, is only thirteen years old; next, Elizabeth, fourteen; Antoinette, sixteen; Hilda, eighteen; and Charlotte, nineteen.

And it was not easy to interview this Grand Duchess. "I must see your pass Madame," demanded the German officer guarding the Adolf Bridge. "I have lived in this country during the last twelve years, and I am a permanent resident of this country," I responded, surprised. "This country and its population, one and all, are amenable to the German military law," shouted the German officer. "I have no pass," I responded.

Then a huge and heavily gloved hand grasped my shoulder, swung me round, and pushed me back toward the head of the bridge on the Luxemburg side. I returned to the Boulevard du Viaduc, passing the square called by the Luxemburgians the Place de la Constitution. On the east of the Place Guillaume is seen the Palais Grand Ducal, a modest looking Renaissance building with two windows, a memorial of the Spanish occupation. This tasteful building was originally erected to be the capital for the Duchy, but later it became the administration building for the Grand Duchy.

Alongside of this mediaeval building (for it was erected in 1590) stands the Parliament building, called the Chamber des Deputes. Facing the Chamber des Deputes there is a handsome entrance to the Palais, and there stand two Prussian guards. Whenever anyone approaches this entrance, unless one can produce a satisfactory parchment, he or she faces two sharp-edged bayonets. "You must give me sufficient reason for your seeking an interview with her Highness." A pair of blades were levelled at my breast. "But I have been her tutor, I—"

Then a slender girl rushed out of the gate toward me, totally ignoring the presence of the two unwanted guards, and holding out her arms cried: "My dear old teacher! Do not allow these horrible creatures to frighten you." Saying this she took my arm, and between the two bayonets we passed on into the Palais, where in previous years I had the honour of teaching her little Highness her first French lessons. I had scarcely seated myself beside her when she broke out, with tears running down her cheeks, now crying, now sobbing, saying:

"Not satisfied with destroying our beautiful scenery, they have also stolen our public buildings, our local government, our post, our educational establishments, and they have forcibly taken charge of our railroad, for which we have spent more than 15,000,000 francs. They seized our telegraph system, and whenever my people protested too strongly, they arrested them and sent them to remote Prussian military prisons; more than two hundred of my leading citizens have been sent out of their country to Germany. My people, my once happy and prosperous people, are to-day poor and at the verge of starvation. Even I have to receive a permit from a Prussian officer before I can drive my own car on my own roads, in my own land. I must even get a permit from a Prussian officer before I can use the telephone which was established by our own funds. This is annexation; not annexation through conquest, but annexation through stealing.

"The people of Belgium have reason to be proud of their great achievements in fighting the arrogant conqueror, but we feel we were robbed in the small hours of the night. Had we suspected the treaty-breaking intentions of the Prussians, we would have rushed to arms. If we had had forty-eight hours' notice, we would have put at least 25,000 men on our eastern frontier. We are as big as Montenegro, and the country is as mountainous, but we had implicit faith in international law; and we thought we were immune. For all practical purposes my country is annexed, and the misery of my people is deeper than that of the Belgians; in addition, we hang our head in shame before the world for not having fought the stealers of our country.

"I sincerely envy the Queen of the Belgians in her present position; for my present plight is more bitter than hers. They were cowards. For many years these Prussians have been plotting against my country in accordance with that general German plan. My country with its 300,000 population, has been harbouring hundreds of German spies, and when the appointed hour came these men turned out to be officers in the Imperial German armies. Even my two German drivers were disguised officers; and when that fateful first of August night had arrived they appeared in German uniforms.

"The Germans had their outposts established everywhere in my country, and my unsuspecting people had always treated these treacherous spies with the utmost consideration. They have published broadcast that I have received the Iron Cross from the German Emperor. It is not true. I have received a medal from the Red Cross officials. They have also published that the Imperial German Government has compensated my people for the damage they have done to the scenery of my land, with money; and even then, they have only paid the paltry sum of 100,000 dollars for destroying hundreds of buildings for military reasons. They seem to think that one can commit every imaginable sin and outrage for military reasons. They mention the fact that we have spent 300,000 dollars for our Red Cross in taking care of their wounded soldiers. And now my own people are starving, and they must beg their daily bread from the hands of their robbers."

The Luxemburgers are, indeed, starving, as her Highness charges; the former industrious, prosperous peasantry, now all equally poor, cannot lay claim to their former belongings. Many of the Grand Duchy's leading citizens have been cast into prison. Proud and once happy citizens and their children can now be seen lined in the avenues begging for their daily bread, whereas only a short time ago they promenaded the same avenue prosperous and care-free. The working men who were formerly employed in the tanneries, distilleries, breweries and wine groves are now working for the invaders of their country; and instead of the wages they used to receive, they now receive meal-tickets entitling them to "KK" bread, and, in rare instance, to "K" bread, which is commonly known as "war bread."

This is the compensation the poor people of Luxemburg are to-day receiving for the wanton violation of

"SUFFRAGE AND VICTORY"

Something which must please our "suffrage" friends appeared recently in the San Francisco "Argonaut," entitled "Suffrage and Victory," which runs thus:—

Although there is a good deal of conscription talk in the air just at the present time, no one seems really to think that it will come to anything. At the same time it would be rash to predict that this or anything else will or will not happen. At one time it seemed nearly certain that conscription would be applied to the munition workers and that the application of a metaphorical bayonet in the rear would supply the stimulus that was imperatively needed. But the labour union leaders at once displayed a disposition to be reasonable. They had failed to realise that this new work was different from all other work that they had ever done and that the very existence of the country depended upon it. It was a work, not for wages, but for patriotism, and it would be as absurd for the soldier in the trench to insist upon his eight-hour day in the face of a German attack as for the munition workers to exact the letter of their union law. No one now believes that there will be any more difficulty with the factory workers.

For this we have to thank Lloyd George. He has a persuasive way with him that would fully justify him in being an Irishman instead of a Welshman. Himself a man of the people, no one knows better than he how to speak the popular language. But he never condescends to cajolery or flattery. Even the roughest audience feels that he is paying to it the compliment of an appeal to reason. At the same time he never gives the idea of compressibility. He is not afraid to say that a thing must be done and to convey something more than a hint of what he will do to compel it to be done. The kindest and most genial of men, he yet gives the idea of force and of a relentless use of force should the occasion demand it. When Lloyd George was an obscure country attorney in Wales he was once consulted by a deputation of Nonconformists as to their proper action in view of the refusal of the Episcopal clergymen to permit the burial of a Methodist in the consecrated churchyard. Lloyd George advised them to take the body to the churchyard and if the gates were locked against them to break them down. They followed his advice to the letter, and the country was electrified to find that such action was legal. Lloyd George's fortune may be said to date from that moment. From that time until now he has been breaking down gates that were locked against him, and it is now generally recognised as the part of wisdom to open the gates before Lloyd George brings up his battering ram.

But it is not likely that there will be conscription in England. There is no real evidence of such a need. It is true that one meets a good many young men on the streets who would look well in khaki, but on the other their neutrality. The entire Grand Duchy is one huge military camp, and every civilian therein is amenable to the will of the military chief.

For every civilian one meets on the streets, one meets two wounded soldiers. On the Boulevard du Viaduc you may see many children accosting young officers for centimes, while their elders timidly watch their little ones beg for a pittance for the price of a loaf of bread. In the Place de la Constitution the soldiers are receiving their rations. Here and there you observe young children and old men and woman, their trembling hands outstretched for a peice of bread. A German orderly comes along with a black whip in his hand. The inexperienced, the young as well as the feeble old beggars, are whipped out of range until they are scattered along the avenue. Alas! poor Luxemburg! And the little Grand Duchess, bereft of her liberty and her much loved country, hand it is an admitted fact that Kitchener has received all the men that he has asked for, and even more than can yet be supplied with rifles. No one knows just now how many men are under arms nor where they are. There is something more than a suspicion that Kitchener himself has set afloat some of the talk about the reluctance to enlist and that he has done this in order to create the impression of slackness and inefficiency. There are certainly three million men now ready for service, and no one would be surprised to learn that there are more.

The work of the women has been beyond praise from the beginning. To say that Mrs. Pankhurst is a firebrand would be to utter a truism, but there is no one now to complain of the superheated energy that she is throwing into her work for the country. Mrs. Pankhurst's scorn for the shirker and the slacker is something to remember. The men may decry conscription as much as they will, but Mrs. Pankhurst is made of sterner stuff than that. She would have conscription for men and for women too. She does not see why women should not be as deadly with the rifle as their husbands and sons, but since there seems to be a prejudice against women in the trenches, there is no reason why they should neglect other opportunities for service, nor why such service should not be made compulsory. Mrs. Pankhurst has no patience with the rather maudlin feminine sentiment which says and sings "I did not raise up my boy to be a soldier." She would ask, "What, then, did you raise him for?" To be a corporation lawyer? Mrs. Pankhurst uses her "Suffragette" and all the mechanism of her organisation to overcome the womanly objection to sacrifice husband and son if such a sacrifice should be called for. Probably Mrs. Pankhurst influence has sent thousands of men to the front who would otherwise have stayed at home.

There need be no doubt that this new sort of militancy has won the day for suffrage. It may be a long time before the whirling war clouds will permit another legislative view of the great question, but when that day shall come the result will be a foregone conclusion. It is unthinkable that there will be any opposition. The suffragette women of England have shown a spirit of comradeship that has been supposed to be rather a male appanage, but that they have raised to a sort of sublimity. It is said that Germany counted upon the aggression of the suffragettes as one of the most important of the factors that would keep England at peace, and if so the disappointment must indeed be great. The suffragettes have not only done a hundred things, and done them well, that are usually left to men, but they have shown an equal competence in the softer duties that seem to fall more naturally within their sphere. Although the "war babies" have not been nearly so numerous as the voice of scandal would have us believe, the suffragettes have been prompt to do what the occasion demanded. Any irregular baby needing a home has been promptly supplied, and it has been done intelligently and in such a way that the baby shall have the best chance in life that its capacity will permit. The condition in England is strained and critical enough in all conscience, but she may thank the suffragettes that it is not much worse.

The Kaiser's only daughter, Princess Victoria Louise, Duchess of Brunswick, is said to have been extremely annoyed not to have heard for some days from her husband, who is leading the Zieten Hussars. Visiting the Brunswick Hospital recently, the director told her that they had just brought in a hussar who had served under the Duke. The Princess hurried to the man's bedside and questioned eagerly: "Did you see the Duke? Where was he? How is he feeling? Is he victorious? How does he look? ah! above all, how does he look?" "He looks filthy," was the blunt answer. And the man turned to the wall and fell asleep.

Land of Lilliput.

Conducted by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

I am sure you are all rejoicing in the fine weather, and especially in the beautiful roses which cover every bush with their glory.

I, with some friends, went to Coghlan one day during the past week, and our passage along the streets was freely punctuated with stops, commas, semi-colons, colons, and a full stop when we arrived at the house of a friend, to find the roses very much finer there than anywhere else, because we got possession of a beautiful bouquet of them. Every verandah on our way was covered with climbing roses, and the air around was full of sweet odours. Do you ever, when you go to Palermo, read the names of the many beautiful roses there? Every rose has its own peculiar beauty and distinguishing qualities. Can you wonder that the rose has received the crown as queen of the floral kingdom?

A Lilliputian who gives her age as 16 has sent to a New Zealand paper an article on "Tubal Cain," which I am sure you will enjoy reading, as the whole earth is suffering at present from the dreadful deeds done by armaments. This is what she writes:—

Tubal Cain, or Tubal the Smith, is spoken of in the Bible as the first man who worked metal. He first made weapons, but in this poem he is represented as being grieved at the evil he has started, in giving men the knowledge of how to kill one another. He is thinking if he can turn his discovery to better advantage, and so with joy in his heart he works out the first ploughshare. The moral is that a man can help his neighbours best by encouraging peace and quietness, but so long as oppression and disorder remain, the sword must not be put out of our minds. The poem is by Charles Mackay.

Old Tubal Cain was a man of might
In days when the earth was young;
By the fierce red light of his furnace bright

The strokes of his hammer rung;
And he lifted high his horny hand
On the glowing iron clear,
Till the sparks rushed out in scarlet showers
As he fashioned the sword and the spear.

And he sang—"Hurrah for my handiwork!"

Hurrah for the spear and the sword!
Hurrah for the hand that shall wield them well,
For he shall be king and lord!"

To Tubal Cain came many a one
As he wrought by his roaring fire,
And each one prayed for a strong steel blade

As the crown of his desire;
And he made them weapons sharp and strong,

Till they shouted loud for glee,
And gave him gifts of pearl and gold,
And spoils of the forest free.

And they sang—"Hurrah for Tubal Cain,

Who hath given us strength anew!
Hurrah for the smith, hurrah for the fire,

And hurrah for the metal true!"

Long, long ago, Tubal Cain was a man of great power and strength. Beside his furnace, which shone brightly, the blows of his hammer rung. He hit the red-hot iron so hard that the sparks flew out in showers; and so he worked weapons out of it. He was so pleased with his work that he shouted for joy, and he also sang in praise of the nation that would use them. Many people came to him as he worked by his furnace, and everyone asked him to make a strong weapon. He made them weapons, both strong and sharp, until they sang for joy, and gave him jewels and gold and forest spoil. They sang loud in praise of Tubal Cain, who had given them a new way of killing their fellow-men.

But a change came o'er his heart

Ere the setting of the sun,

And Tubal Cain was filled with pain

For the evil he had done.

He saw that men, with rage and hate,

Made war upon their kind;

That the land was red with the blood they shed

In their lust for carnage blind.

And he said—"Alas! that ever I made,

Or that skill of mine should plan,

The spear and the sword for men whose joy

Is to kill their fellow-man."

But before he died a sudden change came over Tubal Cain's heart. He was filled with pain for the evil he had caused. Men, now, instead of being at peace, went to war with one another, and the land was full of rebellion, because of their liking for battle. When Tubal Cain saw this, he was filled with remorse because he had made the spear and the sword for men whose joy was to kill one another.

For many a day old Tubal Cain

Sat brooding o'er his woe,

And his hand forbore to smite the ore,

And his furnace smouldered low.

But he rose at last with cheerful face

And a bright, courageous eye,

And bared his strong right arm for work,

While the quick flames mounted high,

And he sang—"Hurrah for my handiwork!"

And the red sparks lit the air;

"Not alone for the blade was the bright steel made!"

And he fashioned the first ploughshare.

For many days Tubal Cain was brooding over his grief. He did not work, and he let his furnace burn low. Suddenly he rose, with a cheerful look on his face, courageous look in his eye, and he bared his arm for work, while the flames of his furnace burned brightly. He sang in praise of his skill as the sparks flashed all round him, and he said that the steel was not made alone for the sword and spear, and so he made the first ploughshare.

And men, taught wisdom from the past,

In friendship joined their hands,

Hung the sword in the hall, the spear on the wall,

And ploughed the willing lands;

And sang—"Hurrah for Tubal Cain!

Our staunch, good friend is he;

And for the ploughshare and the plough

To him our praise shall be.

But while oppression lifts its head,

Or a tyrant should be lord,

Though we may thank him for the plough,

We'll not forget the sword."

Men, when they saw what happened from being rebellious and angry, began to be friendly with one another. They put away their weapons and tilled the land. They again sang in praise of Tubal Cain, and said that he was a staunch friend, and that to him they were indebted for the plough, but that, while slavery had the upper hand, or a tyrant should reign, they would thank him for the plough, but they would not forget that he had also made the sword.

There is a moral in this story, is there not? If all the work and energy spent on war and killing fellow-men were spent inside in cultivating the earth, what a different world to live in we should have. Now here is a story for you to read. Do you like it? It is called—

THE ISLAND OF THE GREEN BIRDS

(By "K.Z.")

One still blue afternoon in the Indian Ocean between Aden and Ceylon some people were sitting idly on the deck of a big steamer bound for Colombo. It was too hot to play games, and they were tired of doing nothing, so they were quite glad when something happened of which I am now going to tell you.

Suddenly there was a tiny flutter on the ship's rail, and the smallest, greenest, most fragile looking bird imaginable appeared as if by magic. It had a bright green body, about the size of a thumb, not daddy's thumb, not even mummy's, but about as big as your own will be when you are a few years older.

There was a narrow yellow ring round its eyes, which were so small that I really could not see their colour, but I think they were brown. The legs were the queerest part of all. They were golden like a sun-flower, and very long in comparison to the body, and so thin that they really looked more like two threads of gold wire with little tangles at the ends for feet than anything else.

We all sat very still, for we were enchanted with the little stranger and did not want to frighten it. The bird, however, did not seem in the least afraid, and hopped about quite jauntily on the rail on its two thin legs that one had really to look hard at to see at all.

Suddenly he gave a little chirrup of joy, and flew along the deck over our heads at a great pace. I knew where he had gone. Two beautiful Java sparrows which I had bought at Gamage's in London were hanging in a cage not far away. There he was sitting on the top of the cage chattering away to them through the bars. He stayed about half an hour talking to the sparrows, but I was not a bit surprised when at length he flew twittering away, and was swallowed up in the blue air. I knew he must have rather a long way to fly home.

The passengers were very interested and talked a good deal about the beautiful little bird, wondering where he lived and how he came to be so far from home over the great tumbling sea, for there was not an island in sight.

I did not talk much, for I knew my little friends the Java sparrows would tell me all about it that night. Bird language is much the same all the world over, and it is quite easy to understand if only one loves them enough. And late that night when most people had gone to bed they told me all about their talk with the wee bird.

His nest, he said, was in a palm tree in a sheltered grove on a tiny island just beyond the horizon. Nothing lived there but a good many green birds like himself, and a family of small rock crabs who, when the tide was out, had a lovely swimming pool of clear green water to enjoy themselves in. There were also some insects and worms in the earth which the little birds lived on, and sometimes the tiniest of baby crabs would get separated from its mother, and if there happened to be a grown up green bird about it would be all over with that baby crab. The island, he said, was round and very small, though it is hard to know what a green bird means by small. There was a ring of yellow beach and some rocks, round which the sea curled and sang all day; inside was just green jungle and a few tall palm trees.

The birds are very happy there. Our lovely little friend told the Java sparrows they have nothing to do but build their nests of cocoanut leaves and twigs, and talk and play with each other, and catch insects and watch out for baby crabs. One or two curious things are on the island they don't quite understand. One wild fresh morning, when it had been rather rough in the night, the first little bird that awakened and peeped out at the world had a great surprise.

There was something high up on

SOME WOMEN AND MANY THINGS

Miss Mary Bath, of Yarra Glen, Victoria, Australia, a girl of sixteen, is letting away a man for the war by driving for her father, who keeps a livery stable. The roads are steep but the young driver is universally trusted for her skilful handling of the reins.

The women of Saskatchewan, America, have recently been granted equal municipal suffrage. This is regarded as the sure prelude to political suffrage. A petition of 10,900 signatures has just been presented by the suffrage agencies throughout the country, and sympathetically received.

A very important position is filled by Miss Alberta Read, official tea tester for the United States. Miss Read is said to condemn more tea every week than was destroyed by the Boston tea party. She is the first woman to hold this office, which touches women housekeepers so closely.

Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, the originator of the moonlight school system, is said to be the only woman about whose work the United States has ever issued a bulletin. Mrs. Stewart's work is of special interest to backward country districts, because it is believed to be the solution of the adult illiteracy problem.

Helen L. Sumner and Ethel E. Hanks are co-authors of the report on the operation of child labour laws in Connecticut, just issued by the children's bureau of the Department of Labour. This document shows that in part of New England, at least, the problem of child labour is being grappled with in practical and effective form, and that itinerant inspectors are doing much good.

the beach which had not been there when the sun went down.

The little bird could not describe it very well, but he said it was a roundish, humpy thing made of wood—all hollow and dark underneath. At first they were afraid of it, but it has been there a long time and nothing has happened, so now they have great fun running races and tumbling all over it. It sounds to me very much like a ship's boat keel upwards in the sand.

They have another game too. After it has rained very hard they often find round, flat, yellow things lying on the earth in a certain part of the jungle. They peck them and try to pull them about, but can't get them far because they are too heavy. So after rain there is always the excitement of scratching about together to see who can find most of the pretty yellow things.

I think these must be gold coins, part of some pirate treasure; though how they came to be left on the island is rather a mystery.

The birds, though they are so small, can fly a good distance and the stronger ones take quite long flights across the sea. Occasionally, when they are some miles from home, they sight a ship and love to chase it and flutter down on the deck and be admired by the passengers, who are always very gentle with them. They never stay very long, for fear of meeting a storm on the way home.

It is a pity the island is so small, and that one does not know quite where to find it, or we might all take ship some day and sail away over the blue sea in search of it.

My Java sparrows were quite sad that night; they wanted me to let them go and live with the green and yellow birds on the green and yellow island in the sea. But they had lived so long in their cage that I didn't think it would be at all safe for them to try and find it alone. I told them so, and they were very good about it, but I know their little hearts ached more than they cared to tell me.

WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE

DIOCESAN MEETING AT ST.
JOHN'S.

Yesterday at St. John's Pro-Cathedral took place the annual meeting of the Women's Association. The programme of the Day's doings was as follows:—10 a.m. Holy Communion with address by the Rev. Canon Stevenson of Quilmes on "Vocation." There was a collection in aid of the Argentine Chaco Mission to the Indians. From 11 till noon in St. John's Hall was occupied by reception and an address of welcome to ladies attending from outside given by Mrs. C. H. Pearson, replied to by Mrs. Every Miller, of Rosario. Letters of greeting were read, including a telegram of the most cordial nature from the Rt. Rev. Lord Bishop Every, now absent at Tucuman, and from the Rev. Canon Fenn, of Brazil. This was followed by a demonstration of the Mission Study Class.

At 2 p.m. the afternoon session opened with prayers. Then followed the reading of the minutes and the calling of the roll. Mrs. Blair, of Los Cocos, read a paper on "Prayer." Subsequently followed the reports of local branches, the financial report, and the report of the Central Secretary, Miss Mitchell. All these were approved.

The Secretary in her report dealt exhaustively with the year's work, both by the central body and branches, contributions and future activities. On the question of fees it was mentioned that the amount is not necessarily limited to a dollar in case any one feels impelled to go beyond that sum.

A general discussion then followed in which several motions were put and carried, proposed by Mrs. Hume, Mrs. Wigham, Mrs. Boote, seconded by Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Trillia and Mrs. Spanton. It was decided to endorse recent policy and to pay special attention to the seamen's mission. Mrs. Gardner, seconded by Miss Dornig, proposed helpers being assigned to each branch. A vote of thanks to all who had helped to make the Conference a success was proposed by Mrs. Ferrari and seconded by Mrs. Trillia. Tea was then served and its usual accompaniment of general conversation.

At 5 o'clock the Rev. H. C. Morrey Jones gave a deeply interesting account of work among the Indians of the Argentine Chaco.

In the course of his account he described an Indian village under the burning noon sun, at the hour of "siesta," the women only at home, the men working or hunting, and the same at night.

Fear of the evil spirits of the waste and forest is an intensely active article of their belief; even the games of children are deeply tinged with their terror of the unseen world and the malignant forces, which they suppose constantly surrounding them. Their lives are actually embittered by fear and are by no means the lazy, free from care, butterfly existence that many suppose, especially as they frequently lie in mud in bad weather. So great is their terror of spirits that on a death occurring they burn the village and with it all the chattels and movables of the deceased, and decamp, thus avoiding trouble with probate and succession duties.

Teaching by the mission has eliminated a great deal of this superstition, and the religion taught is practical religion. The motto is "Pray and do." Many clever workmen have been turned out carpenters, transport workers, capable cattle-men, and so on. With the women, owing to their previous freedom from all restraint, teaching has been difficult. An industrial school failed, as they jibbed at discipline, and the successes have been chiefly trained in the houses of members of the mission staff.

Mr. Morrey Jones related some amusing anecdotes illustrative of the difficulty of persuading the Indian domestic to do things in the manner us-

MISS ADELA VERNE

A BRILLIANT RECITAL.

The name of Adela Verne is one which conjures to the imagination infinite variations of harmony, and with each succeeding concert not only is the desire to hear her enhanced, but a more universal recognition of her remarkable playing is established which only very few artists have been able to equal in this or the past generation.

She opened her fourth recital on October 28 at the Salon Teatro, Cangallo 1362, with the plaintive tones of Beethoven's ever-popular Moonlight Sonata. Her technique was extraordinary and her execution of this exquisite selection was most impressive. Her soul seemed to thrill under the interpretation of the great master, and this feeling was transmitted to the hearts and minds of her listeners.

She is, no doubt, one of the greatest pianists of the age, and combines with the delicacy of the woman the vigour and energy of the man. She belongs to that category of supreme artistic exponents which has produced such rare geniuses as Liszt, Kalberg, Rubinstein and Paderewski, and maintains a standard of efficiency which is excelled by none and perhaps only rivalled by one or two.

There have been players whose personality has been more eccentric and perhaps more prepossessing, but none has possessed the triple potent combination of the powers of inspiration, technical knowledge, and the fervency and imagination of youth, such as Adela Verne may claim.

In her rendering of Schumann's "Papillon," Op. 2, nothing could have been more masterful and more intense. It was a veritable subjugation of all the human emotions, the frivolous laughter, the passionate outcry, the roar of anger and the lamentations of grief, melted in one powerful display.

Then came the "Estudios" of Chopin, Op. 10, No. 3; Op. 25, No. 9; Op. 25, No. 11. Knowing her unlimited powers, one can readily imagine how Chopin breathed again under her dexterous fingers. Schumann's "Papillon" was wonderful, but Chopin's selections were still more wonderful.

Liszt was equally good. The "Estudio de Concierto" in F. minor is one of even range, with gentle touches of pathos. This was exhibited by Miss Verne with sympathetic feeling.

In the "Danse des Gnomes," however, she reigned supreme. This wild, tempestuous composition, with its barbaric and majestic train of symphony, thrilled every being in the audience, and the rolling cadences now resembling thunder and then the murmurs of the solemn woods were awe-inspiring.

"Polonesa," one of the most celebrated compositions of Liszt, concluded this memorable concert, and it is needless to remark that it was played as only Adele Verne is capable of playing. This last and brilliant execution provoked such fervid applause that she was obliged to appear no less than nine times on the stage, and executed an extra-number at the termination of the concert.

To have missed hearing her is to have failed in witnessing that which represents the loftiest standard of Art.

Miss Verne received several bouquets which were presented to her during the performance, and, judging by the applause, it will be a very long time before this great artist's exhibitions are forgotten.

vally considered "the thing."

An objectionable feature of their villages is the plague of dogs, which increase and multiply, as they will not kill them—superstition again, — and the average of dogs in a village to the inhabitants is about three and a half per capita.

Finally Mr. Jones pointed out the good work achieved, and appealed for further support in pursuance of the motto "Pray and do."

THE "HERALD" STAFF'S

PICNIC AT RIO CHANA.

The combined staffs of THE HERALD participated in an enjoyable outing on Sunday when the third annual picnic took place, though to follow ancient custom, honoured to this day throughout the Anglo-Saxon world, such an event should properly be described as a "Wayzgoose." The origin of the word is lost in antiquity, or in the unrecorded history of printing houses immediately subsequent to the immortal Caxton. It is said that the word came from the Cornish or Devonshire expression "away us goes." Contracted into "Wayzgoose" it is used throughout English newspaperdom and the printing craft to describe a picnic, or fiesta.

As proof of the virtues of a picnic in prospect for giving zest to labour, Sunday's HERALD was produced in record time, and was an excellent issue too. At the early hour of eight a.m. when all respectable newspaper people should be comfortably in bed, the full strength of THE HERALD staffs, literary, commercial and mechanical, gathered at Retiro station and journeyed to the Tigre, where two launches were waiting to take the party through the Delta to "El Hogar." The rain had no effect on the happy spirits of all, though apparently it obfuscated the vision of the "pilots" in charge of the boats, who promptly proceeded to lose their way and found it again only when the picnickers were famished with hunger. "El Hogar" was not reached till well after 1 p.m., and Host Pindar and Mrs. Pindar were treated to a demonstration of what healthy and hearty appetites can do when in the presence of an excellent meal. A pleasant time was spent at the pretty spot, so far from the rowdy city, and the office poet might have penned a delightful picture of the concord and harmony prevailing in such delightful surroundings. Gone were the bustle and anxiety of the Press room, and for once the speeding of the hours was unnoticed. Time is the mortal enemy of the newspaper worker, for he fights and works against it every night, and it exists only to be beaten, or once in a year to be spent with indifference.

It was growing dark when a start was made for home. Once more the "pilots" demonstrated the fact that they had obtained their licenses under false pretences, or had forgotten all they ever knew of river navigation. In the words of the Shipping Reporter, they "piled up" their craft on several mud-banks, but they managed to get the party safely back to Tigre at 9 p.m. Another hour, and the City was reached, with everyone happy, but tired with the physical tiredness that comes from pleasant recreation in the haunts of Nature, to say nothing of the fact that most of the picnickers had had no sleep for 24 hours.

STRIKE AT A FACTORY

PROTEST AGAINST A FOREMAN.

For the past fortnight close upon 160 workmen, mainly from the polishing department of the factory of Messrs. Waring and Gillow, have been out on strike. The cause of the trouble was the dismissal of a workman by the foreman. The management state that the man was dismissed for insubordination. The men allege that the foreman had no justification for his action, and further that he was endeavouring to discriminate unfairly.

The matter was discussed by the union to which the polishers belong, and a demand was made for the removal of the foreman. The management of the factory would not accede to the demand, and the men struck work. According to a statement made yesterday by some of the strikers, they have no complaint against the management, and admit that Messrs. Waring and Gillow have always treated them well. All they object to is the foreman.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

For the first time we are to produce an illustration showing clearly the construction and mechanism of the deadly bombs dropped by Zeppelins in their raid on England. The main feature of the incendiary bomb, which causes the fires, is the cylinder of thermit, which, when fired, produces the tremendous heat of 5000 degrees Fahrenheit. Perhaps no campaign in history has brought forth such remarkable resourcefulness as that displayed by the Allies in their determined attack on the Dardanelles. The landing of the forces, their maintenance on the narrow strips of beach which for many weeks were the only foothold they had on the Gallipoli Peninsula, and the driving back of the Turks, have developed to a high degree all the ingenuity and resource of the Allies. In the second of our pictures we show how a big gun is got ashore on a raft. The next picture gives a splendid idea of the scenes on the beaches. In the foreground is a contingent of motor cyclist despatch riders, mainly recruited from the Royal Engineers. The view of a French army chaplain among the men in the trenches needs little explanation, but the next picture is highly interesting as it explains how the various corps and units of a great fighting force are controlled from the main headquarters. There is also an interesting local history attached to the publication of this diagram. The day before the picture was selected for publication, the father of an Argentine volunteer called at "The Herald" office and asked if we could explain just what work his son—a motor cyclist despatch rider—had to do. He was told that his son's duty was most probably to ride back and forth from the trenches to the various headquarters with orders and information. Now if the anxious father sees this illustration he will understand clearly what his son has to do, and what valuable and important work it is, riding up and down these radiating lines—the nerves of the fighting machine—conveying orders and messages from the "brain" of the army to the "limbs." Our last two pictures show Turkish prisoners from the Dardanelles arriving in Cairo, and Canadian troops answering the call of the Motherland.

TO HELP THE CHILDREN

FESTIVAL AT PALERMO.

For the benefit of the little ones a festive reunion was celebrated yesterday afternoon at Palermo, organised by the "Patronato de la Infancia." The nature of the entertainment was both social and musical.

Much good work is done by the "Patrons of the children," and if only they know, the poor mites have much to thank this Society for. A large and enthusiastic concourse of fashionable ladies assembled and the affair was a success.

The Colón orchestra under Sr. Mesager was in full force and the Municipal Band filled up the intervals.

The elite of Buenos Aires society was present and the conductor of the Colón orchestra received a tremendous ovation for a rendering of a "Faust" selection. The weather aided the attendance.

BUSY DAY AT SAN ISIDRO

TRAMWAY INAUGURATIONS

The San Isidro authorities had a busy day on Sunday. In the morning they inaugurated the new tramway to Sarandi. The cars for the line were built in the municipal workshops. Sr. Rolon, the Intendente, assisted at the opening which was followed by a lunch at the Club Nautico.

In the afternoon there was another event no less important. Another section of the tramway to Santa Rita was opened and put into service. Only one more kilometre remains to complete the line to Santa Rita. The authorities retired after these fatigues to the Golf Club where failing powers were recruited by tea.

WEDDING

DODDS - WARD.

On October 28, at St. John's Pro-Cathedral, the wedding of Mr. William Dodds and Miss Elsie Pollock Ward, were celebrated. The officiating clergymen were the Rev. F. H. Somerville, assisted by the Rev. H. W. Brady and the Rev. J. Y. Mills. The service was a choral one.

The sisters of the bridegroom, Miss Martita, Miss Ethel and Miss Jessie Dodds, were the bridesmaids attired in pale blue crêpe de chine, with large white hats, trimmed with blue tulle and pink roses.

The bride was dressed in crepe de ehine with trimmings of Maline lace.

Mr. Cedric Grant was the best man and the bride was given away by her father.

The choral service was conducted by Mr. Cowlsham at the organ, and the church, with an archway of evergreens, was beautifully decorated.

OPERETTA IN B.A.

THE POLITEAMA SEASON

PERFORMANCE OF EVA

Operetta make a never-ending appeal to the great mass of the public; and, in the worst of times, the presentation of the tuneful works by the well-known composers of this particular form of music invariably commands success.

After an absence of some months, the Maresca company have returned to the first class theatres of the Capital in opening a season at the Politeama. Franz Lehar's "Eva" was the selected work.

The melodies of "Eva" are known to the majority of theatre-goers and are deservedly popular, for they embody some of the most skilful inspirations of the composer of "The Merry Widow."

The performance on Oct. 30 was a distinct success. Sra. Clara Weiss, in the leading role, sang prettily and her acting was always dainty and pleasing. Sra. Lambiase-Bocci, who is quite an old favourite, has often sung more tunelessly and, from a vocal point of view, was something less than a success. She was forgiven, however, for the simple reason that it was impossible not to admire her vivacity and the whole-hearted manner in which she entered into her part.

Sr. O. Bocci, in the principal male role, was excellent. One of the best and most popular of the many operetta artists seen in the Capital, he excelled himself last evening. His acting and singing were each admirable.

The remainder of the company do not call for comment.

VICTORIA SAILORS' HOME

ANNIVERSARY CONCERT

A large audience assembled at the Scotch Church Hall on Oct. 28 at a splendid concert arranged by Mrs. J. A. Pilling. The occasion was the 25th anniversary of the Victoria's Sailors' Home, and the concert was held for the benefit of this institution. There was such a mass of detail, which deserves mention amongst the twenty-two items, for each and every one of them was good that a sense of bewilderment is felt.

However, there were special items, original and particular, which will memorialise last evening.

Hadyn's Toy Symphony especially so. This work, so very seldom heard, could be almost called a memory of childhood days, and yet it is a work of considerable musical construction and thought. In places and parts it is Mark Twain set to music; in others, it has an occasional serious note. Last night it was exceptionally well rendered, and well rehearsed, and much of its humour rested in the fact that Mr. J. F. Bideleux played the cuckoo.

The leading violinist was Miss Charmion Shaw, who deserves an especial mention for her violin playing in the other items of the programme. A young lady too seldom heard, she has good technique, and is very expressive. Only one criticism could be made concerning her really beautiful playing, and that was the interpretation given to Thome's work. It was played too fast, and with some incorrect rendering of rhythm. In everything else technique and expression were perfect, especially so for so young an artist. Other instrumentalists in the Symphony were Mrs. Pilling at the piano; Mr. Layton, 2nd violin; Mrs. Thomson, cello; Mrs. Alfred Drysdale, the Rattle and the Quail; Mr. Neill Trumpet; Miss Gordon the bells; J. W. Adderley was a nightingale; Mr. Pilling, drum; Mrs. Chiswell, the triangle, and others.

There were many other excellent items on the programme, and amongst them the duet playing of Mrs. Pilling and Mrs. Chiswell. This was perfect, especially so Moszkowski's work.

Only once has Mr. Bideleux ever sung better, which says much considering that his voice has gained in breadth and volume during the past few months.

Mr. Ellis Griffin was another artist. Just as inimitable as ever, he brought the house down, and he said, a "stiff" house until he sang.

"Come back to me," a song charmingly arranged and sung with a duet of gentlemen behind the screen, was given by Mrs. Alfred Drysdale.

Mr. Pilling, Mr. Neill, and Mr. Adderley also contributed to the evening's excellence.

Mrs. R. H. Thomson played very nicely on the cello, but appeared a trifle nervous in the first half. The accompanists were Mrs. J. A. Pilling and Miss Lucy Gordon, while Miss Shaw played for her sister's violin solos.

It was an exceptionally fine concert, with a great number of items, and financially gratifying to the organisers, Mr. and Mrs. Pilling and to the object for which it was given.

SUCCESSFUL CONCERT

Mr. J. Crawley, who organised and arranged the concert on Oct. 30 at the Victoria Sailors' Home, met with remarkable success. A hall packed full, an audience exceptionally enthusiastic, encores, and many of them, to each item, caused the evening to be one of the most lively possible.

Mr. Leonard Ceiley was in great form, and was encored no less than four times. Mr. C. H. Soane, too, was at his best and highly amusing.

The whole concert went with a rattle and a swing, and an enthusiasm quite unusual.

The programme was as follows:

Part I.

1. Variation of "Sweet Genevieve," Mr. J. Crawley.
2. "Three for Jack," encore, "Rubeen

ASSIST THE ALLIES!

ADVICE TO S. AMERICAN REPUBLICS

BY FAMOUS BRAZILIAN AUTHOR

Paris, Oct. 29.

"Le Temps" of to-day publishes an interview which one of its reporters has had with the Brazilian author Senhor Graca Aranha, who is visiting Europe with the express purpose of espousing the cause of the Allies, acting as representative of the Liga Pro-Alíados of Rio de Janeiro.

Senhor Aranha stated that he intended, as delegate of the League mentioned, to make an urgent appeal to the Greeks and Rumanians not to wait too long in making up their minds to help Serbia and join the armies which are fighting for the independence of nations and for Latin culture against the Imperialism and barbarity of the Germans, who have gone so far as to ally themselves with the enemies of Christianity.

Senhor Aranha holds the opinion that Latin America ought not to remain neutral. She should aid the Allies by supplying them with arms, munitions and provisions. For this purpose it would be sufficient for the great Republics of South America to reduce their own armaments, when they would be able to let the Allies have the important quantities of material of war which are now at their disposal.

Thus they would ensure the consolidation of the national independence of the Latin Republics, a principle which is at stake in the present conflagration.

PRO-ALLY PROPAGANDA

COMMISSION'S WORK INCREASING.

The Comision de Propaganda Pro-Alíados is now working at high pressure and is doing exceedingly valuable work.

A keen interest is being manifested throughout the country districts in the propaganda, and the Comision is daily receiving additional support from small local committees and private individuals. Over 5,000 copies of the Montevideo publication "Por La Civilisación" are being distributed every fortnight, as well as thousands of circulars and brochures issued by the various governments.

There has also been no dearth of offers of assistance from influential British firms and organizations in Buenos Aires, and the Comision is rapidly expanding in its sphere of action. Up to the moment there is a sufficiency of funds to carry on the work, but later on it may be necessary to ask for support from the general public.

THE TURF

SUNDAY'S RACING AT PALERMO

There is not much to be said concerning the racing at Palermo on Sunday. The day was an unpleasant one, and the rain completely ruined the going, with the usual result, namely, a complete reversal of form, and yet with the exception of the running of Solis in the first race, if ordinary judgment had been used, it should have resulted in a good day for backers. Not a horse won who had not a good book chance, even Sanchete, because of its breeding, was by no means out of it on such a day, as he proved.

The classic was a colourless affair, and resulted in a very easy win for Ocurrencia. Two points are worthy of attention, namely, that she made all the running, and again, that considering the going, she put up most splendid time. She won absolutely as she liked, which was officially recorded as 1½ lengths from Canora.

This latter filly ran well enough, especially if one compares her to Decidica, whom so many consider a first-class filly.

Ocurrencia was out for nothing but an exercise gallop, and in the time occupied, by making the running, and in the particularly bad going, her performance was interesting. The first race went to Posadas, who was the logical danger to Solis, who never tried an inch, and we are not surprised to learn his jockey was called over the coals. It was one more disgraceful exhibition of riding to the already too large number at Palermo.

Congrio ran fairly well albiet three lengths away. He should score soon.

The public fastened on Mingo's mount, the debutante Lebeda, in the second race, and it turned out all right. She beat Hnarmi by half a neck, who shared with Aclamacion the book form. The race was somewhat of a scramble, and without much interest.

Perhaps the best event of the day was the colts' race, won by the favourite Buen Tiempo by a short head from Polavieja, with Strap another short head behind. Ave César too, was close up. It shows how bad the going was when the time occupied was Persil's average time for the 1700 metres. The previous race, too, 1.9 1/5 for 1100, only shows how excellent was Ocurrencia's time of 2.5 for the 2000.

Avanti failed horribly in the fourth race, as did Marinera. Sanchete, who ran second from the start, once more proved the value of Calepino's progeny in the mud. He only won by a small margin from Dairy Black, whose performance was a surprise. This event was another most exciting one. Camacua who ran third, was only a head behind Dairy Black.

The Classic provided the public with money for nothing, but Valenton let them down in the sixth race. Sombrio, the danger, was very lucky to win from a rank outsider in Matatias, who has been putting up some good performances at La Plata. A short head was the verdict, and $32.30 returned for the place! It is hard to say what happened to Valenton, who after making the running, faded completely away.

Bolin beat Radiant by a short neck in the seventh race, and showed himself a really remarkable horse. The time, too, was excellent, all things considered. Some little time ago Bolin was running and losing those very common or garden class events, generally down for first decision on the programme. Now he comes out at all weights and over all distances, and beats horses we almost regard as classics. Bolin is a great horse. The outsider did not win the last event for a change, but Evoé, very strongly fancied, had matters all his own way and beat Lusitano with perfect ease.

We were surprised at the running of Picacero. Although at the weights he had no chance, we fully expected a better performance. After all this year's youngsters will have all their work cut out to do anything against the older horses even at weight for age.

In conclusion it may be remarked that except for the one or two fine finishes the meeting was a very ordinary one, and generally speaking a disastrous one for the great G. P.

MONDAY'S RACING AT PALERMO

One performance stands out as the result of yesterday's racing that deserves especial mention. This is the performance of Bolin. A winner on Sunday, he again succeeded in carrying 57 kilos to victory yesterday. Few people thought he would run. Few believed him capable of carrying the weight, and yet he put up the finest and most sensational race on the programme. Head to head with Retrechero all down the straight, he just kept in front. It was a wonderful race and a grand performance, and much of it was due to Mingo's riding.

The classic event was won by Diamant by a short head from Estro. For some reason Melik withdrew at the very last moment and paid forfeit. We were informed that the going was considered unsuitable. This left but five competitors in the race. From the start Estro led, with Diamant second and Vespaciano last. They ran in this order until the straight. Diamant then took the lead at the populars and seemed to have EsEtro badly beaten. But Rivero made a tremendous effort and came again, and was only just beaten; and, in fact, to some it looked as though he had won. He was squeezed up against the rails and perhaps might have won but for this. Anyway he certainly put up a very fine show and the public quaked in their shoes until the favourite's number went up.

The going suited Pregon alright, who had no difficulty whatever in annexing the first event. Instead of as usual taking the lead, Acosta lay back third and allowed Querida II. to make the running. He rode well on to the rails and Gastia who was running second ran wide and allowed him to slip up at the bend. From thence onwards the race was a procession. Presuru turned on steam and just ousted Querida from second place.

Padin ran well and almost secured a surprise place. Perhaps the surprise was the fact that El Tony was made favourite and ran a real "stiff" race. He should have been much closer at a difference of 8 kilos to Pregon. However, we know the going did not suit him.

The fillies' race went to Heroína, a logical winner enough, and the only interest in the race was the running of Camboata, who after one or two recent runs, put up a horrible exhibition. Heroína made every inch of the running but was subject to a very determined challenge by Augusta who got up to within half a head of the leader. Arcuri rode exceptionally well.

Despota III. cleared up the field with ridiculous ease in the third event. He made all the running and then won by 2½ lengths from Pico de Oro. The great "tip" Bataclan did his best, but as usual Blanco was far from getting a decent start and had to come through the crowd of runners as best he could.

Wateville, who ran nowhere is a likely looking customer and should win soon, but beyond that, this race had no lessons.

In a three-horse race Tresor cantered away with the event from start to finish. It was a cold-blooded race and Persil who should have been somewhere on the premises never put up the smallest attempt at a gallop. He ran lengths out of striking distance of Tresor, and even at Belgrano bend could never have won the race.

It was a weak event, without interest and without any kind of result for future guidance.

After the classic event came a fairly interesting race in which Perjura added to her consistent running and scored a very hollow victory over the favourite Insula.

Acosta rode badly and without confidence. At the start Chaica led the field and after 100 yards went to the front for a few strides, when again Chaica took the lead. This shilly-shallying and indeterminate riding on the part of Acosta lost him the race, although it must be admitted that Perjura would have taken a tremendous lot of beating. Inquisicion failed again and so consistent is she in doing so that unless she has only the most feeble performers against her she is better left severely alone. Idolatria turned out a good place, but where was Angeolina?

It is interesting to remark that Acosta and Rivero rode very poorly yesterday. Estro was the only horse at all well ridden by the latter, while the former, although a winner on Pregon, on whom he could hardly have lost, seemed to lack confidence. Heroína, who gave Rivero his one win, was not as well ridden as Estro.

It remained for Arcuri and Mingo to carry off the honours of the meeting. Mingo commenced on Perjura and carried off the last three races.

Nobody could have expected Bolin to put up such a fine performance as he did as a winner of the seventh race, the finest result of the day. It was magnificent how he raced with Retrechero and considered the going was a shade heavy, his time for the 1800 was very good. Only the shortest of heads separated the two horses at the post, but it was wonderful how Bolin stuck it giving 7 kilos.

The last race was won in a hack canter by Folleto (at last!) from Tamarindo.

Beleno made the running with Tamarindo second and Folleto last. Right up to the populars they ran so when the grey drew away with ease and finished 2½ lengths in front with Tamarindo only a head in front of Beleno.

The meeting was a fairly interesting one, but taught little for future races, except in that Bolin is even better than the experts thought him.

Miss Bellhouse and W. Cowes came second with 90.

Mrs. Boutell presented the prizes. After this ceremony, Mr. Gregory thanked Mr. and Mrs. Boutell, and three cheers were given for them, and more cheers for all those who had done much to make the scores a success. The prize winners were:

BUENOS AIRES BOXING CLUBA FIASCO.

Last night the Buenos Aires Boxing Club opened their new premises and provided a number of exhibition contests.

The arrangements and organisation were disgraceful. There were a large number of people who saw nothing, a number of ill-behaved young roughs—invited and otherwise—and the exhibition was crowded with officially invited persons to the exclusion of all else. There was no one in attendance able to dispense the average courtesies due to the public, and the whole thing was most lamentable.

Boxing in Buenos Aires has always been a failure, and to judge from last night, it will continue to be so. In fact, instead of doing anything towards stimulating a great sport, it did its best to damn it.

Besler scratch by 6—0, 4—6, 6—0.

Messrs. H. Gould and F. Horwill —30 beat Mr. W. H. Taylor and E. S. Barwell by 6—4, the latter retiring.

HURLING

CHALLENGE MATCH

IRELAND v. ARGENTINA.

ARGENTINA, 7 GOALS, 1 POINT.

IRELAND, 2 GOALS, 1 POINT.

(By Our Own Representative).

This much-discussed International Hurling game took place on Sunday at Mercedes, and was witnessed by some hundreds of spectators. Quite a number braved the elements and journeyed from the Capital.

The party having arrived at Mercedes, Mr. P. Kelly had a warm handshake for all and a kindly welcome to the town. Nothing could exceed this gentleman's attention. He invited all to breakfast, but unfortunately the "asado" had to be enjoyed under cover as the rain was now falling so fast that St. Patrick himself would scarcely have risked taking his portion in the open.

The writer desires to express through the HERALD his appreciation and thanks to Mr. Kelly ("Yankee Pat," as his friends lovingly call him) for his kindness and welcome to Mercedes.

Now a word to the Irish Argentine spectator. The attitude adopted by most of the onlookers of the game was, to put it mildly, decidedly unfriendly, if not almost hostile to the Irish hurlers. Some even went so far as to gibe openly, sneer and shout expressions insulting, coarse and unseemly, while the most trivial effort of an Argentine player was cheered to the echo. This ought not to be—Argentina should remember that it was the Irish who first introduced hurling into this country, and taught them all they know about the game.

The same thing happened a few weeks ago, when the International match, Argentina v. Ireland, took place, and it must be remembered that without the Irish there could be no International. The unsportsmanlike spirit made itself evident in Mercedes, though to a lesser degree than at Saenz Peña. Arise, Argentina, and play the game as a spectator as well as your own hurlers play it.

THE GAME.

Dr. Luis M. Pagliere, who acted as referee, put the ball in play, and the Irish immediately attacked strongly. A smart puck by Andy Harte gained considerable ground, till Kenny and O'Reilly broke up a nice movement initiated by the Emerald Isle's forwards, the leather eventually crossing the touch-line, midfield.

Play followed with the honours fairly divided, till a 70 yards puck gave O'Byrne his chance, and this player with a really brilliant effort, beat Berra hollow for the first score—a goal for Ireland.

A minor soon followed by the same player, both these scores were received with icy indifference.

Then Capt. Kenny pucked out and Marchetto got possession. This brilliant young player went right through the enemy, and eventually passed to Dunleavy, who had no difficulty in making a point. Ye Gods! how the crowd cheered.

O'Byrne pucked out for Ireland, further ground being gained by O'Carroll. The leather was afterwards nicely centred by Mullany, whose shot missed the goal by inches.

Ireland continued pressing till O'Reilly pucked well to midfield. Half-time was now called with Ireland still pressing, the scores being:—

Ireland, 1 goal, 1 point.
Argentina . . . 1 point.

On re-starting it was found that Captain Kenny had altered the positions of some of his men, taking O'Reilly from the back, and placing him in the forward line, while Dalton was given the task of trying to look alter Mullany. It was a happy change as it turned out.

Ireland's captain moved also, placing himself in the forward line, but his generalship was sadly at fault, as he stood no earthly chance against such players as Dunleavy, Marchetto, and O'Reilly.

Very soon Argentina got going. O'Reilly easily beat Ryan for a goal. This was very quickly followed by another by the same player.

Though Ireland made one more goal through T. Mullins, from this to the end the game became but a practice match for Argentina, who eventually won by five goals. The score at the end was:—

Argentina, 7 goals 1 point.
Ireland, 2 goals, 1 point.

Dr. Luis M. Pagliere presented the winners with gold medals in the form of a Celtic cross with the Arms of the Republic embroidered in the centre.

The teams were as follows:—
Argentina.—Goal, V. Berra; P. Hoare, P. O'Reilly, P. J. Kenny (capt.), Rossiter, D. Duffy, H. Marchetto, T. Tormey, V. Dagnino, P. Noonan, S. Mullins, E. Dalton, P. Horan, B. Dunleavy, D. Kearney.

Ireland.—Goal, M. Ryan; J. Grehan, T. O'Byrne (capt.) J. MacCarthy, P. Ryan, J. O'Carroll, T. Mullins, A. N. Other, M. Biggan, J. O'Riordan, A. Harte, Fagan Hope, T. Mullany, O'Dourriz, P. Casey.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL

FINAL FOR THE COMPETITION CUP.

NACIONAL (MONTEVIDEO) 2 v. PORTENO (0).

A final game was played at Montevideo on Sunday for the final of Competition Cup and the result was a defeat for Porteno, the Argentine representatives, by 2 goals to 0.

A very large crowd assembled in spite of the general inclemency of the weather.

It was a fine, fair and clean game and the better side won. In pace and in combination Nacional was superior. These were the players:—

Nacional:—S. Demarchi, J. Castellino, A. Figliano, R. Banzino, J. Porti, A. Olivieri, Somma, Dacal, Romano, Scarone, Brachi.

Porteno:—Rithner, Escarra, Beltrame, Ayala, Uslengui, Abadia, Galup Lanus, Izaguirre, Piaggio, Garat, Genoud.

Sr. Gondra was the referee.

Dacal opened the score with a shot which gave Rithner no chance, but the shot Scarone put in might have been saved.

The result of the match indicates quite fairly the run of the play.

FIRST DIVISION CHAMPIONSHIP.

SAN ISIDRO (1) v. BANFIELD (1).

Still undefeated San Isidro had a rude shock on Sunday when they met Banfield and just succeeded in playing a drawn game.

San Isidro's poor shooting caused the result, while Banfield's persistence and good play very nearly defeated them.

The scorers were Foino for Banfield and Sayanes for San Isidro.

Mr. L. Gil refereed for the following teams:—

San Isidro:—Wilson, Bruno, Idiarre, Olivari, Morroni, Rossi, Alzua, Casarell, Sayanes, Julio and Elias Fernandez.

Banfield:—Petersen, Merigi, Aguirre Paz, Moglia, Nay Foino, Legarreta, Daneri, Brown, Alesi, Burton and Roscoe.

GIMNASIA Y ESGRIMA (2) v. INDEPENDIENTE (1).

Played at Palermo on Sunday. A poor and somewhat foul game resulted in a win for Gimnasia y Esgrima by goals scored by Iraola and Molino. The game was a poor one and of only minor interest.

BASEBALL

ARMOURS' VICTORY AT TALLERES

WHERE B.A. FAILED.

Battered by the Armours' heavy artillery, startled and made timid by a crowd of over 500 roaring baseball fans, and held in check by the masterful coaching work of Captain Wilson, the local team were finally beaten in a score of 9 to 7, at the Talleres field, on Sunday afternoon.

As it has been predicted the local "Cyclons" were a bit shaky, and were no match for the rival team in the first four innings and the guests easily got the better of the local fellows who were visibly embarrassed and nervous, at the splendid mound and team work of the "visitors."

It was enough to face the heavy Armour sluggers, but oh those fans! The vocal uproar, the nerve racking din of hundreds of enthusiastic spectators was evidently too much for the locals.

Strong hearts, steady hands, and cool heads were needed to win against the odds, that the "Cyclons" triple strong force, Volkening, Houston and Noonan were up against.

They were pretty cool for a good part of the game, but when Rodgers made a bad break and the crowd cut loose with its disappointment by a lively uproar, they were unable to maintain their masterful hold over the rest of the players, who became somewhat affected and lost their control.

The local will never forget the fourth inning when the Armours' batters cut loose on the ball with clean drives that sent the ball flying in all directions and enabled them to score 6 runs.

At the fifth the "Cyclons" collected themselves and commenced an onslaught, but this seemed to have been their greatest effort for they scored three runs, which they did not excel throughout the game.

By that time the "visitors" soon discovered the trick. Lopez's pitching although pretty sound, proved a good mark for the local team and another pitcher was stationed after a while in his stead at a critical moment.

At the latter part of the game excellent playing was displayed. The "Cyclons" nerved themselves and were determined at least to save themselves from a sad defeat, if they were unable to turn the odds in their favour, and they succeeded in doing so, for they kept the visitors in a close pinch all the time and kept them from scoring any runs in the three final innings.

Tuero, the local pitcher, is a "live wire," but it is apparent that he was somewhat unnerved and he did not produce some of the stunts which he put over the plate in his game with the La Plata. He possesses mettle but he has to get down and do more practice work.

Hits:—Armour, 9; Buenos Aires, 10.

Bases on balls:—By Lopez and Wilson 7; by Tuero 1.

Struck out:—By Lopez and Wilson 7; by Tuero 8.

CRICKET AT HURLINGHAM

RESIDENTS v. NON-RESIDENTS..

Owing to the weather only 3 hours play was possible in the match at Hurlingham between residents and non-residents.

The former went in first, and sent in Denton and Mendl, to face the bowling of Stuart and Brougham. Mendl played a fine innings, and his 41 was a highly creditable performance. The innings closed for 126 with Wigg at the top of the bowling with 4 for 22.

For the non-residents Powell-Jones and Rumboll were prominent, and had not the weather interfered, the side would probably have won with ease. The scores when stumps were drawn, were:—

LOMAS ATHLETIC CLUB

HALF-YEARLY MEETING.

At the Social Club, Lomas, on Oct. 29, the half-yearly meeting of the Lomas Athletic Club took place. The premises had been kindly lent for the occasion, and the meeting was a short and satisfactory one, and consisted mainly in the election of officers and captains for the coming season. Mr. Chevallier Boutell was in the chair, supported by the Vice-Presidents, Messrs. Thomas Gregory and William Flint.

Some 45 members were present, not inclusive of those on other parts of the premises.

Business was introduced, and the election of the Golf Captain for the first team was proceeded with. Mr. Ernest Gibson was duly proposed, seconded and elected.

The sub-committee elected were Messrs. George White, Carstairs, and Hickey. Mr. Andrew Gibson was elected captain of the second team.

To the captaincy of Rugby football Mr. G. Harry White was re-elected unanimously, while Messrs. Jack McCane, R. S. White and Wilfred Cribbles constituted the new sub-committee.

In respect to Association football it was agreed that the matter of arranging fixtures should be left in the hands of the Rugby Committee, and it was recommended that every effort should be made to keep alive interest in the game, which together with so many other, if not all other forms of sport, had so greatly suffered owing to members having gone to the front.

It was unanimously decided that in future the House Committee should have full control of all club catering, for all Club Departments, and that the House Committee should be responsible directly to the General Committee only. Messrs. C. E. Tabor, Donald Sinclair, Thomas Burnett, and H. W. Griggs were elected members of committee.

Mr. Chevallier Boutell, the President, spoke a few words of congratulation and praise to the organisers of the late concert with which he especially mentioned the name of Mr. C. W. Wythes, and continued with remarks concerning the Red Cross Society.

Owing to the retirement of Mr. J.

ATHLETICS

LOMAS SCHOOLS ANNUAL SPORTS

What a day the little ones had for their annual sports on Oct. 29, which were held on the Talleres football field and baseball ground. This remark not only applies to the weather but to the enjoyment of the little ones, and the keen enjoyment they took in every procedure of the afternoon.

It was greatly due to Mr. George Anderson, to Mr. R. T. Ainscough, Mr. Shepard and Mr. Wolcott that everything went off so well, so happily and successfully.

More than a hundred big and little mites, with their parents, their elder sisters and friends congregated on the ground and such real jolly sport, such strenuous juvenile efforts, such excitement, chatter and pride of victory was never seen. It was a real "field" day in both interpretations of the word.

It was a long programme, which gave every one a chance to gain a prize, and most of the work fell upon Mr. Ainscough and Mr. Wolcott.

The latter acted in every capacity, but chiefly as that of judge, while Mr. Wolcott mainly officiated as starter. So far as the starter was concerned, his duties were carried out to perfection, so far as his starts were concerned, the murderous pistol used was sufficient to frighten any German, and the effect on occasions was a false start, as the children started running away from the "horrible" noise, long before the pistol went off.

No better day could have been enjoyed, everyone was happy and satisfied.

At the close of the sports, Mrs. Ainscough presented the numerous prizes, with the assistance of Mr. Shepard, and "three times three" cheers were given in thanks to everyone.

Mr. Shepard in a brief speech at the close explained that Mr. George Anderson had presented a cup for the best all round athlete of the joint schools, but that this question necessitated consideration and would be given later in school.

The same course was also to be adopted in the case of one or two prizes that had not arrived in time for distribution.

Thanks are due to Messrs. Harrods and Co., Messrs. Walters and Co., Messrs. Lacey, Mappin and Webb and Co., George McHardy and Co., Macadam and Co., Mitchell and Sons, Robert Grant and Sons, and Tailladi and Roselli for the prizes they had so kindly given for presentation.

Miss E. Ross, Principal of Quilmes High School, presided over the function and she may feel proud of the splendid display of her scholars.

The distribution of prizes was made by Mrs. Grassick, and the judges who decided the various events were:—Mr. White, Mr. Grassick, Secretary of the British Society and Mr. Jacobs. Their absolute impartiality was highly acclaimed, even by the contestants who lost prizes by only a hairs' breadth.

OVER THE ANDES!

LOCAL AIRMAN'S AMBITION

Undeterred by the disasters which have overtaken previous bold adventurers in the same quest, another candidate for Transandine Flight honours is about to present himself. This is Señor Rufino Basavillbaso Carcano, who is now passing through his aviation course at the San Fernando Flying School. He proposes, as soon as he has taken out his Pilot's Certificate and a certain special flying machine has arrived from Europe, to attempt the task of mounting into the central blues of the Andean sky, higher than the Condor usually soars, and to pass, if possible, over the highest peaks of the range. The aviator, who is a nephew of Governor Carcano, of Cordoba, says he is well aware of the perils of such an enterprise, but that he feels sure that with careful preparation and adequate provision, they may be surmounted. So mote it be.

B. Campbell, the cricket captain for the coming season, is Mr. Wilfrid Cowes, whom, it was hoped, would use every effort in his new post to stimulate the game. Thanks were then extended to the Social Club for the use of their premises, and a vote of thanks offered to the President.

An especial reminder was given that to-morrow the golf competition would be proceeded with at Links. Mr. and Mrs. Chevallier Boutell would be present to present the prizes, and owing to the kindness of Mr. Gregory a special fast train would leave at 6.5 p.m. to convey spectators and players back to the city. With convenient stops this train arrives at Constitución at 6:50 p.m. This was specially drawn to the attention of members.

The meeting then adjourned.

CAMP NOTES

(By Our Agricultural Editor.)

Locusts are reported to be very numerous in the Queen Province, especially to the North, and particularly about the Pergamino district, where innumerable swarms are said to have taken up their quarters. The presence of such enormous bands of old locusts at the present time is not a comforting sign for agriculturists with large areas of maize just coming through the ground, though a farmer told me that so far they had done very little damage to the maize sowings. The amount of eggs deposited by the old locusts will be exceptional this season, so when the youngsters reach the hopping stage incalculable harm will be done over a wider area than is generally associated with locust invasions, at least in the province of Buenos Aires. It is to be hoped some climatic phenomena or adverse breeding conditions will mitigate this plague, which, judging by present indications, is likely to assume very grave proportions this season.

The Bahia Blanca Show was very favourably spoken of, and from the increased number of entries, and greater number of important Cabañas competing, has received a great deal more attention this season than on any previous occasion. From the sale lists of cattle none of the animals appear to have realised very high prices, though quality considered, the demand was quite in keeping with that experienced at other rural shows. The prize winning pens of sheep were eagerly bid for, and quite a cheery trade was experienced. The firm demand for sheep can be expected at Bahia Blanca, which is the centre of a vast area of country, generally more adapted for the production of wool and mutton than for cattle raising or feeding. The Rural Society are to be congratulated on the selection of their judges, who were all thoroughly versed in their respective breeds. Mr. John Sibson, of "San Blas," judged the cattle classes. Mr. L. Blunt, "Sanquillo," was the judge of the horses, while Mr. J. Sewell "Pique," gave the awards in the sheep classes.

There was only one sale of imported Shorthorns held during the week, at which prices paid were quite equal to those ruling at former sales. Three very useful young bulls, the property of Mr. Joseph Shepherd, were unfortunate in being the first lot to enter the ring, and were not as keenly competed for as the subsequent lots. They were sold from $2,000 to $3,000; the latter price being paid for a very promising calf, which had a third award to his credit at a home show. The first animal belonging to Mr. E. Mowbray Alexander was claimed by Sr. J. Atucha at the satisfactory price of $1600. This was a nice dark roan, with a splendid coat and touch, though not as sweet about his head as some breeders would like. A deep fleshed red bull, the property of the same gentleman, changed hands at $3800. Four useful young bulls imported by Messrs. Waldron and Wood were sold at prices ranging from $1600 to $3200.

Messrs. Yriondo and Coy. held a sale on Wednesday afternoon of Lincoln rams imported by Messrs. Sidey and Poels, when 36 animals were sold at an average price of $388.75 each. On Thursday afternoon the Messrs. Bullrich disposed of 44 Lincoln rams, the property of Mr. Joseph Shepherd, when a fairly firm trade was experienced, giving an average price of $452. On November 4 the same firm are to dispose of another 30 imported Lincoln rams, the property of the same importer. They are a very strong, level good all round class of sheep, and well worth the attention of prospective purchasers.

It has been my policy at all time to defend the interests of our British live stock and their incomparable merits as typical of the breed they represent; though several of the importers have this season considered that the slaughter of their imported animals in the quarantine station could in some instances be traced to the manipulations of the seller in Britain. If the sellers in Britain resort to such practices as "faking" their animals, then it behoves the importers to protect themselves and their reputation by insisting that all pedigree animals exposed at auction be submitted to the "test" to determine their immunity, or the contrary, within a few days from the date of the sale. If some unscrupulous person's animals be certified as free from the disease on the test at home, and subsequently be slaughtered here, then dealers will understand the parts of the country that experience has taught them to avoid. I have on a former occasion made reference to the supposed "tampering" with animals at home, and these eventually being slaughtered here and found to be attacked with tuberculosis. If the charge be true it is a most damaging practice, and one of the most detrimental to the high opinions held by all natives here regarding the irreproachable conduct of Britishers in business. Such practices as I refer to do more harm to the importers' interests than could be imagined, and only will these gentlemen be able to more effectually protect themselves when the principal salesmen at home draw up a set of regulations for the proper testing of all bulls bought by dealers for countries where such animals are again tested previous to their admission into the country. The importers of animals to this Republic will be forced to defend themselves and insist on some such arrangement with the auctioneers at home, which would be a fair and practical way to get justice for the buyer.

The commission in this country purchasing horses for the British Government have arranged to send another draft by the s.s. Clutha River, which is expected to leave here in the course of a few days. This shipment comprises exclusively horses for military purposes, and has been favourably commented on by local horse dealers. This lot will be under the capable charge of Mr. J. McCormack, whose familiar figure will be much missed by the large circle of friends he has made while acting as representative for Mr. Pears, in the disposal of that gentleman's consignments of live stock.

On October 29 the Messrs. Bullrich conducted a very successful sale of imported Lincoln rams belonging to Messrs. R. and G. Hughes. Twenty-four rams gave the high average of $692, while the $2000 dollar mark was reached for a very compact, strong-boned, typical class of Lincoln ram that had many admirers round the ringside. The sheep were a very nice level lot, and worthy of the high reputation earned by all this firm's importations of live stock.

Mr. J. Lalor, the well-known cattle salesman, has compiled the following list of prices obtained for animals sold by him during the week, at the Linieres market. Bueyes mestizos especiales from $200 to $235; bueyes carne gorda from $175 to $190; bueyes carne gorda from $100 to $120; novillos mestiza especiales from $220 to $250; novillos especiales para frigorifico from $190 to $210; novillos carne gorda from $130 to $155; vacas mestizas excepcionales from $145 to $180; vacas especiales from $120 to $140; vacas mestizas gordas from $90 to $110; novillitos mestizo especiales from $95 to $115; novillitos carne gorda from $75 to $90; vaquillonas

FORTHCOMING FAT STOCK SHOW.

The Fat Stock Show will soon be an accomplished fact, and at the time of writing I have not been able to find out who are to be entrusted with the judging at this most important fixture. Many of the buyers for the freezing companies would be the most suitable men from whom to select to adjudicate upon the classes for fat cattle. These men are not likely to be asked, nor would many of them care to accept the generally thankless task of judging live stock. Many of the entries would no doubt be the property of some estanciero who is a client of the freezer for which the judge acted as buyer, and the possibility of his not awarding the prize to such exhibits would be quite sufficient to cause the losing of a good client to that house. It is to be hoped that reliable and competent authorities will be secured. A great deal of the educational value of such a Show is lost if the awards have not been awarded on the present day accepted standard of merit for what constitutes the best butchers' beast, as the fattest beast may be a patchy brute, and not be the best butchers' beast by a long way. If two sides of beef are hung up in the Smithfield market, one being a cross-bred Aberdeen-Angus heifer, well finished, while the other side of meat, let us say, derived from a pure bred Shorthorn heifer, is "fatty," the difference in the value per stone would be incredible to the average Argentine estanciero. It is for the benefit of the latter that the annual Fat Stock Show is held. It is intended to demonstrate the most acceptable class of butchers' cattle. The freezing companies have been most generous in their support of this Show, by their donations of handsome special prizes, and at the sales, evincing such an enthusiasm that world's record prices have already been established for fat animals. The splendid carcasses of the prize winners are afterwards shipped to London and displayed at the stalls of the respective companies, which is a splendid medium of advertising this great country's immense resources in the growing and feeding of live stock. If the sale returns of such meat be scrutinised, there would be in the generality of cases very little profit on the deal, though the transaction serves its purpose of advertising the company effecting the purchase here, and advertises the excellence of their meat on the London market. It may also be the means of securing a large number of good quality fat steers yearly, from the estanciero who was the owner of the prize winner.

CURATIVE MEASURES FOR ABORTION.

On account of a somewhat prevalent idea that carbolic acid given internally will cure animals affected with abortion, or prevent the infection of healthy pregnant animals, it was considered advisable to put this alleged remedy to an experimental test. A heifer was infected with virulent material, 43 days after becoming pregnant, and 36 days after infection she received every other day two drachms of carbolic acid in a mash, by the mouth, alternated every fortnight by subcutaneous injections of one

OFFICIAL OPTIMISM.

Regarding the amount of wheat which is under cultivation certain statements have been received which shew a considerable increase over last year.

The calculation is official. It is stated that 1,022,000 hectares have been sown already, as against 660,800 for the previous season.

Most optimistic are the reports, but it must be considered that it is yet too early to form any judgments whatever.

So far conditions are favourable, but the published reports to hand are unnecessarily optimistic and although official expression has been given, the sound experts on possibilities are wisely awaiting further developments. The recent rains have been most beneficial.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMIRAL TROUDE

A NORMAL VOYAGE.

Yesterday in the early morning the Amiral Troude arrived at this port from Havre. Her arrival is important in that she brought a cargo of 32,000 boxes of potatoes.

Her voyage was accomplished without incident. A sensational report was published in certain native contemporaries to the effect that the vessel had met with an accident in the neighbourhood of Noronha, but her arrival and the statement given out by her Captain, M. Nero, that her voyage was without incident completely dispels alarmist rumours.

THE PRESIDENT'S HOLIDAY

Dr. de la Plaza is reported to have left his Cordoba Estate and to be voyaging to Tres Lomas in the South of the Province. His track does not touch the Capital as he goes by the Western Railway via Lujan Junction.

drachm in glycerine and water given every other day. This treatment was continued for 10 weeks. She aborted 102 days after infection, and in the tenth week of treatment; abortion bacilli was found in the discharges.

From the first it seemed most unlikely that carbolic acid, or any other disinfectant administered even in a poisonous dose, would be absorbed and reach the uterus in a sufficiently concentrated form to have any action on its bacterial contents. There are many stock owners who have had no success whatever in the field with the carbolic acid treatment for abortion, and the evidence on which the alleged successes are based will hardly stand analysis. In the first place the animals put under the treatment in practice are not known to be infected, and yet every one which does not abort is regarded as cured by the advocates of the method. In the second place the treatment is usually adopted towards the end of an outbreak, that is to say, at a time when abortion is practically confined to a proportion of the animals, recently brought into the herd; and the reduction in the number of cases is attributed to the alleged remedy, whereas it is more open to a totally different explanation, viz., that after the third year the disease practically confines itself to some of the new animals brought in, with the result that since these form only a small proportion of the whole, the opportunities for infection are greatly diminished. The usual history of an outbreak of abortion is that for the first two, or even three years, it claims many victims in the original herd, and after this one gets only a few odd cases a year, unless many new animals have been introduced.

THE GARDEN AND ORCHARD

HINTS TO AMATEURS

(BY "THE RUSTIC.")

Garden.—The majority of spring plants will have finished flowering, and will have to be taken out, and the beds prepared for planting the summer plants, and specially those of variegated and fancy leaves, such as amaranthus, begonias, centaurea, etc. Grass on lawns should be frequently cut and watered. Trim all bushes, live fences and all plants of permanent leaves, to allow plenty of ventilation, and destroy all chrysalis of insects, "bicho del cesto," etc. Repeat, with intervals of 15 days, sprayings for insects and cryptogams, especially if the previous sprays have been washed away by rains. Continue sowing the seeds already mentioned.

Orchard.—Thin trees of excessive fruit. Put supports to those branches which are heavily laden. Prune unfruitful branches. Train and tie vines. Eliminate all shoots which come out on the trunk or main trailers of the vine, leaving only those required to give formation to the plant for next year's pruning.

Plagues and Insects.—Pulverise with tobacco juice, kerosene solution, or pirethrum ("Bufach," "Kill All," etc.) for aphids on roses, chrysanthemums, orange, peach and apple trees. Powder vines with sulphur for odium (cryptogam). Pulverise apple trees with arsenical solutions for apple-moth. Pulverise orange and lemon trees for orange scale with lime and sulphur solutions. Pulverise plants in general with sulphate of copper and lime (Boullie Bordelaise) for cryptogams. Treat peach trees for wood worms.

Correspondence.—"A. H. D." Los Cocos, wishes to know (1) what quantity of native tobacco leaf is required for making an infusion to spray plants? (2) Why he has had no success with parsnip seed sown three times this year?—The trouble with your infusion is that it is too weak. You should boil 1 kilo of leaves (including stems, etc., if you can obtain them) in 8 litres of water, until you get a dark brown liquid. Cut up the leaves, etc., before putting them into the water. Apply the solution undiluted. There is no fear of the plants being damaged, as tobacco juice is harmless to vegetable life. This insecticide is only effective in the destruction of the insects as referred to in another part. It is impossible to say why you have not been successful with your parsnip seed, unless you give further particulars. If the trouble is in the seed, you can test it by a simple method. Stretch a piece of old cambric or cotton rag (uncoloured) over a hoop or mouth of a bowl about 15 centimetres diameter, and stand same in a dish of water, so that the loose ends of the rag dip into the water. You will thus have the stretched surface of the cambric permanently moist. Place a given number of seeds (100 or 200) on this, taking the seeds as they come. Place inside a room and protect from the dust. After 8 or 10 days count the seeds which have germinated. This will give you the percentage of germination. If only 50 in 100 have germinated, this would be a very low percentage, and would show that your seeds are stale or damaged.

General Information.

It may appear exaggerated to insist so much on pulverizations, but it is not generally realised in this country that the climate is very favourable to the development of both insect and cryptogamic pests, and that most of the failures in production and appearance of plants, fruit and flowers are due to either or both of these causes. In the apple moth we have a very harmful enemy, and large quantities

THE MEAT TRADE

FURTHER REDUCTION IN SHIPMENTS

BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Interest in the British Government's relation to the Argentine meat trade is unabated. It has been pointed out from time to time that the high level of prices in local markets must necessarily strengthen competition by other meat-producing countries; moreover, it has been emphasised that the existent rates can do little but harm to the stock-raising industry of the country.

A local contemporary has suggested that the extensive reductions in freight space recently made by the British Government are due to a divergence of opinion between the Government and the Frigorificos. In Frigorifico circles, however, this view is strongly combated.

Enquiries made by a HERALD representative revealed the fact that the withdrawal of refrigerating vessels from the Plate trade is primarily in order to reduce the unfavourable prices of meat in the Argentine market. Whereas at the opening of the war the British Government contracted to take 25,000 tons monthly from the principal Frigorificos, they have recently reduced their requirements, until now—October—they only take 13,000 tons.

For the current month, the La Negra, Zermatt and Thorpe Grange were contracted to load. These vessels, however, have only now left English ports and will not be available for loading purposes until the month of November. Despite this, however, and the fact that prices locally have to some extent fallen, the home authorities consider the cost of meat in Argentina to be still excessive. For one thing, meat supplies are coming forward into the British market at figures far below those of the Argentine, and in consequence the steamer La Blanca, which carries approximately 3,500 tons, is being detained in England, so that she must necessarily be withdrawn from November loading.

Apparently, everything depends upon the immediate prices demanded for Argentine cattle. The Star of Ireland—a well-known meat carrier—has been chartered to load hay; and it is more than probable that other meat vessels due to load in the early days of November will be required to load grain or other cargo.

Obviously, the situation is serious. The British Government, by having control of the available freight space, are able to put pressure to bear on any market which may be unfavourable, and by so doing are encouraging the development of other markets. Stock-breeders and others interested in the policy of maintaining a high level of prices may soon be in the position of having to ask: "Is the present state of affairs worth while?"

of fruit are lost yearly through this cause. The apple moth (Carpocapsa Pommonella) lays its eggs inside the crown of the blossom, soon after the petals have fallen, and as the former closes up shortly after, the grub which is hatched remains enclosed and commences to eat its way into the core of the apple, and lives there until fully developed, when it eats its way out again and drops to the ground, to change to a chrysalis and bury itself there, to continue its metamorphosis.

The object therefore is to place an appetising morsel within its reach as soon as it comes out of the egg, which will speed it out of harm's way. This object can be obtained by pulverisations with arsenical solutions, applied soon after (and not during or before) the petals have fallen, so that the aforesaid poison is enclosed when the crown of the blossoms shuts up.

Mix 100 grams of Paris green with 100 grams of newly slaked lime forming a thin paste, to 100 litres of water; add this paste dissolving it gradually. Stir well when applying it, as it settles very quickly. Care must be taken in handling it, as it is very poisonous, and the operator when spraying must stand to windward, not to get it into his eyes. Vegetables, etc., should be well washed before cooking if they have received any of the spray recently. There is no danger from the fruit, as by the time same is ripe, all vestiges of the poison will have disappeared.

There are other arsenical sprays composed of arsenate of lead, Scheel's green, etc., which give very good results, but are perhaps more difficult to make up. The arsenical solutions are applied in all cases where the insects to destroy are masticators, that is, that they eat the leaves and fruit. Among these are the locusts, "bicho del cesto"; orange butterfly, "bicho quemador" (which we see so numerous in the Tigre), and the cunciana del alfalfa, or grub of yellow butterfly, which for some years has done more damage to the alfalfa fields than even the locust. For this pest special instructions would be given if applied for.

A practice which would give very satisfactory results, specially to amateur growers of fruit trees, if they wish to see fine fruit on their trees, is the thinning out of excessive or unsatisfactory fruit. This rather tedious operation pays in the end, especially if children are trained for it. It consists in plucking one peach, or pear, etc., as the case may be, out of every group of 3, or 2 out of 5, according to the quantity to be reduced. A little practice will soon make the amateur capable of judging how to go to work.

This is not only done with the larger class of fruit, but also with table grapes in France and other grape-growing countries, where girls and children are specially trained, and by means of sticks perform the operation of picking out the excessive or underdeveloped grains, one by one with wonderful dexterity. This operation is called "Cisselage."

F. C. OESTE

ANNUAL MEETING IN LONDON

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS

London, Oct. 28.

At the annual meeting of shareholders of the Buenos Aires Western Railway yesterday the Chairman, Sir Henry Bell, reviewed the difficulties with which the Company had to contend during the past year, including internal troubles, excessive rains, etc. Such conditions, he stated, had never before been experienced in the history of the Company.

The floods had washed away whole banks, necessitating energetic measures and the expenditure of £122,825, which would have to come out of revenue, not capital. The Board had considered the question of distributing the cost over a period of five years, but it was eventually decided to pay it off now.

A DISAPPOINTING YEAR.

The situation was doubly disappointing inasmuch as the prospects had been so good before the deluge commenced. In December, a yield had been expected which would have exceeded all previous records; but these were spoiled by the floods in January.

There had also been external troubles. The war had caused an increase in the cost of materials, a shortage in shipping, heavier freights and difficulty in exporting Argentine products.

The Chairman then proceeded to dwell in detail upon the figures of the annual report. He referred to the transfer of the sum of £160,000 from the reserve fund to enable the payment of a dividend. After mature consideration the Board had decided that this fund, which was produced by good years, should be used to meet bad years. The stocks in which the fund had been invested had realised more than their purchase price.

In regard to fuel, the Company fortunately had had a large storage of cheap coal, although for the current year they were less fortunate in this respect.

FALL IN PASSENGER RECEIPTS.

The passenger receipts had fallen nearly £80,000 for the year, due to the abnormal conditions. The Company had also to contend with the competition of the electric tramways; but when the Company's own electric scheme was complete there was hope of a recovery of the ground lost.

The Argentine Government had shown every consideration towards the Company, allowing an extension of the time stipulated for the transport of goods.

Turning to the balance sheet, the Chairman referred to the intervention of the Government in regard to the contribution of 1 per cent, which however did not affect the lines working to the north and south. Under the Company's rules the conditions for intervention had not yet arisen.

Referring to what the Company had done for its staff, the sum of £83,335 had been added to the Pension Fund.

TRIBUTE TO COMPANY'S OFFICIALS.

A tribute was paid to Mr. Brian for his 25 years of excellent service; also to Mr. Foster who had been appointed General Manager after 23 years of service as Chief Engineer. The Chairman referred with emotion to the death of Mr. Eustace Faithfull, 23 years Secretary to the Company, who had always taken the greatest and most active interest in the affairs of the Company. He asked that the sum of £2,500 be voted by the meeting for the late Secretary's widow and children.

Regarding the future, Sir Henry gave figures to show how well the country was doing, exporting produce in one year which exceeded imports in value to the extent of 224 million

THE SIGNAL ENGINEER

HIS WORK ON THE F.C.G.A.

The closing of the old Central Argentine Station at Retiro and the consequent re-organisation of the train service from the new station, which now accommodates under its vast roof all the Central Argentine trains, may well make us ask ourselves "How is it possible to run so many trains safely?"

The answer to this question lies largely with the Signal Engineer who takes such an enormous collection of railway lines with all the points and switches and makes a safe and workable yard.

The public as a rule has a very vague idea of what the Signal Engineer does for its protection. One hears tales of heroic signalmen working for untold hours in his lonely tower—his mind on the stretch all the time in the endeavour to prevent accidents, but these things have little foundation in fact. The Signal Engineer can nowadays so arrange the apparatus which the signaller works that he cannot make a mistake if he tries.

Thus at Retiro there are four passenger roads running into twelve platforms, a track leading to the docks, also a tremendous goods yard, and several sidings. To connect these together over 100 pairs of points are necessary, and these are protected by 160 signals.

Each pair of points and each signal is connected to a lever in the signal cabin, where stand the signalmen—in front of the "Interlocking Frame," and by pulling any of the levers in this frame only about a couple of inches, they move the points or cross-over to which that lever is connected.

The system of operation and control employed is that of the well known "Low Pressure Pneumatic" which uses compressed air to move the points and signals. This system is patented, owned, and has been installed by the British Pneumatic Railway Signal Co. Ltd., of Palace Chambers, Westminster, whose local Representatives are Messrs. Percy Grant and Co. Ltd.

We are indebted to Mr. S. L. Glenn, the Assistant Chief Engineer of the British Pneumatic Railway Signal Co. Ltd., for the following outline of the manner in which the various functions are performed.

The apparatus is worked by compressed air at the low pressure of 20 to 25 lbs. per sq. inch and there is also a reduced supply at a pressure of 5 lbs. per sq. inch for the control of certain valves.

Each switch and each signal is fitted with an operating cylinder and the admission of air to, or its exhaust from this cylinder causes the operation of that function.

To operate—the signaller pulls the lever—in this case a slide attached to an air valve. He has only to pull it about two inches—this sends a current of air down a pipe to the switch movement, which after operating correctly, sends another current of air back to the cabin, to move the lever automatically another inch. Then (but not only until the automatic movements of the switch lever has dollars. Luxuries had been given up everywhere, hence the loss in transport revenue; but with the return of normal times this would be made good. He had every faith in the future prospects of the country, and in the cordial relations existing between the National and Provincial authorities. A telegram was read out which referred to the present good prospects within sight.

Mr. John Gibson, the only shareholder who spoke, dwelt on the spirit of the Mitre Law, which he defined as the obligations laid upon the railways, and protested against the new interpretation which had been given to the law. It was a question whether a Pension Law was necessary. The fat profits of the Argentine railways only existed in the imagination of Argentines who had invested their money elsewhere.

INTER-AMERICAN TRADE

MR. MCADOO'S QUESTIONS

COMMERCIAL ARGENTINA REPLIES

Some three months ago there was published in these columns, and throughout the Argentine Press generally, a summary of a lengthy list of questions drawn up by the Secretary of the United States Treasury, Mr. Wm. McAdoo, arising out of the Pan-American Financial Conference that had recently been held in Washington. It sought to discover, as far as was possible by simple enquiry, what methods were likely to give the best result in so far as the strengthening of inter-American commercial relations was concerned, not only on the technical side, but also from the standpoint of closer knowledge and comprehension. A great annual conference, with Washington as its headquarters, was suggested; the formation of standing committees of a commercial rather than an official character; the improvement of existing means of communication; these, and sundry other matters of lesser importance were sketched in Mr. McAdoo's report, and the Latin American lands were invited to express their opinion of the ideas therein contained.

With a wisdom that does not always distinguish Government officials, the Minister of Finance turned this document over to the Bolsa de Comercio for consideration and subsequent drafting of a reply, and judging by the brief summary that has appeared, it is clear that the Minister's move has been justified. The special committee of the Bolsa have undertaken an immense amount of work in connection with this report, even admitting that the requisite data lay ready to their hand, and these facts will be of undoubted utility to the been carried out) the signal authorising a movement over that switch can be pulled.

Thus the engine drivers can move in perfect confidence that the points are safe for them to travel over at any permissible speed.

But how to prevent the signals being lowered to signal a train into a road which is already occupied, and so organise a collision?

This is accomplished by means of Track Circuit which enables a train to absolutely and automatically protect itself.

Thus in the case mentioned the first train would hold the signals behind it at the Danger position, so that they could not be lowered for the second train.

The whole of the roads over which passenger trains run, not only in the station itself but also as far as the next signal box outside—also pneumatically worked are being equipped with Track Circuit.

A diagram or picture of the tracks is suspended in front of the signaller at a convenient height—and this shows where trains, light engines and so on, are standing. It in fact shows the signaller at a glance which roads are clear and which are occupied, a great boon to the men especially at night.

It may be of interest to note that to signal and control the daily traffic into and out of Retiro Station, calls for upwards of 9,000 lever movements on the part of the signalmen and apparatus.

We desire to congratulate the Central Argentine Railway Company on being the first in this country to take up the question of installing modern safety signalling appliances. It is worthy of the Company's traditions, and speaking as members of the travelling public, we hope more of it will be installed, especially in view of the imminent advent of higher speeds and a more frequent train service worked electrically, in which the Central Argentine Railway has also taken the lead.

United States authorities, even if they have no direct effect on the course of trade. The question of maritime communication is ably handled, naturally from the Argentine standpoint. Stress is once more laid on the need for steamers that shall do the run between New York and Buenos Aires in fifteen days, but shipping people will be interested to note that the Bolsa committee very categorically states its inability to say to what extent the Argentine Government would be prepared to subsidise such a service. This is not the place to discuss the question of rapid transport to and from the United States, beyond pointing out that as yet there is not sufficient costly freight or passenger traffic to hold out the hope that 18-20 knot boats of the class that are used on the North Atlantic passage would pay for their running expenses, whilst given the state of the Argentine national finances it is very clear that if there is to be any subsidising done it will have to be put through "up North." The six-weekly service from Buenos Aires up the West Coast to San Francisco is an eminently sensible reminder that may bear fruit, and given the new trend of trade, it is quite possible that this idea will be put into practice, either by the steamers of W. R. Grace and Co., or by some new line constituted ad hoc. At the same time it must not be forgotten that for the present, with freights in the clouds as they are to-day, all talk of increased shipping facilities must perforce be pure theorising.

The annual conference at Washington is accepted in principle, but it is wisely pointed out that American delegates will do well to come more frequently to the Latin-American lands. Therefore the Bolsa suggests that although an annual conference is advisable it would be better if it were held one year in Washington, then for two successive years in Latin American cities, returning to Washington for the third year. Incidentally the Bolsa very handsomely offers the use of its magnificent new building for such time as the conference is held in Buenos Aires, an admirable suggestion and on a par with the whole spirit of the report, which is practical to a degree. The point is worthy of notice, for if any real good is to result from all this visiting and talking, the meetings must be something more than a reunion of amiable gentlemen distinguished in position and possibly "learned in the law" but completely dissociated with trade in all its many branches. In due course the report will be transmitted to the United States Treasury, and it will be interesting to note its reception and subsequent comment by the American Press.

IMPRISONMENT FOR FRAUDS

ON THE CO-OPERATIVA DE CONSUMOS.

An item of Judicial news is to hand regarding the affairs of the Cooperativa de Consumos, which may be of peculiar interest to those who have experienced losses in connection with that Corporation. It is to the effect that Dr. Racedo, Judge of the Criminal Court, has after careful enquiry found that the affairs of the Society were not conducted properly in some respects. Sr. Ezio Rombo-lotti, accountant, and Sr. José Ramon Jaca, formerly manager, have therefore been condemned to nine years' imprisonment for publishing false Balance Sheets and for fraud. This example is calculated to have a good effect.

Our Point of View: "Herald" Leading Articles of the Week.

OURSELVES AND NEUTRALS

FRIDAY, October 29, 1915.

It has been argued, with some show of reason, that while the policy which THE HERALD has followed in relation to the war, may be the correct one to follow in England, or in a British colony, it is not justifiable in Argentina, which is a neutral country. The main reason given in support of this contention is that a false impression can easily be conveyed to the mass of neutrals, by too free a discussion of our faults, and by too frank a disclosure of the real situation in which Britain finds herself. Those who argue in this way forget two things of vital importance to a decision on the question. The first is that THE HERALD circulates mainly among British people, and secondly that as the neutrals are not fools, it would be foolish to attempt to hoodwink them. If they find that a British paper, suspected of trying to influence them, is deliberately misrepresenting facts, or hiding them, or colouring them, then any influence which that paper might have had over them disappears for good.

The neutrals of Argentina have a press service that renders them quite independent of the English press. It is a lamentable fact that many of the newspapers printed in Spanish have come under German influence, but there are still some journals of immense influence and prestige, which enjoy well-deserved confidence, and which give the very fullest news of all that transpires in the various theatres of war, and in the countries participating in the struggle. Whether we publish the fact that there is a split in the British cabinet, or whether we do not; whether we comment on the fact, or remain silent, the neutral knows all about it, and he forms his own opinion. We can do no good by trying to delude him, but we can do an immense amount of harm by deluding ourselves. That is the important point. We can well ignore the point of view of the neutral towards our conduct of the war, especially when the facts cannot be overcome, but we are committing suicide if we refuse to face those facts, and to profit by the lessons which they convey.

And on this same question of what the neutral may think it should be pointed out that if he is a reader of English papers, he can get all the first-hand information he wants as to the English point of view from the London press. It is literally correct to say that thousands of copies of London newspapers come to this country. They can be bought in any of the bookstores, and the local English paper that is foolish enough to trifle with the truth merely lays itself open to ridicule. Furthermore the British censorship, which has been assailed for its muddling policy, permits thousands of uncensored private letters to come here giving most precise details of many events which it is considered almost a crime for the newspapers to touch upon. The neutral cannot be deluded upon any facts relative to the actual progress of the war, or the condition of affairs in the United Kingdom. He is only susceptible to influence as to the causes of the war, and the character of the people engaged in it, and these are the points on which the cunning German propagandists concentrate.

If we want to influence the neutral favourably toward us, we cannot do it by refusing to print news and views. We can do it—if he be a reader of the English press—by demonstrating to him that we know our own faults, realise our weaknesses, and have the courage to endeavour to rectify them. The British Nation has nothing to be ashamed of because it was caught absolutely unprepared for war. There is no disgrace in admitting that so far we have not beaten the enemy we intend to beat.

THE INNER COUNCIL

SUNDAY, October 31, 1915.

When a nation casts aside its worship of precedent and grapples seriously with a difficult problem, the victory may be said to be already half won. That is our view of the position of Britain to-day. From the opening days of the Great War the Empire has been confronted by difficulties greater than any which have threatened the Empire during the last hundred years. For reasons which have been emphasised by the principal writers in the Press, and which have been even more strongly urged by Mr. Will Irwin and other neutral authors, there has been a painful lack of capacity in coping with those difficulties. Where we had a right to expect order we have only found chaos; when the progressive spirits of the nation asked for bread, the Government grudgingly threw them stones. To some extent the individual minister and the individual member of the community have been responsible. They worshipped the constitution; they sanctified precedent; consequently little was done.

Fortunately there is now a break in the clouds. After "allowing" Mr. Lloyd George to perform miracles which would, under the old order of things, have earned for him retirement, the Cabinet has at last realised

There is no crime in discussing what are still our weak points, or in endeavouring to rouse ourselves to a degree of organization and government that will give us victory. If we have not the strong government we want, there is no harm in admitting it, and asserting that we will yet provide it. The ostrich secures no respect from the hunter because it hides its head in the sand. We gain no sympathy from neutrals because we refuse to discuss our faults, especially when those faults are made apparent by results visible to the world. Our diplomacy failed to restrain Bulgaria, or to win Greece. We cannot repair the damage by describing Germany's claim to success in the Balkans as tragic and absurd when patently it is neither. Unfortunately when a man like Lord Lansdowne says we have failed, and the press of the world publishes his statement, we cannot, if we would, picture our management of the Balkan problem as a brilliant success.

We have a way in which to overcome German attacks on our national character and honour. We have a way to retain the sympathy of neutrals, but that way is not by hiding facts, or glossing them over. THE HERALD has done its duty on the question of German propaganda. It may be trusted to do its duty to the cause it represents, and to conserve the best interests of Britons in this country. We say the best way to help ourselves, and help Britain, is to awaken our people to a grim realisation of all this struggle means, and all it calls for in the way of effort. If we can get all our readers to face the situation fairly and squarely; to evade no obligation and no responsibility; to recognise where our governmental system at home is weak, and to determine that it shall be strong; to face the prospect of a long war with determination and with confidence, and to agree that nothing is satisfactory that does not bring forth the best and the utmost that is in the nation, then we are not wrong, but absolutely right. There is plenty to be done here to help our cause. It can only be done when we face the task in the proper spirit. And when that spirit is inculcated here, it will react to no small extent on the spirit of our people in the United Kingdom. THE HERALD is not published for neutrals but for Britons, and the salient feature of its policy, so far as it concerns the people for whom it is published, is its saneness.

that the old unwieldy Parliamentary machine cannot control the situation in a manner sufficiently competent to ensure early victory. A dictatorship suggested itself to THE HERALD many months ago as the ideal remedy, if not an immediately practical one; and it was for that reason that we advocated the formation of a Council of Six, with the co-operation of the War Chiefs. That policy has now been followed by the Government.

It is true that the personnel of the new "Inner Council" is not entirely what we had hoped; but the skeleton of the fabric is there, and there is now a basis for the upbuilding of a strong controlling body such as is essential to Britain if the future of the Empire is to be assured.

Frankly we had hoped that the formation of an "Inner Council" would follow the resignation—voluntary or compulsory—of Mr. Asquith; but as he remains Premier, his inclusion in the Council is essential. So is that of Mr. Bonar Law, who is the official Leader of the Opposition. Our opinion of Mr. Asquith is already known. An excellent domestic politician, a clever statesman, and a skilful leader, he is not the man to guide the destinies of the Empire through a great war. Mr. Asquith takes the line of least resistance when trouble arises; he is a party politician, and, outwardly, at any rate, believes criticism of the Ministry to be the jaundiced opinion of anti- or renegade-Liberals. It is for those reasons that we believe him to be the wrong man for a national Cabinet in time of war.

With Mr. Bonar Law we have no quarrel. He is the Leader of the Opposition, but the circumstances of his selection for that post are sufficient indication of his quality. Mr. Bonar Law was appointed in order to prevent a split between the Chamberlain and Long factions. A skilful speaker on Imperial Preference, he lacks guiding strength and initiative. He escapes condemnation for the simple reason that he is almost mediocre.

It is in the remaining members of the Council that its real strength lies. Mr. Lloyd George, after a period of political activity of the value of which there can be two opinions, has developed into the outstanding man of to-day. The manner in which he has organised Britain's Munitions industry is proof of his capacity as a man of action. His renunciation of his pre-war anti-conscription views is evidence of his broadness of vision. In short, Mr. Lloyd-George—more than any of the generals in the field—appears to us to be the leader who can and probably will bring the Empire safely through the dark days of the Great War. In Lord Curzon he will probably have an excellent supporter. Lord Curzon has already proved his value to Britain as Viceroy of her Indian Empire. He possesses the spirit of the Imperialist and the experience of a ruler of millions. Essentially a man of action and impelled by the highest motives he can scarcely fail to bring into the Council that strength and ability for which the nation has long been calling almost in vain.

Mr. Balfour is a man of many parts. Although his Chief Secretaryship did not commend itself to some Irishmen, he has invariably been regarded as an ideal departmental man. His knowledge of the minor details of organisation and his pre-eminent ability as a Cabinet Minister must necessarily assist in the consolidation of a structure without precedent in recent British history. Although of a different type, the inclusion of Sir Edward Grey was, of course, inevitable.

Finally, there is Lord Kitchener. Of the War Lord there is nothing new to say. We know even though we do not invariably admit it—that he failed to supply Sir John French with munitions in the early days of the war; nevertheless Kitchener has performed a task that could not have been undertaken successfully by any other man in the Empire. He has turned peaceful England into a vast military camp; he has furnished an

THE LIBERALS AND CONSCRIPTION

TUESDAY, November 2, 1915.

For some time past little or nothing has been heard of the heated controversy in the United Kingdom over the question of conscription. The cablegrams have not given us recently any reports of strong speeches and violent political differences, such as we had received regularly for months previously. Several weeks have passed without one minister contradicting another as to the necessity for conscription. This silence does not, in our opinion, suggest that the subject has been dropped, but there is strong presumptive evidence that opposition to the abandonment of the voluntary system has very largely disappeared. In this connection it is interesting to study the London newspapers, particularly the Liberal journals, and to notice to what an extent they have changed their attitude on the much debated issue. And in that change it is highly satisfactory to discern the rapid approach of such a state of the public mind as to warrant the belief that presently there will be but one opinion on all the great issues of the moment, and automatically the greatest causes of criticism will disappear, though it is hardly probable that all critics will be silent.

The majority of the Liberals and their newspapers have retired from an untenable position in regard to conscription. They have ceased to treat it in the light of a party question and to oppose it simply because it had never been a plank in their political platform, either in time of peace or war. Most of them have realised that there is something much bigger and much more important than party considerations, or even sacred principles of political faith, in the advocacy of conscription, and that is the prime consideration of the safety of the Nation. In other words they now appear to recognise that such a question as the introduction of compulsory military service must not be decided on any other ground army in the field such as has never been known since Britain became a nation; he has inspired the people with that determination to win which inevitably spells victory. More than probably, Lord Kitchener, with Mr. Lloyd George, will be the real dictators in the near future.

Little remains to be said. Britain has now her "Inner Council"; her munitions industry is now organised. The great remaining problem is the supply of men. Volunteers have, it is reported, been coming forward in increasing numbers during recent weeks; but is the present number of recruits sufficient? To reply to this query is difficult; indeed, it can only be answered by the Secretary of State for War. Under old conditions, it is to be feared that a demand for compulsory service would have been followed by dissension in the Cabinet, and that indecision would have reigned supreme. More than probably, dissension will arise if the demand is made in the future; but one thing is apparent, and that is, if Mr. Lloyd George and his friends forming the "Inner Council" go forward with such a demand, it will be granted. If Mr. Asquith and the old brigade of professional lawyer-politicians oppose the request, then they will be swept aside. The new Council is far from ideal in composition, but it is the germ of a great idea and it possesses some of the ingredients necessary to ensure success; moreover, whoever may hold office as Premier in days to come, the probability is that an "Inner Council" will control the situation to the end of the war.

than the needs of the Nation. It is not for a Unionist to say that conscription shall be imposed because he is in favour of it on political grounds, or for a Liberal to oppose it for exactly opposite reasons.

We get the Liberal point of view well expressed, and we believe sanely and rightly expressed, in the following quotation from a letter by Mr. Maurice Hewlett, the well-known author, to the Daily News, and in the subsequent extract from an article in the same paper from the pen of Mr. A. G. Gardiner, the Arch-Priest of Liberal journalism. Mr. Hewlett says:—

"It may be that we are being driven to Universal Service by certain circumstances. I have not the means of judging. Nobody has but the Government. If the Government is divided upon the precise effect of the evidence before it, let it first make up its own mind. Having done that it should then take the country into its confidence."

Mr. Hewlett then suggests that the country will loyally follow the decision of the Government. Mr. Gardiner thus simplifies the issue:—

"If this war can only be won by conscription, there is not one of us who would resist even that hateful necessity. How could we? No price is too high when honour and freedom are at stake, and if our most cherished traditions had to be part of the price, we should surrender them if the proof were beyond dispute."

In the same files of the newspapers we have been studying we find similar opinions expressed by leading representatives of the trades unionists. All are honestly opposed in principle to conscription, but all have now come round to the point where they can cheerfully cast aside every other consideration but that of the National welfare when deciding upon grave problems.

The attitude of these Liberals and Labourists is precisely what THE HERALD attitude has always been on the question of conscription. We have always pointed out that in this war it is not what this or that party wants that should count. It is what the Nation wants. Conscription we know is hateful to the vast majority of Liberals, and perhaps to a majority of the British people of all creeds and political faiths. We are opposed in principle to anything but a limited system of compulsory military training on the basis of the Swiss idea, or as adopted and adapted in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, but if the necessities of the moment require the most rigid of the Continental systems, then we, and everybody else should not oppose it. The decision rests with the Government, which as Mr. Hewlett says, is the only body capable of judging of the necessities, and it was because the old Ministry would not make a decision, but alternately flattered and browbeat the people, while its members contradicted one another, that such violent criticism was directed against the Government.

The purpose of all the criticism that was launched was to force action on such questions as conscription, and to get the Government and the people to realise that only one consideration can be entertained, and that is the consideration of the Nation's welfare. Political faiths, traditions, everything, must if necessary be abandoned. The artificial lines dividing the Nation into a number of fighting political factions must be obliterated. There must be direct and effective control and administration.

As we remarked when examining the personnel of the new "Inner Council" we may not have secured perfection in that body, but the germ of a great idea is there. With such a body we believe we shall hear little more of the wrangle over conscription. If the "Inner Council" decides that conscription is necessary, conscription will be brought into force, and according to their new profession of devotion and loyalty to the Empire's cause the Liberals and other anti-conscriptionists will quietly acquiesce.

THE EVILS OF INDIFFERENCE

WEDNESDAY, November 3, 1915.

Those who have been in doubt as to the efficacy of German propaganda, and the evils of indifference resulting from that doubt, should take seriously to heart the lessons which are now being driven home to the public mind of the United Kingdom regarding what has happened in the Balkans.

It is being forcibly impressed by such authorities as Dr. Dillon, Mr. Stephen Graham, and Sir Alfred Sharpe, that Germany's success with Bulgaria and Greece, was almost entirely due to her active propaganda, and these same writers indicate rather plainly that unless the Allies wake up sharply to a realisation of the importance of an antidote to Germanism, they will awaken to something like disaster, because Greece and Rumania will yet follow Bulgaria. This forecast appears rather gloomy, and perhaps unsound, in view of the latest news from Rumania, but it has unfortunately become necessary to overstate a national danger in order to get action.

Dr. Dillon states that his efforts to warn the Allies of the perfidy of King Ferdinand were systematically suppressed by the Censorship. If this be true—and in view of what has happened there does not appear to be sound reason for doubting it—can it be wondered that Dr. Dillon is now cynical or pessimistic? Mr. Graham speaks of the entire absence of any effort on the part of Britain to provide an antidote in Bulgaria to the impression produced on the inhabitants of that country by the German-made war news. Is there, or should there be, surprise that the Government, and particularly the diplomatic service is violently criticised on the grounds of incompetency and stupidity? There might have been some excuse for the cause of the Allies being unrepresented in an active manner in the Balkans during the first month or two of the war, but when it was seen, as it should have been seen, that Germany was swamping the country with German views, designed to win sympathy for her cause, and active support wherever possible, then it was the bounden duty of the Government to endeavour to counteract this influence in some way.

It is assumed that a government's duty is to maintain the prestige and interests of the nation it governs wherever that prestige and those interests exist. If they do not exist, and it is desirable for national purposes that they should, then the duty is also upon the government to promote them. Britain's national interests, and her prestige abroad are entrusted to the care of the Foreign Office and the diplomatic and consular services. Generally speaking these services have broken down badly under the strain of this war. It may be that the system under which they work brought about the failure, but that does not alter the fact that they have failed. With considerable justification many harsh things might be said about British diplomats and Foreign Office servants. They are prompt to resent criticism, and some of them are quite interested in the movement to have all critics branded as traitors, or at least as sensation-mongers. Judged by their utter incapacity to grapple with the problem of German propaganda, and by their lamentable failure to perform what was understood to be their duty in such countries as Bulgaria and Greece, they might very well, with greater justice, deserve the traitor's brand themselves, did the British people at large not know that the real offence of which they stand condemned is not the activity of the traitor, but the slothfulness of the fool.

However, it is not desirable that hard words should be bandied about. Up to the moment British officialdom

MR. ASQUITH'S SPEECH

THURSDAY, November 4, 1915.

The speech of the Prime Minister to the House of Commons again furnishes a striking example of the capacity of the politician for occupying a considerable amount of time in the process of saying little or nothing. If there is one outstanding feature of Mr. Asquith's utterance it is his confession that there has been a lamentable want of wisdom in the direction of affairs. On this occasion we hear nothing in the way of an appeal for silence on the part of the critics, and the speech is in reality a wholesale confirmation of the worst that has been said about the Government in relation to its conduct of the war. The naval attack on the Dardanelles is admitted to have been undertaken in direct defiance of the advice of such a man as Lord Fisher, and Mr. Asquith practically says that political and not military considerations dictated that particular affair. It may stand to the credit of the Prime Minister, on the score of courage, that he accepts full responsibility for having disregarded expert advice, but it does not redound to his credit on the score of wisdom.

The worst feature of Mr. Asquith's speech is that he has still failed to convince the Empire that his Government has any clearer notion now, than it had months ago, of how the war should be conducted. He tells us that he has full confidence in the ability of the Russians to "roll back the enemy"; that the Government is satisfied with the progress of the recruiting campaign; that "we are determined to stick at nothing in order to win," and that Britain is determined not to allow Serbia to "become a prey to the sinister and nefarious combination of Germany, Austria, and Bulgaria." We regret that we cannot look on this as anything much better than word-spinning. Of what value is the determination to win if the Government will not seriously prepare to win? What is the use of talking about protecting Serbia from a ruffianous attack, when the Government, through incompetency, has lost the best opportunity to prevent the attack? To talk about thrashing a bully is idle unless one is capable of doing it, and is ready to do it.

We know we are determined to win, but the speech of the Prime Minister does not indicate that his Government has so far evolved any serious plans by which victory may be made reasonably certain. Nobody desires to know what those plans are, did they exist, and nobody outside of those entrusted with carrying them into execution should obtain that knowledge. But Mr. Asquith does not inspire the hope that there are any plans. Neither does he suggest that the same confusion responsible for many of the blunders that have been so tardily admitted, is not to prevail in the future, though fortunately we have reason to believe that the recent reconstruction of the Cabinet may bring about much desired improvement. It is hardly to be wondered that a man like Sir Edward Carson resigned from a Cabinet that could not or would not evolve a definite plan of campaign. Sir Edward Carson with all his faults is essentially a man of action, and unlikely to adhere to a Government that could not plan to win, as well as determine to win.

This is the vital necessity of the moment—the deliberate formation of definite plans to secure victory, and the provision of a strong and vigorous executive to carry those plans out. So far criticism has succeeded in getting at the truth of the situation, and in dragging facts out from beneath a cloak of dissimulation. Now the task is to get proper action on those facts. It is quite apparent that the British people do not want any more trifling. They are quite prepared to go through to the end, no matter how far distant victory may be. All they want to know is that there are proper plans for victory in the hands of men who are complete masters of the situation. No patriotic Briton is unreasonable enough to expect miracles, and he does not want his Government to conduct the war in such a way that only by miracles can victory be assured. He knows that his Nation has the men, the resources, and the money to carry the war through to success, and that by the proper use of those great advantages the end is certain.

has not recognised the importance of the campaign on which the Germans have concentrated so much energy. We should think the recognition has now been made, and it is to be hoped action will follow. Here in Argentina there is much to be done, and the need for it is urgent. THE HERALD has for months thrown all its energy and influence into the effort to counteract German propaganda. We believe that the accuracy of our views has been amply demonstrated, and with such unfortunate examples before us as the German successes in Bulgaria and elsewhere, the whole community should now recognise the folly of indifference.

SWEEPING THE BALTIC

BRITISH SUBMARINES PREVENT CARGO TRAFFIC BETWEEN GERMANY AND SWEDEN.

London, Nov. 3.

The "Morning Post's" Stockholm correspondent notes the continued progress of the blockade against Germany. He says that although the Swedish ferries have resumed service, they carry passengers and mails only. A recent Anglo-Swedish agreement was made whereby they no longer transport any goods whatever.

INIQUITOUS PAVING CONTRACTS

(La Prensa.—October 28).

A recent incident leads La Prensa to open up anew the question of the faulty methods employed in drawing up paving contracts in the Federal Capital, and the indifference of the municipal authorities to the manner in which the paving laws are used to further private ends. Drawn up to benefit at one and the same time the paving contractors, the private owner, and the Municipality, their base rests on the fact that when the majority of property owners in a certain distance, usually a square, have agreed to pave the street, the minority are forced to come into line with the terms of the contract, which must receive official sanction.

The property owners benefit by the long credit which the law gives them, authorising payment either in paving bonds or at stated intervals, at a price no greater than that of the last tender, whilst the Municipality benefits owing to the valorisation of the said bonds, which are thus a financial resource, utilisable at need for various operations. In the case of the Calle Boyaca, to which La Prensa more especially refers, it has however been shown that several signatures of property owners have been falsified in order to obtain the requisite majority, whilst there have also been sundry other irregularities all going to show that there has been bad faith in many ways. La Prensa maintains that this is not unusual, and that on more than one occasion legitimate protests have been brought forward too late to be of service. Small property owners therefore find that unnecessary improvements are bringing heavy charges upon them that they are in no position to bear. The paving contractors, when they set about collecting the necessary signatures, use municipal employees to call from house to house, and the unlearned owners are deluded into thinking that the paving will be carried out on account of the Municipality, whereas what they are actually signing is a private contract. This La Prensa terms incorrect procedure, and calls upon the Municipality to investigate the matter.

MINISTERIAL REPORTS

(La Nación.—October 28).

The report of the Minister of Finance for 1914, in common with all official documents, has made a tardy appearance and its information is already out of date. Delay is attributed to the difficulties of compilation and impression, an excuse that does not do away with the fact that it comes out after the parliamentary session has closed, whereas it ought to have appeared in the month of May. The same complaint applies to the budget report. There is however a further objection raised by La Nación, dealing with the text of the documents. These ought to be plain statements of fact, not expressions of governmental opinion which correspond solely to the presidential message wherein H.E. comments on the state of the nation, promised reforms, and other matters which he may deem it necessary to mention in accordance with his scheme of Government.

In no respect does this function correspond to the various ministers, seeing that Art. 89 of the Constitution expressly prohibits these functionaries from taking any decision on

PRODUCTION AND THE RAILWAYS

(La Prensa.—October 29).

Bad times notwithstanding, the chiefs of the great railway enterprises in this Republic have not shown themselves pessimistic. That, says La Prensa, is the outstanding feature of the speeches made at the annual meetings of the Southern and Western Railways. Messrs. Bell and Simpson both avow themselves firm believers in the economic potentiality of this Republic, despite decreased dividends and diminished reserves, and although all the companies may not be able to talk in a similar tone, it is a triumph for this country that such remarks should be possible, given the general state of the world's trade. Indeed in one of the reports it is predicted that the close of the war will see an era of great prosperity, and, says La Prensa, it is logical to suppose that the companies have laid their plans accordingly.

Mr. Simpson declares the Argentine Railways to be in their infancy; alongside the lines there are 13,000,000 acres of cultivable soil, whereof but 2,000,000 are actually under the plough. This La Prensa declares to be a fundamental statement which must have been inspired by some concrete idea. It is moreover part and parcel of a problem that has been frequently discussed in the columns of La Prensa, and is co-related to the question of tariffs, since in this country the populated and productive area practically pays a tax to capital for the services rendered to the unproductive zones. This does not mean that the railways have gone ahead too fast, but rather indicates that the peopling and utilising of cultivable camp has not been carried out on a sufficiently extensive scale. Hence the statement that the Argentine railway system is in its infancy is fully warranted. La Prensa remarks that up to the present the only practical scheme for increasing production has been that associated with the formation of an Agricultural Bank, and adds that if to this idea be linked up a plan of colonisation worked in connection with the various railway companies a vast field of effort is opened up.

their own account, save in so far as the internal administration of their departments is concerned. Hence, argues La Nación, they cannot arrogate to themselves the right to express their opinions on the work of Government. If it were otherwise Government would be at sixes and sevens, the ministers airing their views at will, the while the President was not in accordance with their outlook upon affairs. The report is a statistical and explanative document simply and solely, embodying facts and figures gathered in one special department, and it ought not to contain anything in the nature of a comment on the work of the Government. If a Minister has an idea or an initiative that he wishes to bring forward it should first be laid before the President and his Cabinet; if accepted, then it is the Minister's place to stand sponsor to the measure in his official capacity. In short, the Ministers are the secretaries, agents, and managers of the various matters concerning their several departments, their special and peculiar function being that of legalising the presidential imprimatur, it not being their province either to replace or to override this latter function, either individually or collectively.

THE FRENCH MINISTERIAL CRISIS

(La Nación.—October 29).

It looks very much as though the resignation of M. Delcassé was but the fore-runner of the ministerial crisis that has just been brought about in France, remarks La Nación. As yet the real reasons for the change have not been made public but it is reasonable to suppose that they are similar to those that led to M. Delcassé going. The foreign policy of France, as of England, in regard to the Balkan States, where the only advantage gained by the Allies has been the obtaining of permission from Greece to land troops at Salonica, has brought about a state of opinion in certain quarters which is contrary to the Government. Hence, seeing that the war has not interrupted political life to any great extent, this opinion has reacted on the Chamber of Deputies, where the party that was formerly considered to be in accord with the policy of M. Caillaux appears to have regained its lost ground.

Withal, continues La Nación, the fact that M. Briand has been entrusted with the task of organising the new Ministry appears to point to the intention of M. Poincaré to maintain the character of the Cabinet under which the war began, namely on national rather than party lines. And this presumption is strengthened by the list of the probable Ministers. Among the names mentioned figures that of M. Combes, which La Nación believes to be an indication of a wish to avoid the closer association with the Vatican which was freely mentioned on the occasion of the visit of the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris, M. Amette, to Rome. In any case, however the Ministry may finally be constituted, there are no reasons to suppose that France will alter her international policy. Methods may change, but not the ultimate aim, whilst in so far as internal politics are concerned there is, says La Nación nothing of importance pending that is likely to divide public opinion, as is the case in Great Britain in respect to obligatory service.

THE ROSARIO STRIKE

(La Nación.—October 30).

Despite the trifling causes that led to the strike of dock labourers in Rosario, the trouble still continues, several men being yet away from their work. The original difficulty, namely the question of the half-hour halt in summer as in winter, was solved at the outset. Unfortunately owing to the ill-advised action of some of the leaders, the strike still goes on, the terms in dispute having been but recently brought forward. Despite the energetic attitude of the workmen, it has not so far been very successful, remarks La Nación. Efforts have been made to get other trades in, so far without success, and the dockers have to fight the thing alone. In fact as La Nación points out, this strike is like most other strikes in that it has been organised by a few leaders and trade unions, fomented by certain journals, leaving the workman to be the only real sufferer.

There was no need to strike over the question of whether a half hour's rest in the course of the morning should be granted. Indeed La Nación is inclined to see the cloven foot of political influence in the fact that the Free Labour Union has been dissolved. In any case the strike cannot be called deserving of either moral or material support. It may be said to have been still-born, since it is notorious that work is far from abundant to-day, and the men who have left their jobs have been at once replaced by others, without in any way affecting the work of the port. Hence they are in a difficult position, and La Nación counsels them to remember the lesson when next they are tempted to listen to vain promises that are impossible of fulfilment.

IN A PROVINCIAL PRISON

(La Prensa.—October 30).

Under the heading, "revelations of an official report," La Prensa draws special attention to the state of affairs in the prison at Resistencia as commented upon in a recent report by Sr. Nikolsen, the inspector whose opinions on the conditions of affairs in the Chaco and Formosa timber industries called forth general approval a short time ago. So pertinent are the observations that no course remains for the Government save to alter the state of affairs complained of without further delay, irrespective of the reforms that may be planned for some indeterminate future date. This urgency is due, remarks La Prensa, to the fact that prisoners condemned to a sentence of one or two years are incapacitated for the rest of their life owing to the terribly unhealthy state of the gaol. Many prisoners have caught tuberculosis there, and as they are not even sent into the prison hospital, the danger of infection is great.

Add to that the awful state of the cells, where, according to the Inspector, the air is so thick that it gives one the impression of being a solid substance. Lack of funds prevents the installation of any means for washing or even providing a shower bath, despite the fact that Resistencia in summer is one of the warmest spots in the Republic. Small wonder that the unfortunate peons therein confined come out of gaol when their sentence is up, fit for no further work. Imprisonment is meant, says La Prensa, to improve and uplift the criminal, not to atrophy his energies and leave him permanently affected by a fell disease. Something must be done at once to change this condition, and the Minister of Justice ought to proceed without delay. This is not a case for theorising, nor for lengthy investigation, but for deeds.

THE PRICE OF BREAD AND MEAT

(La Prensa.—October 31).

Contrary to general expectation, says La Prensa, the high cost of living in Buenos Aires still continues, and in the case of many articles of daily consumption, prices are on the increase. The sale of bread and meat, the two classic staples, is being maintained at prices governed solely by the law of supply and demand, and without any regard to, or consideration for the necessities of the public. The price of bread has again reached the high level, which some months ago was the cause of such loud and vigorous protests. While it is true experimentalists have endeavoured to introduce a more economical quality of bread, it cannot be said with any truth that the substitute has found satisfaction with the people so long accustomed to a better article.

As regards meat here also prices are rising in such a manner as to seriously affect the economical equilibrium of the community. Notwithstanding that meat is becoming every day dearer in the public markets the authorities have not as yet seen fit to intervene in the problem, a solution of which is essential to the well-being of the public. In the circumstances, says La Prensa, and in view of the examples of other Governments and other municipalities in similar cases, it is pertinent to ask whether the authorities do not wish to intervene in the public defence, or whether they find themselves confronted by a problem superior to their personal capacity.

NO WONDER.

"When I was shipwrecked in South America," said Captain Bowsprit, "I came across a tribe of wild women who had no tongues."

"Mercy!" cried one of his listeners of the fair sex. "How could they talk?"

"They couldn't," snapped the old salt. "That's what made 'em wild."

NATIONAL CAPITAL

(La Nación.—October 31).

The recently published bank balances, says La Nación, go to show that the enormous amount of capital lying idle in the banks, and the corresponding commercial stagnation existing as a result of this inactivity, continue to be steadily augmented. The general paralysation is attributed in some quarters to a suggestion of panic, but as La Nación points out the diagnosis does not coincide with the facts. The prospects of the country are certainly favourable. The expansion of trade and the ready market for Argentine products to-day are factors which justify a spirit of optimism. There is no cloud on the horizon of prosperity; consequently the theory of panic as the reason for the present stagnation of capital is untenable. Apprehension, the fear of failures, and a general want of confidence were justifiable two years ago during the crisis brought about of the slump in land values. Since that time however, confidence has been gradually restored and the country has been passing through a period of convalescence—a convalescence which is being unduly and unnecessarily prolonged in view of the facts as they are to-day. The abundance of money should be a powerful incentive to commercial activity, lending facilities for profitable and remunerative investment, and it is the mission, not of the banks, but of the commercial houses and syndicates to endeavour to release this stagnant capital and direct it into its natural channel that it may find employment in the industry and commerce of the country, thus serving to increase the general prosperity both public and private.

A SECRET SOCIETY

(La Nación.—Nov. 2.)

It is generally believed, says La Nación, that not only are there no secret societies, but that there ought not to be any such bodies. Evidently a double error, since in Buenos Aires a new secret society has just been formed. Such associations go back to the remote past, down to the days of ancient Egypt. The latest, like its predecessors, proposes to remedy sundry social evils that it would not be right nor prudent to reveal to the uninitiated. "Art," states the first manifesto of the new cult, "has not yet been able to get a foothold in our midst." It will be the duty of the new and secret society to see that it is brought amongst us, says La Nación. As a matter of fact, the society is apparently a bond of Argentine artists, its name is Truth, and if its members are not actually artists, at any rate, remarks La Nación pithily, they believe they are. As for its name, Truth was ever unveiled, hence perhaps the covering of anonymity.

La Nación states that a circular—vulgar means—first put them in contact with the new organisation; a cyclostyle message that is doubtless now circulating from hand to hand, since the new cult believes apparently in secret publicity. Its members propose to frequent all places where "Art"—with a capital A—is cultivated and make their voices heard in praise or blame. But this criticism will be strictly impersonal. This anonymity is common to all secret communications, says La Nación, though at times they are said to be signed in the blood of the signatory. The "Truth" does not go as far as that, but careful examination shows that the circular which has reached La Nación bears, perhaps inadvertently, the digital impressions of the president or secretary of the new body.

THE CONDUCT OF PUBLIC FUNCTIONARIES

(La Prensa.—Nov. 2.)

Referring to the proper course to be pursued by any public functionary who may be suspected of unfair or illicit practices, La Prensa sketches out a line of action which ought to tend towards the maintenance of that spotless integrity which is his admitted characteristic. The case arises out of the complaint of some purveyor to the Municipality, who affirms that complaints are made against the manner in which he fills his contract, complaints that he believes arise out of either interest, ignorance, or ill-feeling. The matter cannot be left there, La Prensa very rightly remarks, and pending the passing of legislation tending to maintain the prestige of public functionaries, the latter must take individual action.

The tendency is to give all public employés full opportunity of ventilating any aspersions on their character or the manner in which they discharge their duties, in the Courts. It is to the interest of the administration that this should be so, and it ought to be obligatory on the functionary accused to clear his honour publicly. A cashier accused of gambling, for instance, should not remain at his post, and a dishonest employé ought to be called upon to resign if he does not think his case sufficiently strong to take the accusation against him to the Courts. Employés accused of improper conduct in the discharge of their obligations should realise that silence is no proof of their innocence, and their superiors ought to compel them to speak out and refute the charges.

THE MUNICIPAL MUDDLE

(La Prensa.—November 3.)

On more than one occasion, says La Prensa, the state of affairs municipal subsequent to the dissolution of the old Municipal Council has called for comment in its columns, and matters have gone so steadily from bad to worse that to-day the situation can only be described as having reached a complete deadlock. Nothing now remains of the ordinary legal method of procedure; there is no longer a council; and the municipal commission is but a figurehead that has lost all prestige in the community owing to its inactivity. Practical results have borne out every word of what La Prensa has for some time past been saying relative to the ridiculous position of the last-mentioned body. What is its position vis-à-vis the Intendente? It can do nothing, and the mere fact that it has voted in favour of an investigation into the acts of the Intendente means nothing, seeing that this gentleman is appointed by the government, to whom alone he is responsible.

Direct appeal is made to the government against municipal decrees; the police are not authorised to support the municipal ordinances; the Intendente says nothing, and the Commission stands by in a neutral attitude as though the matter were no concern of theirs. Some twenty employes are dismissed without warning; they too appeal to the President of the Republic. What does it all mean, asks La Prensa once more save that the law under which the commune is governed has failed of its purpose, which means that the Intendente and the Municipal Commission ought to take the only decorous course that lies before them, resigning their various offices. They have no one to blame but themselves for such an undignified closure, since it would be difficult to find a clearer proof of absolute unfitness for the management of public affairs. It shows that social position does not of itself imply fitness to rule; government being a technical matter, embracing a need for ideas, experience, and a sense of the fitness of things in general. These attributes have been lacking in almost every case, hence the inevitable crisis.

A LOCAL WEDDING

MAY—THOMPSON.

Wednesday, Nov. 3

A pretty and fashionable wedding was celebrated last evening at Christ Church, Barracas, by the Rev. Morrey Jones. Miss Emily Dorothy Thompson, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Montague Thompson, of Calle Peru 1707, and formerly of Sandymount, Tipperary, Ireland, was married to Mr. Bernard William Anson May, son of Baron and Baroness May, of Kenilworth, Walmer, England.

Mr. Lawrence H. Adams was the best man, and the bride's elder sister, Miss Janet Douglas Thompson, was the bridesmaid.

The service, a semi-choral one, was led by Mrs. Marie Eidelberg, who sang as a solo Gounod's "Song of Ruth." A large number of friends were present at the Church for the ceremony, and a reception was later held in the Church Hall.

The bride looked charming in a wedding dress of white silk tulle and Malines lace, with a charmeuse train and tulle veil. Accompanied by her father, who gave her away, she carried a bouquet of white roses and carnations.

Miss Janet Thompson was dressed in pink crepe frock with hat to match.

Mrs. Roy C. Barnes and the many lady friends of the brides were responsible for the beautiful church decorations. The happy couple leave to-day for Montevideo, where they will take up their residence.

Mr. May, the bridegroom, before his departure some time ago for Montevideo, was the honorary secretary of the British Society.

Telegrams of congratulation were received from Mr. W. H. Durnford and the bridegroom's fellow employees in the National City Bank at Montevideo.

Many and beautiful were the presents, and amongst them was a watch bracelet, the present of the bridegroom to the bride, and a set of cufflinks, the bride's present to the bridegroom. The bridesmaid received a signet ring from the bridegroom.

Amongst the large number of presents were the following: Mr. and Mrs. C. Montague Thompson, table linen; Baron and Baroness May, cheque; Miss Janet Thompson, silver fruit stand; Mrs. Eaton (aunt of the bride), cheque; Mr. W. Thompson, cheque; Mr. and Mrs. Frier, cheque; Mr. L. H. Adams, silver pepper castors; Miss Aubone, lace table centre; Mr. A. T. Adie, silver cream jug; Mr. and Mrs. Roy C. YOUNG MEN'S SOCIAL CLUB

SOCIAL EVENING AND PICTURE RAFFLE.

An enjoyable social was given by the Young Men's Social Club at 666 Viamonte, last night.

Flowers adorned the tables and a large collection of paintings and drawings, imitations of the great masters, were on the walls. Among them an original black and white drawing sketched by a member of the club attracted considerable attention. It portrayed a rural scene in England.

This original effort was raffled and as fortune would have it, was won by the president of the club himself, Prof. H. G. Wellby, who will keep the drawing for his son who is a soldier in the British Army in France.

This singular incident produced quite a salvo of applause.

After that event various dances were given, in which both young and old folks joined.

RISING IN USHUAIA

OFFICIALS WOUNDED.

Dr. Ruiz Moreno, the director of National Territories, yesterday afternoon received a telegram from the Governor of Tierra del Fuego, Sr. Fernandez Valdez, in which it is stated that a rising has occurred in the penal settlement of Ushuaia.

The rising has been quelled, according to the official statement, without serious consequences.

It would appear that two prisoners, German Lopez No. 45, and José Bejarano No. 3, are chiefly responsible for the affair, in which the Governor of the establishment, Sr. Gregorio N. Palacios, received a wound in the shoulder and another official, Toribio Pereyra, was also wounded. Both the prisoners were shot down and dangerously wounded.

No further details are reported.

CHILIAN - ARGENTINE COURTESY

MUTUAL ACKNOWLEDMENT OF FRATERNITY.

Evidence of the good feeling between the Sister Republics of Argentina and Chile is evidenced by the proposal by "La Union" of Santiago, that Argentine sculptors shall be invited to compete in the designs for the monument to Admiral Blanco Encalada. This, it is said would be no more than a fitting recognition of the Argentine Nation's homage to General O'Higgins.

The Government should also provide the bronze for the statue of O'Higgins not, that the matter is one of great importance as to expense but as contributing still further to affirm the close friends trip between Chile and Argentina and as a compliment to the Sculptor, Sr. Cordova.

and Mrs. Dreyer and family, a china tea set; Mr. W. H. Durnford, silver salt cellar; Mr. and Mrs. B. Edwards, Doulton flower pot; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Foster, silver butter dish; Mrs. F. END OF ROSARIO STRIKE

A telegram from the Governor of Santa Fe, Dr. Ortiz, announcing the close of the Rosario strike writes a conclusive Finis to that movement. This is a decided blow to the Federación Obrera de Rosario, and should be deterrent against future interference with business by declaration of strikes on more or less frivolous pretexts. That the Government considers that something requires adjusting seems likely, as the Interior Minister, Sr. Italo Bonacosa, is busied in trying to remove any reasons that existed and last traces of conflict.

Chacabuco 431 — Rincon 689ARGENTINA'S INDUSTRY*Its Greatest Need*MORE INITIATIVE AND LESS INTERFERENCE

With the European War now in progress for close on a year and a half, the neutral countries are well able to turn round and take stock of its effects, beneficial or prejudicial, to their own immediate and future interests. How the balance works out for the small neutrals in Europe it is difficult to say. In all likelihood they are not benefiting to the extent that some people would have us believe, the benefits of trading at high prices with the Central Empires being off-set by the costs of maintaining armies mobilised on a war footing and the difficulties attendant upon high freights and the dislocation of the usual trade routes. Two countries there are, however, which have escaped these drawbacks, Argentina and the United States. The latter, as is well known, is flourishing exceedingly; indeed, its trade balance has grown to such an extent that there is now a strong possibility of New York replacing London as the financial centre of the world, given a lengthy continuance of the war.

It is when one turns to consider local conditions that one finds the results of the past sixteen months distinctly discouraging. Argentina has not been hampered by difficulties of communication, her produce, and even her few manufactures, have been snapped up at her own prices, yet far from having seized the golden opportunity presented to her with both hands she has, collectively considered, let chance after chance slip by, and it is not too much to say that a sudden cessation of the war would prove a serious calamity to this market. One is prompted

BLOODSTOCK SALESHARAS TRUJUL.*Wednesday, Nov. 3.

A very poor lot of bloodstock came under the hammer yesterday afternoon at Palermo. The attendance was small and prices ruled low and there was but the minimum of interest displayed.

Five colts by Arcadia, two fillies by the same, a colt by Don Pepe and a filly by Hexagon, were all that were offered.

to this theme by many matters noticeable in every-day commercial life, whilst the article from La Nación, paraphrased elsewhere in this issue, dealing with industrial credit, does but help to throw into relief the culpable negligence that leaves the Republic more or less as it was when the war began. A few individual firms have made much money, but it cannot be honestly said that Argentina is much better off, or more ready to take her place among the great self-supporting nations, than she was in August of 1914.

It is not so much a case for official action, as our contemporary appears to think, as for individual initiative backed up by freedom from official interference. There are many, many things that can be made and sold locally; glassware, woollen cloth, woodwork, paper, metal castings, linen flax, glucose, preserves, to pick a few from a lengthy list, but the uncertainty of official interference, coupled with the fear that the war may end suddenly, leaving the nascent industries unable to compete with foreign goods dumped here at cheap rates, has led to all these things being made on such a small scale as to have no effect on the general trading situation. In the ordinary course of events Argentina would do better to import much of what she could actually make herself, but events to-day are extraordinary, and from conversations with practical men of affairs one gathers that it is not so much the fear of a sudden end to the war that militates against enterprise in this direction, as it is the certainty that any new industry or trade will be inspected and legislated out of existence directly it begins to show signs of making substantial profits. Factory legislation is desirable, and the worker has a right to demand that his Government protect him from the soul-less employer to whom factory hands are but cheap machinery to be worked to the fullest capacity of their endurance and turned away when useless. But between this attitude and that of the constant interference of salaried officials who, to speak frankly, take any post regardless of their competence merely on the off chance of being able to pick up some technical knowledge that will enable them to inflict fines and penalties on the industrial world, there is a great gulf. What is wanted is more private initiative, and that one fears will not be seen here until the man who puts his all into plant for manufacturing anything, from tin cups to woollen mills, can feel sure that he will be able to calculate his profit and loss on the basis of his costs without being subject to having all his calculations rendered of no account to satisfy what in many cases is but a mere official caprice.

Melbourne CupWON BY PATROBAS.

London, Nov. 2.

A cable message from Melbourne gives the result of the race for the Melbourne Cup as follows:—

1. Patrobas.
2. West Court.
3. Carlita.

Patrobas is owned by a lady, Mrs. Widdis, who has also won the Caulfield Guineas and the Victoria Derby.

SMUGGLED ARMSACTIVE CUSTOMS SEARCH.

The Customs Administration is vigorously hunting for arms among recent deliveries of goods, the discovery of an illicit consignment having created the suspicion that a brisk importation of weapons is proceeding. An oven offers considerable facilities for storage of small fire arms, and in fact, in articles of this kind and safes, a large consignment of shot-guns, revolvers, automatic pistols, and similar articles have been discovered. It is believed that recently some 20,000 have entered the country without the formality of paying duty. The Customs authorities believe that they have been defrauded of over sixty thousand dollars gold by these fraudulent entries, and the most stringent measures will be employed to stop them.

SECRET POLICE FUNDS

The Parliamentary Committee of Accounts have been questioning the Minister of Interior on certain matters connected with the Presupuesto in his department. Dr. Ortiz brought with him to the rendezvous Comisario Cesares, who gave full details to the Committee of the items, chiefly connected with Secret Police Expenditure, in which they were interested.

Some of these are members of Workmen's Societies, on which possibly, for Mafia, Black Hand, or Camorra reasons, the police deem it expedient to keep a vigilant and unwinking eye. Still others are connected with Anarchist Societies, after the manner of Azeff, late of Moscow, and at the Anarchist Congress at Rio de Janeiro two "comrades" from the Argentine Secret Police took part in the proceedings. Surely an expenditure of money is regrettable, but, in view of the kind of people watched, it must be considered necessary and well expended. Moreover, it seems to give efficient results.

DROWNINGS IN DOCKS

Very heavy relatively is the toll of life taken by the muddy waters of the docks from its frequenters. He who falls into the depths has little chance, unless seen and speedily rescued, of escaping from the sheer stone walls that rise without foot or hand hold straight from the water. Two more deaths are reported: a "found drowned" and a suicide.

The watchman on a Royal Holland Lloyd barge, Lucas Giguravits, aged 50, Austrian, disappeared at mid-day on Tuesday and was taken out of the water yesterday at 2.30 p.m.

Yesterday morning at 6 an unknown man threw himself overboard from the British steamer Kelvinbank and was never seen after.

R.N.R. COMMISSION FOR SHIPMASTER

NEARLY 30 YEARS WITH LAMPORT AND HOLT.

Captain H. Russell, of the Lamport and Holt liner Canning, is a well-known member of the merchant service who has been granted a commission in the R.N.R. H.M.S. Canning, as she is now known, has been fitted up for special Admiralty service, and Captain Russell still retains her command. He has been in the service of Messrs. Lamport and Holt for nearly 30 years, 21 of which have been passed in command of the fine steamers Maskelyne, Canova, Rossetti and Canning. Previous to entering steam he was for 14 years in sail. Among the many ships in which he sailed being the Glentora, Harriet Wardle, Soukar, Hurunin and Cedric the Saxon, owned by Messrs. Williamson and Williams.

Captain Russell's association with the port of Liverpool is an extensive one, and few shipmasters have a wider circle of friends in that port. Of genial disposition and sunny temperament, his welcome is always assured. The commission conferred upon him by the Admiralty is a fitting tribute to his skill and qualifications as a seaman and a navigator of the highest rank. Captain Russell is not the only one of his family doing their "bit," as he has a son, who is a 2nd lieutenant in the Liverpool King's, now serving "somewhere in France." He is a keen member of the Mercantile Marine Service Association.

THE GREAT OFFENSIVE

Gordons in Famous Charge

LETTER TO A B.A. RESIDENT

A communication from a soldier who actually took part in "the great offensive" of the last week in September is of peculiar interest, and such a document THE HERALD has the good fortune to present here. It is a letter from Mr. Peter Mitchell, of the Machine Gun Section, 4th Battalion Gordon Highlanders, who was in that hot corner, to his brother, Mr. R. T. L. Mitchell, of the London and River Plate Bank. In the course of his observations he remarks:—

"I am still alive, and really I have to count myself very lucky, for we charged the Germans on the morning of Saturday, Sept. 26. No doubt, you will have seen something about it on the papers, but don't believe all you read.

"We were very successful in our attack and took three lines of German trenches on a front about 200 yards long. We had the Army Corps Commander and the Divisional Commander up congratulating us on our good work. He said that he knew when he put us up there that we might not succeed, as it was a very stiff part of the line. However he said that our armies were doing very well in the South. Our machine gun section officer said he believed the Germans would be out of Belgium in about a month. Since Sept. 26 we have advanced about 20 miles, and I read in the Daily News we got posted up for us that the French had broken through the Huns' last line of trenches. This means that they will be fighting in open country. We had the misfortune to lose three of our machine guns, but, as the officer said, "You can easily indent for guns, but not for men." I was in charge of No. 5 gun and was in the second support when the charge took place, but had to move up to first support after the charge, as one of the third guns went over the parapet and got knocked out.

"By eight in the morning, my own gun was the only one still in action, and I can tell you I felt excited. I had no N.C.O. to give instructions. However, the Huns did not try to attack our trenches, so I was all right except for the shells. By Jove they did shell us too! One of the prisoners told us that they intended attacking us at 4.30 a.m., but we made the assault at 4 a.m. We were up against the Prussian Guard, so you may guess they gave us a hot time. Some of our chaps who were lucky enough to get back had got their helmets. I didn't bother about souvenirs as long as my own helmet was safe. One of my pals is missing and another was killed by shrapnel when standing beside me. I kept my nerves all right when we were going through it, but I was not able to sleep for two whole nights after we got back to the huts. Jim Watson, whom perhaps you know, was Captain of B. Company. He made an attack on the first line and got wounded badly in the arm. It will give you an idea of what we have been through when General Haldane of our Division said we were second to none. It is something to have that said about us, isn't it? As "John Bull" said, "The next charge our Brigade went into there would be nothing but souvenirs left." I think that is right. By the look of things I don't think it will last long now. Our General let out more than he meant to, but I think we deserved to know as our attack on Hooze was only a sort of blind to prevent the Germans sending too many men South to stop the boys there. The boys there.

"We had Lord Kitchener round on inspection the day before the scrap, and he told us we had very hard work in front of us for the next few days. By Jove! he was right!

I never expected to get through it myself. The shells seemed to be everywhere. I don't think we shall

The day of the attack I smoked fifty cigarettes in three hours so you can guess how they go. Somehow they seem to help your nerves steady. They certainly aid mine, one of the chaps that came out in a draft got a pair of motor goggles blown right off his forehead by the blast of a shell. The machine gunners all got motor goggles for the gas shells. They are far better than the helmets, etc. that we have."

KITCHENER'S MYSTERIOUS MISSION

Now Said Not To Be To India

ASQUITH'S ADDRESS AT THE GUILDHALL

Comments on the Alleged "Yellow Press"

London, Nov. 10.

The official Press Bureau authoritatively denies the truth of the report that Earl Kitchener's real destination is India and that he is proceeding thither via the Balkans.

ASQUITH'S ADDRESS

At Guildhall Banquet

STATEMENT ON KITCHENER'S MISSION

London, Nov. 10.

The banquet at Guildhall last night following the swearing in of the new Lord Mayor of London was attended by the Cabinet Ministers, high officials and diplomatic representatives of the allied and neutral countries.

At the banquet as at the procession during the day, khaki was the predominant colour.

As the feast drew to a close, M. Paul Cambon, the French Ambassador to London, rose and addressed the assembly. He said that the long war showed the spirit by which the nations were animated.

"On one side, we see quiet courage, faith in an ideal of justice and liberty, the resolve to make use only of legitimate means of defence.

"On the other, we find thoughts concentrated on gain, disregard of all principles of humanity, destruction of undefended towns, the taking of innocent lives, a perverse joy in doing ill.

"We have beheld a noble woman whose crime consisted of her generosity condemned to death by a German courtmartial and a German officer executing the sentence with his own revolver.

"Such deeds are a disgrace to a nation and its governors; but they produce not terror, but indignation.

"The German believes in the superiority of material force, because he is incapable of understanding anything else but force. When the day comes when force shall be his no more, he will no longer have the means of resistance as have noble Belgium and heroic Serbia."

The British Prime Minister, Mr.

Asquith, who followed the French Ambassador, said:—

"After fifteen months of war, England has effected the union of parties. To-day, as on the first day of the war, we are persuaded that we are on the right road for certain victory."

The Prime Minister, whose speech was followed with the closest attention, renewed the vow made a year since, that Great Britain and her Allies would never sheathe the sword until the independence and rights of small nations were restored and Europe delivered from the dominion of brute force—not until valiant Serbia, who is struggling against overwhelming forces, is compensated for the prodigious sacrifices she is now making.

Mr. Asquith added that "The hypocritical yellow Press of Lord Northcliffe," by spreading the malignant and false rumour of Lord Kitchener's resignation, compelled the Government to reveal a State secret. He said that Lord Kitchener, at the insistent pressure of his colleagues, had consented to undertake a journey to discharge a mission of great importance in the theatre of war, which was connected with the landing of troops.

The Prime Minister spoke highly of the British and foreign Press while condemning the so-called "yellow Press" saying that the suppression of the "Globe," the editor of which "sneezed when Lord Northcliffe took snuff," was an act of patriotism.

"The publication referred to," continued Mr. Asquith, "added to the gravity of its offence by repeating the lying statement, not accepting the official word of the Government."

"The statement published by the 'Globe' contains not a word of truth."

Mr. Asquith declared that not even in the case of the gravest offences such as might even have imperilled the wellbeing of the nation, had the Government acted in contravention of the liberty of the Press, but in the present instance, when, despite the institution of the Censorship, abuses such as that under reference were committed it became necessary for the country to take such steps as were calculated to prevent their recurrence.

The Minister added that Field Marshal Lord Kitchener was discharging a mission wherein he was accompanied by representatives of the other Allied Powers—a mission for which his undeniable familiarity with all the Eastern theatre of war rendered him indispensable.

Appeal for Truces

TO ALLOW THE BURIAL OF THE DEAD.

London, Nov. 10.

The International Red Cross has appealed to the rulers of the belligerent nations to arrange for truces between the opposing forces to allow the burial of the dead.

The Association appeals to the most elementary sentiments of charity and pity, asking that all the Powers involved in the war shall adopt measures for acquainting the families of the fallen with their fate, and that positive instructions be sent to the commanders of the forces to mitigate the needless aggravation of sufferings through the war.

enjoys the confidence of the Allies, of the King, the Government and the British nation. To his great gifts as a soldier he unites those of an eminent organiser, and there is no doubt whatever that his mission will be crowned by success."

Mr. Asquith, as did also Mr. Balfour who followed him, condemned King Ferdinand of Bulgaria for his traitorous action, and King Constantine of Greece for his vacillation and disloyalty to Greece. As regard Serbia, he declared that the Allies were determined to ensure for her the future that she deserved.

Italy elicited the admiration of the Prime Minister for the valour displayed by her army, which, foot by foot, was driving back the Austrians.

Mr. Asquith concluded by pointing out how the Allies were working in close union, and declared:—

"Be the war short or be it long, we shall not stop until we have assured the independence of the small States of Europe of the régime of force."

The new Attorney-General, Mr. F. E. Smith, who was loudly applauded, said that the matter of the notes exchanged between England and her cousin America was not for warriors to deal with; it was merely a question for friendly discussion between the legal elements of the two countries.

Lord Reading, who was also cheered, said that the result of his recent visit to the United States had been to draw closer with a golden bond the relations between the two Powers.

"Notes or no Notes, I firmly believe that there are ninety millions of American hearts beating in unison with the Allies."

The "Ottawa Free Press" publishes a leader under the heading "A Perverse Traitor," accusing M. Lavergue of trying to kill recruiting and suggesting that he should be dealt with as a traitor.

It is believed that the suggestion is put forward in order to compel M. Lavergue to declare clearly what his opinions are, and to make certain other party leaders who are not displaying much activity to change their attitude.

M. Lavergue recently wrote a letter to Major-General Hughes, Canadian Minister of Defence, expressing the opinion that Canadians were submitting to a form of Government which was worse than that imposed by the Prussians upon Alsace.

A telegram from Bridgeport states that captain George Wilson of the steam barge Mary Anna reports having sighted the yacht Eclipse, recently purchased by some Germans for the purpose, as is believed, of attacking British and French commerce from the United States.

The captain says that the yacht was passing the Fryingpan Shoals at the time, during a heavy gale. As there were no signs of life on board and the vessel appeared to have great difficulty in keeping her deck above water, the Mary Anna approached and got ready to heave a line aboard the Eclipse. At that moment four men came on deck and hoisted sail increasing her speed to such an extent that it was impossible for the Mary Anna to overtake her. The Eclipse disappeared rapidly with her lee gunwale buried under water.

The Minister is stated to have said: "Rumania's prohibition of the transit of munitions through this country for Bulgaria is a proof of her sympathy with the Allies. She denies that she adheres to any policy which may bring her profits without the corresponding sacrifices; but at the same time she is not prepared to incur sacrifices without any probability of success."

Paris, Nov. 10.

A war correspondent who is with the Russian forces reports that the German armies on the Eastern front have lost about twenty divisions but have still 800,000 infantry and 80,000 cavalry provided with numerous guns, innumerable quickfiring and miles upon miles of wire entanglements.

A Russian officer high in command informed the correspondent that the second phase of the war in Russia is concluded, the German operations having been checked. The third phase will begin early next spring when the Russians will commence the expulsion of the invaders, working in unison with the French and British who will open a fresh offensive in the West, so that blows will be struck at the Germans on both fronts.

GERMANY'S VANISHING STRENGTH.

Heavy losses and continual wastage continue on the German front. As an example the report of a German prisoner taken by the Russians South of Drinsk is cited.

Despatches from General Headquarters report:—

"On the Trentine front both our artillery and our aerial service are displaying increased activity."

"On the Alto Cordevole on the night of the 8th instant the enemy attacked in force attempting to retake the summit of the Col di Lana. This violent attack was repulsed. Our troops assumed the counter-offensive and, pressing hard upon the retreating enemy, took by assault the summit of Mount Siev, which rises to a height of 2424 metres to the north of the Col di Lana."

"In the Carnic Alps also the artillery was intensely active. Our gunners dispersed groups of the enemy in the Koder valley and on Mount Loden, and shelled Saifnitz station at the head of the Fella valley."

"On the heights to the south-east and south-west of Gorizia, on the night of the 7th, strong columns of infantry, after much cannonading and use of hand grenades, attacked our positions, but were driven back leaving the ground covered with their dead and wounded."

"On the Carso yesterday nothing of importance occurred."

During the night of the 8th one of our dirigibles, travelling among dense masses of clouds, reached the zone between the Isonzo and Vippacco, descended below the clouds and bombed the enemy's trenches and batteries. Discovered by the reflectors the dirigible was bombarded by the enemy but returned unscathed to her base."

16 SHOTS FIRED BY ASSASSINS.

Shanghai, Nov. 10.

This afternoon the Governor of Shanghai, Admiral Then-Juc-Heng, was assassinated and his secretary badly wounded.

The two were motoring to a reception at the Japanese consulate in honour of the coronation of the Japanese Emperor, and were accompanied by Prince Tsai-Suun. The motor car slowed down owing to the congestion of traffic, and at this moment a man threw a bomb at the vehicle which missed the mark.

The assailant then joined by another man, jumped on to the steps of the car and emptied their revolvers into the Governor's body. The Admiral received sixteen wounds, five of which were in the neck, and other shots broke his legs. He was conveyed to the hospital where he expired immediately afterwards.

The police, after a severe struggle, succeeded in arresting the assassins, who were found to have 200 rounds of cartridges in their possession.

It is expected that the monarchical régime will not be established until after the war is over.

CANADA'S BURDEN

THE COST OF THE WAR.

Ottawa, Nov. 4.

An official statement relative to the Dominion's war expenditure for next year says that it will be very large, amounting to about $1000 dollars per man; this being the calculated cost of raising, equipping and maintaining our troops under arms.

This war estimate will probably be exceeded on account of the enormous expenditure of ammunition, and the heavy strain on artillery and rifles. The expenditure for next year is on the basis of a force of 250,000 men, aggregating $250,000,000. Interest and charges in connection with this and past war expenditure will amount to over $150,000,000.

The Minister also states that the present output can be greatly increased if necessary.

It is known that the number of hands employed at the factories has been tripled, so as to obtain the quickest and best results.

"When it becomes a difficult matter to advance we place Russian prisoners in front and thus lessen our losses."

In other letters found on dead Prussians or in the possession of prisoners, the sentence occurs:—

"We do not know how to make use of the Russian prisoners. In future I expect that we shall put them in front of our defences and let their comrades kill them."

COURAGEOUS "TRAMP" CAPTAIN

COMMANDER OF S.S. WOODFIELD REFUSES TO SURRENDER TO PIRATE.

Madrid, Nov. 5.

It is reported from Melilla that the British steamer Woodfield, bound for the Balkans with an important cargo of war material, was stopped by a German submarine, between the Spanish and Moorish coast.

The German commander ordered the men to take to the boats, but the British, having a light gun on board, refused to do so and showed flight.

The Woodfield was soon sunk by the submarine, and the crew got into four boats, three of them arriving at the middle of the night at Alhucemas and Penon de Velez. The fourth boat is missing.

Some of the men are wounded.

THIRTEEN MEN SAVED.

ATTACKED BY AEROPLANES

EXPERIENCE OF A CORK STEAMSHIP.

London, Nov. 5.

A story is told by the captain of the Cork steamer Avoca on its arrival at Manchester, and is published in the Liverpool "Journal of Commerce," respecting an attack on October 30 upon his ship by three German aeroplanes.

One of these, a large battle plane, dropped 36 bombs, some of which missed the steamer by only six or seven feet. On running out of bombs the aeroplane opened fire with a machine gun. The others used rifles. The bullets struck the sides and decks of the ship, but the crew were uninjured.

The newspapers, commenting on the adventure, say that the Germans are trying this method of attack upon British merchantmen in view of the failure of the attempt to maintain the blockade by submarines.

"REAL HEROES"

MARCONI'S OPINION OF BRITISH AIRMEN.

Rome, Nov. 6.

Signor Guglielmo Marconi who has just returned from a visit to England and France says that he went to England with the special object of studying the working of the British aerial service.

The distinguished electrician says that the British nation is determined to carry on the war to a finish. The way in which the soldiers are being trained is marvellous. The military airmen are real heroes and render inestimable service to the army.

The German Zeppelin raids on the English coast and capital have had little moral effect, and none at all of military significance.

The British army is faithfully doing its duty.

Respecting the French, Signor Marconi said that they are magnificent warriors. They remain in the trenches serenely indifferent to the enemy's shells.

General Joffre is a great man. He despises honours and is only desirous of serving his country.

SWEEPING THE BALTIC

A PEOPLE AT WAR

WOMEN IN THE SERBIAN TRENCHES.

London, Nov. 4.

General Gruit of the Serbian army has arrived in London.

In a conversation with a Press reporter the General said:—

"There are thousands of women in the army. When I left there were more women than soldiers. They are not organised into special battalions. Some wear a complete uniform for the sake of comfort, others wear a skirt and a blue tunic. The younger women go with their brothers or their husbands in every class.

"We cannot prevent it, and besides they inspire the men, marching side by side with them. In the trenches they show no fear. No one in Serbia is afraid, and the women do not lose their nerve under fire.

"We realise that the Great Powers are our friends. Every soldier feels that if it is necessary for an army to be sacrificed, he is willing that it should be ours. There is yet time to save Serbia, but assistance cannot come too quickly."

"PLATOON OF DEATH"

BERLIN TO THE BOSPHORUS

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION RESTORED.

New York, Nov. 8.

They are thus in complete control of the railways to Turkey.

DISTRESS IN GERMANY

HIGH PRICE OF FOODSTUFFS

Paris, Nov. 8.

A manifesto issued by the Socialist Democrats of Germany on account of the high price of food is reproduced by the Swiss newspapers.

The document says that the situation of the working classes is unendurable, and that great distress exists throughout the country. The winter is approaching and then things will undoubtedly become worse.

The German Government is petitioned to do everything in its power to remedy such a state of affairs, otherwise the country will be ruined and the working classes will be plunged in misery.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS

U.S. NOTE TO BRITAIN

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTS BY THE NAVY

Washington, Nov. 8.

The text of the United States Note to the British Government protesting against the inconvenience to American commerce caused by the British blockade of German ports has been published.

The Note, which is very long, is of a less emphatic tone than were those to Germany respecting the submarine campaign.

The United States Secretary of State says that the American Government cannot reasonably be expected to advise Americans against whom the British Prize Courts have pronounced an adverse sentence to take their case to the British Courts of Appeal, which he does not consider competent to exercise an, unrestricted application of international law; nor can he recommend them to abstain from presenting their claims to the British Government direct through diplomatic channels.

The United States Government can only continue to deny the right of detaining neutral vessels at sea on mere suspicion and of taking them to a British port to examine them or to obtain proof that the cargoes, shipped at neutral ports, are in reality destined for the enemy and then dealing with them as contraband. A blockade founded in part on such methods is illegal and indefensible.

The legal course suggested whereby to obtain recompense for the damage sustained is essentially defective for such purpose; and in many cases justice has confirmed the violation of the rights of peoples.

The United States cannot impassably view their rights being subordinated to the interests of others; nor can they admit the argument that the exceptional geographic position of Britain's enemies requires or justifies oppressive or illegal methods.

The United States Government therefore desires seriously to insist that relations between itself and that of His Britannic Majesty must not be guided by a policy of convenience, but by established international laws, the observance of which on the part of the United States was exacted by Great Britain when the former nation was enveloped in a struggle for existence.

BOMB OUTRAGE IN N. YORK

ATTEMPT AGAINST ITALIAN CONSULATE.

New York, Nov. 6.

This afternoon a dynamite bomb exploded within three doors of the Italian Consulate in this city. The explosion was tremendous and caused great alarm, but it has been ascertained that no lives have been lost.

It is believed that the incident has some connection with the plot recently discovered by the police directed against the munitions factories which are noted for their sympathy with the Quadruplice.

ITALIAN RESERVISTS THROWN TO THE GROUND.

New York, Nov. 6.

This afternoon a bomb was thrown from the roof of a six-storey tenement at 222 Lafayette street and exploded in the gutter, shattering many of the windows at Nos. 226-230, partially occupied by the Italian consulate.

At the moment of explosion a group of Italian reservists were standing opposite the building and were thrown down on the pavement.

UNITED STATES AND MILITARISM

IMPORTANT SPEECH BY PRESIDENT WILSON

New York, Nov. 5.

At a banquet given by the Manhattan Club in honour of Mr. Wilson last night, the President delivered a speech of considerable political significance.

The President stated that the proposal of the Government was to be prepared for the defence of the Republic, but not for making war on others.

It was held that to meet military necessities in the Philippines, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the frontiers, coasts and fortifications, and the inland military posts, a force of 400,000 men was required. This would be obtained by enlisting annual contingents of 133,000 men for three years, the men to remain three years on active service and another three years in the reserve.

He paid no attention to the theory that the good faith and honour of the country should be safeguarded at all costs. He spoke as trustee and guardian of the nation's rights in matters which affected her sovereignty.

The nation was too great and generous to attack anyone; but it was not too generous to defend the rights and liberties of the United States if they were imperilled or impaired.

The only real uneasiness that had been caused to the Government arose from the talk about foreign sympathies. These persons with foreign sympathies were nothing more than the representatives of the opinions of small circles which it is time that the nation called to order. Should occasion really arise for the nation to assert herself, her voice will be heard in accents which will leave no room for doubt.

U.S. MINISTER IN BELGIUM

ILL-HEALTH SAID TO BE REASON OF MR. WHITLOCK'S RETIREMENT.

New York, Nov. 5.

A telegram from Berlin says that the reports which have appeared in foreign newspapers that the German Government has requested that of the United States to withdraw their Minister at Belgium, Mr. Whitlock, is absolutely untrue.

The Minister is leaving because of failing health. The Government had no reason to ask for his withdrawal, since his personal activity on behalf of Miss Cavell and other British prisoners never caused dissatisfaction.

ITALY AND GERMANY

FRIENDLY RELATIONS CONTINUE

Rome, Nov. 5.

The relations between Italy and Germany are again arousing much interest among observers of political affairs.

Berlin reports that there are thousands of Italian workmen still in Germany enjoying the protection of the military authorities, while in Italy also many Germans remain.

Negotiations are in hand for an interchange between the two countries of products which do not bear directly on the war.

In well-informed circles it is considered that when Italy denounced the Triple and declared for the Entente she limited her action to Austria-Hungary, not desiring to extend hostilities to Germany.

PEACE PROPOSALS

ITALY SIGNS UNDERTAKING BY THE ENTENTE.

Rome, Nov. 5.

"Il Messaggero" announces that the Italian Government has declared its adherence to the agreement signed by the Triple Entente in London on September 5, 1914, binding themselves not to make peace with the enemy independently of each other.

GERMANY TIRING OF WAR.

London, Nov. 5.

The Press in discussing the visit of Prince von Buelow to Lucerne and the rumour that he is entrusted with a tentative mission regarding opening preliminary negotiations for peace, hold that there are several reasons to believe that the rumour has some foundation.

According to the accounts given by travellers who have recently arrived from Berlin and Vienna, the situation of the Central Empires does not inspire general confidence.

The prospect of another winter campaign is not by any means to their liking. Articles of food are dear and scarce; and the Governments of both countries are finding it necessary to call out men who were formerly disqualified as unfit for service.

The forces of Turkey and Bulgaria are doubtless a welcome addition to those of Germany and Austria-Hungary, but they cannot materially influence the result of the campaign.

The Bologna paper, "Il Resto di Carlino," even says that the terms on which Germany is prepared to make peace are known to officials at Berne, and proceeds to give an outline of them. Germany will withdraw from France, Belgium and Poland, the two last-named countries to be autonomous. She will not ask for a war indemnity, but she will demand the restoration of her colonies, an international arrangement for the freedom of the seas, and the celebration of treaties wherein she is to enjoy consideration as most favoured nation.

MEETING OF "DELEGATES?"

Rome, Nov. 5.

A long report from Monsignor Marchetti, Papal Delegate at Lucerne, upon the negotiations with Prince von Buelow arrived at the Vatican by special courier this morning.

Despite emphatic denials, it is strongly maintained that a mission is under way for Switzerland to prepare plans for a conference between the representatives of the belligerent powers.

A prominent English personage arrived at Berne simultaneously with the arrival of Prince von Buelow at Lucerne.

The newspaper "Mattino" draws the conclusion that the presence of these men presages a conference. A large hotel at Berne has been ordered to prepare for the reception of a number of personages. It is added that certain Italians of political prominence have also arrived in Switzerland.

Throughout Italy the presence of Von Buelow in Switzerland is regarded as an event of extreme importance.

"SOUNDING" MANOEUVRES.

Washington, Nov. 5.

Notwithstanding the denials of European capitals, with the exception of Petrograd, that peace plans are under consideration, the diplomats of Washington are absolutely convinced that the process of sounding the Powers on the subject is attaining important momentum. The President and his closest advisers are watching the manoeuvres among the diplomats with keen interest.

"THE GLOBE" SEIZED

London, Nov. 6.

The Government has seized yesterday's and to-day's editions of the "Globe" as containing news and notes not approved of by the Censor.

RISINGS IN BULGARIA

ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN GAINING STRENGTH.

London, Nov. 4.

Travellers from Bulgaria have informed the Milan correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" that the utmost disorder prevails in that State.

At Stara Zagora there have been risings of a very serious character. When the Turkish troops arrived there they were stoned by the populace.

At Jamboli also there have been anti-German tumults. The prefect of the town was assassinated.

At Djumaja there were rebellions which were finally quelled by the troops shooting the people down. A battalion of infantry from Belogradich mutinied and all the officers were arrested.

The strict censorship established by the Government prevents the truth being known about the chaos which reigns in Bulgaria. The people refuse to fight against Russia or with the Turks, and there is danger of great and important popular movements.

EMULATING THE HUN

BULGARIANS "ANNIHILATE" SERBIAN VILLAGES."

London, Nov. 4.

The general comment on M. Momchiloff's statement of the condition of affairs in Serbia where the Bulgarians "have been obliged to annihilate whole villages," is that a good deal of this is presumably made in order to justify the Bulgarians using German methods of terrorism in dealing with the civilian population.

BIG GUNS ABANDONED

AUSTRIANS' SEVERE LOSSES IN RECENT FIGHTING.

Rome, Nov. 4.

"L'Idée Nazionale" publishes a report from Udine which says that the Austrian regiments fighting on the Isonzo and Carso fronts on October 21, 22, 23 and 24 lost more than half their effectives during that time. Being unable to save their pieces of heavy artillery, the Austrians rolled them into ravines and torrents, the guns including pieces of 12 and 16 inch calibres.

The positions occupied by the Italians before Gorizia have enabled them to bombard the Austrian defence works situated at the farthest eastern point of the city.

THE HUNHOLY ALLIANCE

KAISER, FRANZ JOSEF, FERDINAND AND TURKEY'S SULTAN EXCHANGE GREETINGS.

New York, Nov. 4.

A despatch from Berlin says that the Kaiser, Emperor Francis Joseph, King Ferdinand and the Sultan have exchanged messages of congratulation on the re-establishment of communication across Bulgaria between Germany and Turkey.

The telegram from the Kaiser to the Sultan says that it is a fact of historic importance, and will have its influence on the destinies of those nations which have taken part in the work.

ROSARIO NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Nov. 9, 1915.

The Late Anglo-German Hospital.

I understand that steps are being taken to liquidate the furniture and effects of the late Anglo-German Hospital. The Committee in charge have decided that this is the best policy, as no firm offer has been made for the institution as a going concern. The chance to acquire valuable furniture and fittings at bargain prices is one which should not be lost. Nothing definite has been arrived at in regard to the furniture and fittings.

The Boots that Walked.

British captains and ships' companies are warned to be on guard against a gentleman who goes down to the ships and undertakes the repair of their footgear. The trouble is he always mislays the address of the ship and never finds his way back. He is a one-eyed customer, and keeps the surviving optic glued on the main chance. He might be about 23; and he gets a hearing on account of the fact that he speaks English. The s.s. "Trevyn" has the captain, engineer, first mate and four apprentices united in a chorus of lamentation for a total of ten pairs of boots!

Echoes of the Boating Disaster.

The body of Americo Balduzzi, one of the three victims of the fatality which occurred on the Paraná on All Saints' Day, was recovered at an early hour on Saturday morning, and that of Alfredo T. Baer, was found early on the following morning. The third body, that of Luis Americo, is believed to be still in the whirlpool.

The burial of Americo Balduzzi took place at San Salvador Cemetery, yesterday at 4 p.m., and that of Alfredo T. Baer an hour earlier in the Protestant Cemetery. Both funerals were largely attended, and many beautiful wreaths were sent.

Shipping.

Three British ships only in port: s.s. "Aldersgate," Capt. T. W. Baker, loading; s.s. "Eastville," Capt. R. Mc Kay, loading; s.s. "Tempus," Capt. T. Hitchings, loading.

Epworth League, L.T.C.

The Tennis Tournament (Mixed Doubles) held last week proved one of the most successful yet held, both as regards entries and the justification of the handicappers' awards. The weather was exactly right, and the courts—on which an experiment has been made with a new kind of surface material in which brick-dust is one of the chief ingredients—were in splendid order. The standard of play amongst the members has improved very greatly during the last month or two. Results:

The Markets.

The maize market, after the recent firmness, is again sagging, to-day's best buyers' prices being $4.95; sellers however were not offering to decline, so that prices for spot maize may be described as nominal. Futures have also the same tendency, December having been done to-day as low as $5.05. New wheat advices are also weak, January being nominal in the neighbourhood of $10.20, whilst operations for February and March have been done to-day as low as $9.83. The market for both articles closes with a lower tendency.

Freight Market.

There is not much to say about the freight market as practically nothing has been done. The supply is scarce, and November and early December steamers would be worth at least 85s.

The Strike.

The strike is over, and the men are wondering what change they have managed to get out of it.

BRITISH PATRIOTIC SOCIETY

A general meeting of the British Patriotic Committee was held on the 5th inst. at St. Bartholomew's Hall, with Mr. W. J. Martin (President) in the chair, and an attendance of about fifty people, including Messrs. A. H. Unwin (Vice-President), R. Fisher, S. S. Dickson (H.B.M. Consul), A. Murray Hudson, A. G. Krell, C. H. Montgomery, D. Fraser, C. C. Cox, A. H. Clarke, A. Mactavish, A. C. Barnes, J. W. Jopping, F. Gardiner-Brown, C. H. Parr, C. E. Smith, H. Barnett, L. F. C. Gross, H. Mackintosh, H. W. Knowles, T. G. Hopper, W. Taylor, H. Talbot, J. Rowley, W. H. Ainsworth, A. C. Ransdale, C. H. Paris, W. H. Dilrew, W. H. Hughesden-Smith, A. Rothwell, R. C. Higginson, G. Wooldridge, R. G. Milne, H. Atkinson, G. Rosenberg, G. Robb, T. D. S. Walley, J. Nesbitt, C. W. Goodward, E. Seaton, J. Best, A. Thompson, A. M. Barnes, junr., and A. P. Ferguson (Hon. Secretary).

Rules and Regulations.

The President stated that the Rules and Regulations drawn up by the Committee and revised at the last Committee meeting would be presented to the meeting for approval, and he called upon the Hon. Secretary to read them out.

A suggestion by Mr. Mactavish that one of the objects of the Society should be modified to read: To preserve the national sentiment and to strengthen the bond of union amongst the British subjects in Rosario and District, was unanimously approved.

Membership.

On the question of membership Mr. Mactavish suggested that the article read: "None but British subjects or their descendants speaking the English language, and having a friendly interest in British affairs shall be eligible for membership. Mr. C. E. Smith suggested that the word "only" inserted after the word "open" would meet the amendment. This was approved.

The proposal in the draft constitution to divide members into the following classes: Town, Camp, Ladies and Junior, provoked a little discussion, Mr. Mactavish submitting that a division into Members, Associates, and Juniors would be better, and another suggestion being that distinction between Members and Juniors would suffice, as the sex was clearly indicated by the name of the member. However, a vote resulted in 14 supporting the original proposal, 8 the first amendment and 6 the second.

The original proposal that the Committee should employ black balls in deciding the eligibility of applicants for membership was vetoed as savouring of the Middle Ages, to say

OVERSEAS CLUB

The following letter has been received by the local Hon. Cor. Secretary of the Over-Seas Club:—

General Buildings,

London, W.C., Oct. 14, 1915.

As soon as we receive the receipt and letter of acknowledgment from the British Red Cross Society, it shall be forwarded on to you.

Yours faithfully,

nothing of its involving unproductive expenditure upon the necessary apparatus.

The clause relating to Honorary Membership was amended to read: "The British Minister to the Argentine Republic and H.B.M. Consul, and British Chaplains and Ministers for the time being who are in charge of the churches in the district shall be considered as honorary members and these shall receive notices and be invited to attend all Committee and General meetings." In putting this forward Mr. Mactavish remarked that he hoped one day they might have a resident Scotch minister.

Subscriptions.

There were many pros. and cons. on the subject of subscription. Mr. Macintosh and Mr. Hopper were in favour of low rates, say $2 for gentlemen and Ladies and Juniors $1 each; but the majority of those present voted for the proposal of Mr. Ainsworth, seconded by Mr. Mactavish, that the annual subscription be $5 for Town and Camp members, and that there should be a life registration fee of $1 for ladies, and a similar registration fee for juniors up to the age of 18 years, at which age the males would be liable to the annual membership subscription of $5.

The remainder of the discussion was of a formal nature, and it was unanimously agreed that the Rules as amended be accepted and approved.

The Metamorphosis.

Mr. Gross then moved that "all the affairs of the British Patriotic Committee of Rosario (founded 1900) be from this date handed over to the British Patriotic Society of Rosario." This was seconded by Mr. Krell and unanimously approved.

Executive Re-elected.

The thanks of the meeting were, upon the motion of Mr. Krell, supported by Mr. A. H. Clarke, accorded to the Executive who had managed the affairs of the late Committee during the past financial year; and it was resolved that the members of the Committee elected on Trafalgar Day, should constitute the first Committee of the new Society.

A vote of thanks to the President was passed at the close.

THE DON OF AGUADULCE

AT VILLA DEVOTO.

Wednesday, Nov. 10

The "Don of Aguadulce," called a Spanish comedy, was given last evening at the San Carlos Hall, Villa Devoto jointly by the students of the English School and the High School of that suburb.

It was well produced, and well arranged, and the funds of the British Red Cross Society will be still further swelled by this entertainment.

The play is a humorous one, based upon an abduction for ransom, which failed, and those who took part in it deserve full credit for a very good children's entertainment.

The singing, choruses, and dances were very nicely done, and the first two were under the control of Mr. Claude Weston, who also was the accompanist of the evening, and the dances were directed by Miss Hughesdon Smith. It was all very pretty and enjoyable. The costumes chosen did much to heighten the general excellent effect. The lighting was good, and the juvenile actors quite splendid.

Many little humorous incidents occurred which amused the large audience, and Mr. Thomas, who was responsible for the "dramatic" side of the entertainment, must have felt well flattered by the splendid way the children carried out his teachings.

Miss Slater and Mr. Tippet can have felt nothing but pleasure at the result of an entertainment which, besides being successful, provided a numerous audience with a pleasant evening.

Those who took part were:—The Marquis of Buffo (Grand Admiral of Spain), J. F. O'Ryan; Don Beltran of Aguadulce, W. E. Henderson; Chico (a young sailor), T. Ap. Iwan; Captain del Tar (the Grand Admiral's Secretary), F. A. Bryans; Señor Soso (a retired brigand), C. K. Macadam; The Alcalde, A. J. Macadam; Negres and Rojo (Alguazils), R. A. Mayne and A. L. O'Ryan; Estrella (Don Beltran's sister), J. Ap. Iwan; Señora Mosquita (Estrella's duenna and Chico's aunt), C. Hope; The Marchioness of Buffo (the Grand Admiral's wife), M. Bryans; Bianca (the Grand Admiral's daughter), D. Chick. Chorus: Gonzola, Pepillo, Señora Tomato, and Anita (Andalusian peasants), L. Orton J. S. Gebbie, G. Hullet, and N. Cassini. Andalusian boys and girls. Dancers: J. Ap. Iwan, D. Ap. Iwan, B. Ap. Iwan, A. Ogan, N. Cassini, D. Dixon, L. Orton, H. Orton, D. Chick, D. McHardy.

KILLED IN ACTION

SEC.-LIEUT. H. SASSOON.

Deep regret is felt in Buenos Aires at the death of Sec.-Lieut. Hamo Sassoon, who has been killed in action at the Dardanelles. Mr. Sassoon was for some time on the staff of Messrs. Livesay, Son and Henderson, engineers for the New Port Works, and left Argentina some months ago in order to join the Royal Engineers. During his comparatively short stay in the Capital he made many friends and gained that greatest tributes from all who knew him "a real white man." His loss is far from being the least of those suffered by the British community during the war, and the sorrow felt and expressed when the news of his death came through over the cables was as profound as it was genuine.

Profound regret will be felt at the untimely death of Mr. Alfred Hubert Duggan, second son of the late Mr. Thomas Duggan, which sad event took place in London on Friday, the 5th instant after a long illness. Very sincere sympathy will be extended to his sorrowing wife and children, his mother, sisters and brothers.

At the morning service in the American Church on Sunday, a cable just received from Bishop Stuntz was read. It was from Los Angeles, California, and expressed the warm sympathy of the General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church with Mrs. Rev. Charles J. Turner in the death of her husband. The pastor Rev. Dr. McLaughlin in his sermon spoke of the high esteem in which he was held. Appropriate music was sung in the anthem and hymns in his memory. The congregation was a very large one.

DAY BY DAY IN ROSARIO

November 9.

To-day, Lord Mayor's Day, has fittingly enough been marked by a recrudescence of mayoralitis, a complaint variously ascribed to the climate and to the heat; it is not peculiar to Rosario, but finds in the second city of the Republic more favourable conditions than elsewhere. As Gilbert might not have written:

Said the jovial old Mayor of Rosario to the Governor:

"I hope I don't tire you!"

"You do," said Menchaca;

"You give me empacha,

"And now I'm determined to fire you!"

The British Minister, Sir Reginald Tower, K.C.M.G., C.V.O., is expected to pay a flying visit to Rosario early next month. The Rosario British Ladies' Committee have invited him to attend the Tea Concert which they have arranged to take place at the Savoy Hotel on December 4, in aid of the Christmas' Fund for Soldiers and Sailors. The entrance fee is two dollars, and tickets may be obtained at Calle Urquiza 1222, and at the British Consulate. Mrs. Spenser S. Dickson, the initiator of the function, promises a very attractive musical programme; and I understand there will be speeches.

Thursday is a feast day; but it is not absolutely binding on everybody. It is one of the 'removable' feasts.

Football enthusiasts will turn out in force on Sunday to see the match between San Isidro, who topped the B.A. League, and Rosario Central, who headed the Rosario League. Play will take place on the ground of the latter, with the kick-off sharp at the usual hour.

The Tennis Tournament in progress at Plaza Jewell has reached the semi-final stage and the finals will be played off on Sunday. Should the weather hold fine the whole tournament should be completed; and as three wet Sundays have marked the progress of play, there is hope that the law of averages will lay a restraining hand on the rain producing plant.

The Rev. P. Hill Nicol will be in the City this week-end, and hopes to have a good muster at the services.

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion in Talleres Church next Sunday at 8.

Morning service will be held as usual at Alberdi, at 10.30 a.m.

Mrs. T. H. Marston, accompanied by Miss Brewer, and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Knight will be passengers by the s.s. Desna, which is due to sail for this country about the 4th prox.

The Garden Fête and Sale of Work, etc., to be held at La Quinta, near Rosario Norte Station, on Saturday the 20th, and Sunday the 21st instant, in aid of the Fund for the widows and families of British Officers who have fallen in the war is to be the event of the near future. Mrs. J. P. Crouch and many lady helpers have been very busy with the arrangements, and a full programme has been prepared. There will be stalls for the sale of needlework, children's clothing, toys, etc., with bran pies, fishponds, and the various attractions comprised under the term "miscelanea." Tea will be served in the garden, and a bar will tide those whose medical advisers look sideways at tannin over what would otherwise be somewhat of a difficulty. A shooting gallery, Aunt Sally, comic races, and other delights will also be there, and a special feature of Saturday afternoon will be children's races. On Sunday a hat-trimming competition for men, costume races, and other diversions promise a sufficiency of entertainment. Both days a special train will leave Rosario Central at 3 p.m. to take passengers to a point opposite the entrance to "La Quinta," making the return journey at 6.30 p.m. For those who are more conveniently served by the trams, Nos. 4 and 16 will set them down at the foot of the Pasaje Celedonia Escalada. Tickets, which include the special train ride, are $1.00 for adults and 30 cents for children.

Another tennis tournament is to be arranged shortly in connection with the Epworth League, adjoining the Methodist Church in Boulevard, Orono.

A special memorial service was held at the Methodist Church on Sunday morning in memory of the late Rev. Chas Turner, whose death was recorded in THE HERALD last week. The Rev. G. A. Womer, who preached, recalled the fact that only a fortnight previously Mr. Turner had stood in that very pulpit, and his hearers little dreamed it would be the last occasion upon which they would be privileged to hear him.

On Sunday, 28th November, there will be a special lantern service in Talleres Church.

There will be a meeting of the Talleres Church Council in the Institute on Thursday, November 25, at 9 p.m.

The "Christmas Sale of Work" at Alberdi has been fixed for December 8. Contributions for the Arts and Crafts Stall, plain and fancy needlework, toys and trifles for the fisa pond will be gladly received.

Mr. Arthur Seddon, the sole survivor of the sad tragedy which took place last week on the Paraná, has gone up country as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Burgin, relatives of Mr. Alfred Baer, one of the victims of the fatality. He is due back in the course of next week.

Friday night's concert in aid of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Bd. Oroño, esq. Salta, will have as chairman, H.B.M. Consul, Mr. Spenser S. Dickson. The programme, which has already appeared in THE HERALD, is full of interest, great pains having been taken to prepare the little three-act comedy, "To Be Let, Furnished," wrapped up in which is a charade of two syllables. Admission is $1.50, and the concert begins at 8.30 sharp.

I understand that Mr. Gasser, who was to have gone down to B. A. to take part in the regatta, is indisposed, and has scratched.

On Tuesday evening, November 23, there will be a special Intercession Service at 8 o'clock, when members of the congregation and friends who are at the Front will be remembered in prayer. Those wishing to have the names of their friends added to the Prayer List are asked to send them to the Chaplain, c/o the Vestry Clerk, Instituto Mecanico.

The monthly Children's Service at Talleres Church will be held on November 14, at 2.30 p.m. The collection will be devoted towards defraying the cost of new Service Books.

The White Dance, to which I was not invited, although use was made of space in my weekly Rosario Letter, duly took place at St. Bartholomew's Hall, and, I believe, resulted in a sum of $250 for the object in aid of which the affair was arranged, namely, the Christmas Present Fund.

ASSISTANCE TO WOMEN

National Vigilance Association

B. A. BRANCH GENERAL MEETING

Tuesday, Nov. 9

At the Y.W.C.A., 243 San Martin, last night, the annual meeting of the Buenos Aires branch of the National Vigilance Association was held. There were present Mr. Calvert, U.S. Vice Consul, in the chair, Mr. H. G. Mackie, British Consul-General, Col. and Mrs. Palmer, and Brigadier and Mrs. Deverell, of the Salvation Army, Miss Persis Breed, of the Y.W.C.A., Mr. H. J. Henman, the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. R. W. Huntington, and about 20 others.

The financial position is satisfactory, there being about $900 in hand. The following are extracts from the report read by Mrs. R. Lighton Robinson, the lady worker who during the last two years, has done excellent and most efficient service here. She said, "During the past year 48 girls and young women have been assisted in various ways; situations have been found for 12, and others have been met and taken to their destinations or set on their way again when going outside the Capital. We have also been asked on many occasions to meet new-comers whose friends were unable to obtain entrance to the Customs House.

Twenty-six girls have been visited; some in their rooms or homes or in the hospitals. The British, Rawson, Rivedavia, and the German Hospitals have all had as inmates girls in whom we were interested, and some were visited many times. The girls helped have been of different nationalities, viz.: American 4, Argentine 3, Dutch 2, English 37, French 1, Uruguayan 1. One English girl was married immediately on her arrival and we were present at the wedding ceremonies. Two other girls came out to be married but changed their minds during the voyage; both were glad of our help before they left on the return journey. During the year eighty-eight ships have been met and twenty-four young women helped on their arrival. They were of various nationalities, viz.: American 3, Argentine 1, Dutch 2, English 17, French 1. Seven of the English girls were artistes under engagement to the theatres.

A number of examples were then cited in detail which amply prove the exceeding usefulness of the work in preventing girls and young women from falling into the hands of sordid and unscrupulous scoundrels of both sexes. It is evident also that mistresses who dismiss "at a moment's notice" girls whom they have brought over here, unless for very bad conduct, act with wicked callousness and cruelty. As for the husbands concerned in some of the cases, the lash appears the best method as applied in England in the cases of souteneurs, maquereaux, and all that abominable tribe of carrion. In the majority of these cases Mrs. Lighton Robinson was able to be of great assistance, and undoubtedly her activity must have been a grievous obstacle to the purveyors of human goods from overseas.

That excellent institution, "The Rest," at Bella Vista, where fifty-three guests have been able to spend holidays during the year, was referred to.

Mr. Jack Johnson, of boxing and other less savoury celebrity, was referred to in terms which while perfectly polite, could scarcely be termed gratifying, as his conviction in the U.S. for connection with the White Slave Trade is referred to quite plainly.

Relations with the Police are of the most cordial description, and the

THE TWO INTENDENTES

Political Strife in Rosario

WHO REALLY HOLDS OFFICE?

Rosario is really quite excited over the inter Governorial-Intendente conflict. Pro-Consul and Aedile are alike, set like stone in their respective positions.

Sensational happenings have occurred, calculated to amaze even the oldest inhabitant. If that patriarch had been in the Council chamber yesterday, he might have heard Councillor Carrasco denouncing the dismissal of the Intendente quite in the style of the Long Parliament. Dr. Culacciati was, he said, sacrificed because he is an honest Intendente. There was loud applause. Subsequently a partisan of the Governor used heated expressions in support of the Government, but he was a party of one and the vote stood: against the Government's action, 16. In favour of, 1, namely, Sr. Cardarelli. The resolution was passed that Dr. Manuel Culacciati is the only legal Intendente of Rosario, and a vote in that sense coupled with the opinion that an outrage had been committed. There is talk of intervention by the National Government.

Dr. Culacciati has published an order forbidding the payment of rates to his "illegal successor, Sr. Mendieta. The latter proclaims his intention of pursuing the former at law for "abuse of authority." The Director of the Asistencia has resigned, and two of Dr. Culacciati's friends on the Council have rushed up to town to lay the matter before Dr. Ortiz. A strong protest to the President has been telegraphed by Dr. Culacciati himself; the other party talk of using force against him, and there is a prospect of most elegant variety and diversion entirely. With two Intendentes, Rosario may say, "We are too much governed."

kindness and delicacy of the officials was several times referred to. Happily on three occasions the Vigilance Association was able to give the police a little help.

Don Francisco Laguarda, Chief of the Investigation Department, is specially thanked, with his staff, for very valuable assistance. The report concludes:—"We wish to thank all those who have helped us; the shipping offices, the emigration authorities and all the officials at the North Basin for their courtesy and assistance, the daily press for free notices of meetings, etc., Mr. Furlong of the La Plata Express Co., who has not only delivered luggage free for girls in whom we were interested, but has also stored parcels for many months under the same conditions. Our thanks are also due to all our friends and sympathisers who have supported our work notwithstanding the many calls that have been made for patriotic and relief funds created by the war. To have received so much support at such a time encourages us to look forward with hopefulness for the future of our work in the Argentine."

Mrs. Lighton Robinson, who thanked the Y.W.C.A. for the kindness received from that institution, was replied to by Miss Persis Breed, who said that they would all be glad to see her again on her return from her holiday. Mrs. Robinson goes home shortly for a change and hopes to return next year. Mr. Calvert, and Mr. H. G. Mackie, who has figured energetically, but with his customary unobtrusiveness in the Association's work, also spoke and with the customary votes of thanks the meeting terminated about 9.30. It was a model meeting, being largely composed of ladies, for attending to business in hand and not wadding from the point.

BAHIA BLANCA NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Nov. 7.

Exportation of Grain.

During last month the firm of Bunge and Born have loaded five ships with 13,554 tons, Dreyfus and Co. two ships with 10,983 tons, Weil Hnos. three ships with 7,419 tons, and Huni Wormser three with 4,400 tons of grain, making a total of 41,634 tons loaded in the Bahia Blanca ports for the month of October. Up to the end of last month, Bunge and Born had shipped 555,827 tons since the beginning of the year, Dreyfus and Co. 249,960 tons, Huni and Wormser 125,481 tons, Sanday and Co. 117,762 tons, Weil Hnos. 115,361 tons, H. Ford and Co. 80,592 tons, General Mercantile Co. 67,728 tons, Nicholson and Rathborne 52,452 tons, H. C. Ehler 35,114 tons, and Dornignac 373 tons, making the grand total of 1,399,652 tons shipped away from here in ten months. There still remains a large quantity to ship from Port Galvan, and the elevators at Ingeniero White are almost full. Two or three ships are now expected there to load.

The Pacific Railway Athletic Club.

A good deal of interest is being taken in the forthcoming inter-railway sports that are being held on the ground of the B.A.P. Athletic Club on Thursday, Nov. 11, at Maldonado. A better ground would be hard to find, as it is undoubtedly the best in Bahia Blanca.

The Scotch Church of Bahia Blanca.

A very pleasant gathering took place yesterday at the Scotch Hall in Calle Villarino when some sixty children and their parents gathered there for the first annual distribution of prizes in connection with the Sunday school. Tea was served in the open air outside the Hall. This was followed by a short musical entertainment in which the violin playing of little Dalys Cumming, aged 6 years, was much appreciated. After a few appropriate remarks to the children and their parents by the Rev. P. H. Nicoll, the Camp Chaplain, who occupied the chair, the prizes were presented to the children by Mrs. Cumming. For the best attendance at school the prizes fell to Annie Plunkett, Fortinia Corio, Dalys Cumming and Arthur Plunkett; and for the best work done the winners were Juanita Cumming, Chrissie Robertson, Esther Moore, and Robert Sheriff. All the other children received books also, this being the completion of the Sunday School's first year. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Miss Moore and the other teachers for their valuable work among the young, while cheers were given for the ladies who had kindly supplied the cakes and tea for the afternoon's entertainment.

Two empty places have recently appeared in the ranks of this community. One of these is the Rev. W. N. Monteith, who was well known and very popular down here some five years ago. He met his death on Sept. 25 last in the British advance in Flanders, where he held a commission in the Rifle Brigade, having been transferred from the Fife and Forfar Yeomanry, which regiment he first joined soon after the war broke out, up to which time he had been Minister of Elie, in Fifeshire. The details of his death have not yet come to hand but all those who knew him will think with sorrow of the loss of one who was always so well spoken of and so popular amongst them when in this country.

The other member of this community who is no longer here is Mr. George Corbett, whose death took place in Buenos Aires a few days ago. Mr. Corbett came to this country in 1857 and for many years resided on his estancia near here, the "Santa Maria." He was one of the most liberal subscribers towards this church here, as well as to many other deserving institutions in this country. He was also an Elder of the South American Church, and always took a keen interest in the various schemes connected with St. Andrew's Church in Buenos Aires.

The Postal Service in the South.

Various points at issue having been settled, a regular postal service has now been established between Pilcomayo, Nahuel Huapi and Bariloche by the General Direction of National Territories, and ten days will be the limit of time allowed for the delivery of the correspondence. One line of cars will leave Neuquen on the 1st, 11th and 21st of each month, and, passing through Lonco Vaca, Meneu, Laguna Blanca, Cumayo, arrive at Pilcaniyeu on the 3rd, 13th and 23rd of the month at 8 a.m. The other line will leave Cerro de la Policia on the same dates and go as far as Bariloche, where it will leave again on the 6th, 16th and 26th and arrive back at Cerro de la Policia on the 8th, 18th and 28th at mid-day; and the service to Pilcaniyeu will be run under the same dates, the cars arriving back at Neuquen at 5 p.m. on the 8th, 18th and 28th. The correspondence for Nahuel Huapi will be taken as far as Bariloche, from where it will be carried on to its destination in a sulky. Another branch has been established between Madryn, Nerquinco, Telson, Manantial, Pelado, Gagan, Cacannana, Gasches and Coldache. The round trip of these places is to be done in forty days. A delivery of correspondence by means of horses has also been established between Chidligastor and Kilometer 1198.

New Athletic Club.

A new club has recently been formed here and is known as the Villa Rosas Gas Company Athletic Club. A tennis court of asphalt is now being laid, and shortly a football and cricket ground will be made and a pavilion erected. The ground lies between the gasworks and the port road. Mr. Hunter is the Hon. President, and the President of the club is Mr. Carcason, the Secretary Mr. Erfpord, Treasurer Señor Turra, and the Committee Messrs. Donovan, Smithers, Blanco and Maize.

"Buenos Aires Herald."

THE HERALD can now be purchased at the Kiosk in the plaza near to the National Bank.

Frank Brown's Circus.

On Thursday next Frank Brown's circus is to make a start here in Bahia Blanca for a short period before opening up for the summer in the Pabellon de Novedades in Buenos Aires. The circus tent is being erected on the same ground as that of Tony Lowande's a few months ago, at the back of the Waterworks office and between the streets of Roca and Gorriti. The work was begun yesterday.

MURDER OR SUICIDE?

GHASTLY SIGHT IN ARENALES.

Early yesterday morning the police came upon the body of a man in Calle Arenales, in front of number 1071. He had been stabbed in the neck and lay in a ghastly pool of coagulated blood.

On removal to the station, the body was identified as that of Silverio Ruiz, a door-keeper of a house in Calle Cerrito 1231.

Enquiries led to the fact being established that the murdered man had had a violent quarrel with one Manuel Robero, employed in the same house.

When the latter was questioned it was found he was covered with flesh wounds, which he said he had received in the quarrel. He denied any knowledge of Ruiz's death and declared he must have committed suicide. Robero was taken to the Fernandez Hospital under arrest.

BOY SCOUTS OF QUILMES

DISPLAY IN AID OF RED CROSS FUNDS.

There was merit as well as entertainment in the concert and display given by the Boy Scouts of Quilmes at the Italian Hall of that suburb last night. There was merit in the display the boys gave, merit in each item of the performance and merit in the success and again merit in the Boy Scout movement and progress. All Quilmes was these and once again it may be remarked that this suburb of a cosmopolitan South American city were again united in a good cause and once again showed how things should be done to gain success.

To begin with the Hall was tastefully decorated, no trouble had been spared and the arrangements in general could not have been excelled. Again the Hall itself is par excellence, one which lends itself to any kind of function and furthermore English speaking Quilmes is one great united family for patriotism.

All these matters tend towards success in all patriotic functions and Quilmes, since the fearsome and historic day of August 4, 1914, has never yet been known to fail when a worthy, a necessary almost a vital need was under consideration.

Thus once again success was theirs in a most pleasurable instructive and entertaining performance.

Opening with the Argentine National Anthem and closing with "God Save the King" from first to last, the large audience was treated to a boy scout display, to musical items of a high order and dances which they thoroughly enjoyed.

After a march past of the "troops" Mr. Chevallier Boutell had a few words to say. A letter from Sir Reginald Tower, whom Mr. Boutell practically represented at this function was read and in it Sir Reginald said: "Will you please convey to the Boy Scouts all my best wishes for the success of their performance? I shall watch their development and growth with much interest and hope on some future occasion to be present."

The British Minister was unavoidably detained elsewhere as was H.M. Consul, Mr. H. G. Mackie.

Mr. Chevallier Boutell proceeded briefly to tell how the Boy Scouts were playing the game—a valuable game and pertinently asked the question: "Is it not the duty of us all to give support to such a splendid movement?"

He explained how struck he was with their utility and their services when visiting the War Office at home and in suitable words, which drew forth enthusiastic applause he congratulated the Boys Scouts of Quilmes on their work.

The programme was a very entertaining one and after a display of a bicycle accident Dr. Stuart Pennington had a few remarks to make upon such accidents and the services the boys could do and had done in such cases.

The programme was full of interest.

ALLIED RED CROSS FUNDS

A WARNING AGAINST FRAUDS.

The Red Cross (International) Committee request publication of the following: The Delegates of the Allied Red Cross Associations, Belgium, British, French, Italian, Russian and Serbo Montenegrin have noted with profound gratification the magnificent and generous efforts made in the City of Buenos Aires and in the Provinces in favour of the institutions which they represent, and offer their sincerest thanks to all who have been concerned.

Unfortunately under the cloak of genuine charity there have been found unscrupulous and rascally persons who, making use of the name of one of the Red Cross Societies, or of those of all the Allies, have swindled generous contributors whose donations never reached their intended destination. In order to avoid and suppress this abuse, the representatives of the Allied Red Cross request all those who intend to organise subscriptions, fiestas, lotteries, charity sales, or any other undertaking for the Red Cross to be good enough to previously inform the Minister or the Red Cross delegate of the nation concerned. By observing this little formality, they will acquire greater initiative force, facilitate the control of the Red Cross delegates and prevent unauthorised or fraudulent persons from making use of the name of the Allied Red Cross for their base ends. (Signed), C. Morra; F. H. Chevallier Boutell, H. Papilland; D. Guilmet; S. Ptaschnix.

"ENGLISH ONLY"

NEW 'PHONE REGULATION IN LONDON.

New York, Nov. 8.

A telegram from London states that the use of foreign languages when sending communications by telephone is forbidden.

ing and useful exhibitions and the few musical items could not have been excelled. Special mention must be made of the singing of Señorita Bertana, her two songs both in Italian were "Viene di Brenza" and the encore "For all Eternity."

Her magnificent voice, perfectly controlled, rang or sobbed through the hall to the immense enthusiasm of the audience. She was in perfect voice, and every one felt the beauty of her songs and her rendering.

Mrs. Hooper sang a verse of "Motherland," in which the audience joined in the chorus. Mr. W. H. Davies on the cello, and Mr. Herdman Smith on the piano, supplied other musical items, which included, "La Reve" and Saint Saens "Death of a Swan," excellently rendered. The Hornpipe Dance by Miss Lola Woods and Miss Maisie Macintosh, Mr. Soane in his inimitable comic songs, and a separate dance by Miss Macintosh completed the musical items.

Mr. Ernest G. Robinson was the able and hard-working President of the evening, and the whole performance could not possibly have been bettered nor more enjoyed.

The Boy Scouts were splendid in their delivery of the following:—The uses of a scout's pole; Signalling, Morse and semaphore, with flags and lamps; Live-saving from fire; Pyramid of Scouts; Scouts' work; Stretcher improvisation and bandaging; Boxing contest, black and white, Corporal Robinson and Patrol-leader Coleman; Camp scene—and thus once more Quilmes was to the fore.

PROFESSOR ROWE

"UNIVERSITY AMBASSADOR" TO S. AMERICA

WHERE U.S. MERCHANTS FAIL

The Philadelphia "Evening Ledger" of October 8 publishes an interesting article from the pen of Mr. William A. McGarry on Professor L. S. Rowe, who is well known to the residents of both American Continents. The article is reprinted below:—

Leo S. Rowe, professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, has been called the "university ambassador" of this country to South America.

Professor Rowe is entirely too busy to care about the spotlight. He has been in the more even glow of its edges for about 15 years and not infrequently in its centre. Hardly any one thinks of South America now, always without linking to the thought the name of Leo S. Rowe. It may tell the story of his work more clearly to say that he is perhaps the most widely known citizen of the United States to South Americans. His friends there are in almost every line of endeavour, governmental, intellectual and commercial.

In academic circles he is looked upon as the man who brought to the University of Pennsylvania the honour of being the pioneer in the movement to co-operate with South American educational institutions. This should be a source of pride to loyal Philadelphians, who consider this city the cultural centre of the United States, scorning the claims of Boston. Certainly the South Americans have not overlooked Professor Rowe. He holds honorary degrees from the National University of La Plata, Argentina; the University of San Marcos, at Lima, Peru; the University of Chili, Santiago, Chili, and the National University of Mexico. He drew up the plans of organisation for the last-named institution by special invitation of the Minister of Public Instruction of Mexico in 1909.

WORK AS RECREATION.

Doctor Rowe was born at McGregor, Ia., September 17, 1871, but he came to this city while still a boy and was educated in the public schools here and in the Central High School. He took the bachelor's degree at the University of Pennsylvania, studied in the Law School at the same institution, and then was admitted to the bar. He did not practice, however, spending the next four years in Europe in the study of political science and comparative jurisprudence, and in 1896 he was appointed instructor in public law at the University, rising to the assistant professorship in 1898 and to his present post in 1904.

Like most unusually busy men, Professor Rowe makes his work do for recreation. He gets plenty of this kind of "amusement." His friends call him the hardest working man at the University, yet he also finds time to play a snappy set of tennis now and then. He nearly always spends his vacations in South America.

One of the many untold duties of Professor Rowe at the University is the business of looking after South American students, whose number has shown a steady increase since he became interested in their countries. They help to keep him busy and he helps them in a thousand and one ways that no one else at the big West Philadelphia institution could. At present Professor Rowe also is actively engaged in planning for the convention to be held next April to make arrangements for the next Pan-American Financial Conference. This convention was to have been held at Buenos Aires in November, but has been postponed until April.

A MAN OF MANY JOBS.

Doctor Rowe obtained his first governmental appointment from President McKinley, who named him in 1900 a member of the Commission to Revise and Compile the Laws of Porto Rico. When that Commission got to work he was made chairman of the Insular Code Commission by Governor Allen. He remained in Porto Rico two years, and upon his return to the University was elected president of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences. The report of the Porto Rican Commission, written by Doctor Rowe, with some modifications, was adopted as the law under which the island is still being governed. In the next two years the professor wrote several articles on efficiency in government, upon which he is an authority.

In 1906 President Roosevelt appointed Professor Rowe to represent the United States at the Third International Conference of American States, held at Rio Janeiro. The same Executive appointed him two years later as the representative of this country at the first Pan-American Scientific Congress, Santiago, Chili. President Taft made Professor Rowe a member of the International Arbitration Tribunal on Panama Claims in 1913. He was invited in 1914 by the National University of La Plata, Argentine Republic, to deliver a series of lectures on Pan-American subjects and this year received his fifth presidential appointment when President Wilson named him Secretary General of the Pan-American Financial Conference, May 24 to 29, at Washington, D. C. Less than two months after the conference concluded its sessions Doctor Rowe went to Chili, Peru, Panama and Cuba on a special mission for the United States Government to confer with ministers of finance of those countries. He returned to this city a few weeks before the reopening of the University.

A PREDICTION AND THE ANSWER

When the war started in Europe it was freely predicted everywhere that the United States would profit by gathering in the trade of South America that had been talked about for years but never secured by manufacturers of this country. It did not take a year to prove that these predictions were not going to be fulfilled. Various reasons why have been advanced, and the views of Doctor Rowe in this connection are interesting. He was asked to give his opinion of the one outstanding cause for the failure of the trade prophecies.

"The American manufacturer's inability or lack of desire to adapt himself to South American conditions," he said, "especially as to credit, is the reason. It is not sufficient for United States banks to establish branches in South America. They must not expect to do business on deposits. South American business men want longer credit than United States manufacturers are willing to extend. This probably is due to the American's desire to turn his money quickly. The danger should not be a deterrent, for the records show a very small percentage of loss to the European manufacturers who supplied South American merchants prior to the war."

LAND PURCHASE

A $4,250,000 TRANSACTION.

No small comment has been called up on account of an operation in the sale of land, which has eclipsed all records for the current year and which was a transaction of considerable importance.

Situated in the Province of Buenos Aires at Madariaga Dolores, Maipú and Guido, are some lots of land the property of Don Alberto Castex amounting to some 41,002 hectares. These have now been sold to Messrs. Botto Brothers and Althabe for the sum of $4,250,000.

The price of $142 a hectare is a high one, but the land is valuable. The point is that such a transaction has been effected at a period of very considerable trade depression.

SAINT BRIGID

BAZAAR AND CONCERT.

The Bazaar and Concert which the Daughters of Saint Brigid of San Antonio de Areco have been organising in aid of the Irish Girls' Orphanage were held on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1. The Bazaar was a complete success.

Though the weather on the opening day was not just everything that could be desired and probably kept some few who lived at a distance from Areco from venturing out, the "Irlandeses" of that and the neighbouring "partidos" were to the fore in numbers larger than San Antonio has witnessed in many years.

San Antonio has long since become famous for its Irish-Argentine concerts and historic and patriotic tableaux, and it will be high praise but for all that, none too high, to say that the concerts and tableaux of Sunday and Monday last surpassed even the splendid successes achieved on other occasions. It is hard to pick out "the best" where everything is first-class, but in these days when volunteering is so much in the public mind it may be said that the tableau representing "The Volunteers" in council and in action was the most striking in its artistic beauty and perfection, as well as the most popular item on the boards. "The Last of the Druids," the principal tableau of the second day, brought the audience back in fancy to the entrancing days of early Christian Ireland—the days of Kings, and Saints, and Bards, and Druids, and Brehons, of Beannrionas and Roydounas, — and was a treat scenically, historically and artistically of rare delight. The dancing and singing were up to the usually high order of these concerts, while the performance of the various exercises, recitations and comic pieces, could scarcely be improved upon. Very great credit, indeed, is due to the Sisters in charge of the Irish Orphanage, as well of course as to the Sisters of Saint Mary's College, San Antonio—the two institutions having co-operated,—for the manner in which they prepared the children under their charge for these excellent performances. A special feature of the second day's entertainment was the magic deeds of the well-known Signor Conti, who performed some really wonderful feats, filling the youngsters, and many of the elders, too, with amazement and delight.

It would scarcely be fair to close these brief remarks without a word of kindly recognition of the services of the artistes and the organisers. It was evident that they were all excellent in their way, as the applause of their gratified audience unfailingly testified. The organisers of the Bazaar, however, cannot be passed over so lightly, and the least to be said is that the thanks of the Irish Catholic Association and the Irish community in general are due to the Daughters of Saint Brigid, especially to Mrs. A. K. Mulvihill, the energetic Secretary and Treasurer, and also to Miss Mooney, the President, and her worthy collaborators, Mrs. MacCabe and the Misses Kelly, O'Neill and Carthy.

MORE OUTRAGED HONOUR

DR. JUSTO CHALLENGED.

Another Deputy, by way of showing an example of obedience to the Laws, has "sent his seconds" to Dr. Justo, Director of the Socialist Official Daily. The latter gentleman has very sensibly refused the challenge, and the irate legislator has let off his spleen in a violent letter. Had Dr. Justo permitted himself to be called out, the resultant combat would have proved nothing except that perhaps one combatant was a better shot or had better practice with the epee de combat than the other. Ridicule will in time, kill these absurd "duels." So called.

WIFE MURDER AT MONTEVIDEO

JEALOUSY AND VINDICTIVE HATE

A dreadful domestic tragedy is reported from Montevideo.

Last February one Ramón Santiago, a Spaniard, aged 34, was resident there with his wife, Carmen Agrelo, 24 years old, an Argentine. Owing to frequent disagreements and jealousy a separation was agreed upon at that time and the wife subsequently came to live in Buenos Aires with some relatives, her husband remaining in the Uruguayan capital. Later the latter began to write very affectionate letters to his absent spouse constantly requesting and persuading her to return home. Unfortunately the woman believed in the sincerity of Santiago's professions and returned to Montevideo where she arrived yesterday morning and went at once to her husband's house.

Not long after her entry however her voice was heard by neighbours calling urgently for help in tones of evident terror. On forcing an entrance the wife was found lying in the floor with many terrible gashes from a razor while her savage and hypocritical husband had cut himself with the same instrument besides inflicting on himself numerous stabs with a pair of sharp scissors. Carmen Agrelo died from her injuries on reaching the Hospital. The most painful impression has been caused by the horrid event both having lived in the city for some years and being well known and respected.

BOY MURDERS A MAN

PECULIAR AFFAIR IN ROSARIO.

Early on Monday an affair occurred in Rosario, which is exercising the minds of the police and for which a boy of 16 named Nunzio Spirale has been arrested.

The facts known are that in Calle Pueyrredon 1220 the boy lives with his parents and that next door is a small almacén belonging to his brother.

On Sunday the boy went to a picture show and returned to play billiards at the almacen until 2.30 a.m. on Monday, then he returned home.

For the past few days his father had given a room and food to a man, Manuel Ramos, 30 years of age, who was out of work. This man was murdered by the boy, being stabbed to death. Lack of witnesses to the crime make the matter a difficult one. The boy's story is that on entering one of the rooms, he found a man there, who immediately, attacked him and a struggle ensued in which he was getting the worst of it and so he drew a knife and stabbed the man. Five wounds all fatal have been noticed.

After the deed the boy ran out and called his father who in turn called the neighbours and the police and the body was recognised as that of the lodger. The boy swears he did not know there was a lodger in the house but thought it was a robber, that he was attacked and had to defend himself.

The police are doubtful, because no signs of a struggle could be found, the boy is suffering from no bruises or the like, which would be probable and again four of the fatal wounds are in the man's back. As the family is fairly well-known, the affair has created some stir.

IN MEMORIAM

Lieutenant the Rev. W. N. Monteith,
B.A. (Oxon), B.D. (Glasgow).
Killed in France, October 2, 1915.

"Monteith is dead." To those who knew, appreciated and loved him during his residence in Buenos Aires, these words will be full of awful meaning. They tell us of the extinction of a life which had every promise of being a singularly useful and noble one, with every hope of high position and honour. Few men had such an all-round preparation for the business of life; few men knew so well how to do the right thing in the right way and at the right time.

Lieut. Monteith's death shows us, in most striking manner, the terrible loss which this war is bringing upon the world, in the destruction of those whom the world cannot afford to lose.

I well remember the first sermon I heard Mr. Monteith preach. It was at the beginning of his ministerial career and was on the subject of "Loyalty." I was much struck with it, and referred to it in a series of articles I was then writing on the English churches of Buenos Aires. Years afterwards, on re-visiting this country, Mr. Monteith told me that when selecting the sermon which he had to preach before being nominated to the church of which he was the Minister when he joined the Army, he remembered my appreciation of this sermon and preached it again at Elie. He received the call from the Church, which had no reason to regret its choice.

About a year ago, Mr. Monteith, who had already two brothers at the front, carried out to its full extent his sentiment of loyalty and offered his services as a volunteer in the Fife and Forfar Yeomanry, enlisting as a trooper.

His noble bearing and keenness attracted the attention of his officers, and he was offered a Commission in the Rifle Brigade, going at once into training at the Cambridge University School of Instruction. "When you see the Rifle Brigade mentioned in the papers, you can think of me," he wrote to me in January. He became engaged to be married on the same day as that on which he enlisted, and was married before going to the front. All must sympathise with his wife in her terrible affliction in the loss of her heroic husband.

We head with pride of the great victory at the beginning of October, but it was gained at the cost of such lives as that of Monteith. It is impossible to find words to express what one feels on hearing of his death. There is a feeling of pride in having known such a man and called him friend; there is pride in the recognition of his self-denying loyalty and sacrifice; there is pride in knowing that he has died for his country and died in the hour of victory; but, with all, there is the awful sense of loss and of bitter anguish for the destruction of such a man as he was, and that such destruction should have been brought about through the evil designs and ambitious schemes of that arch-hypocrite and incarnation of evil, the Kaiser.

Mr. Monteith will ever live in the memory of those who were privileged to know him. Loyal in life, he has been "Faithful unto death," and he has earned the rest into which he has entered. But, ah! the pity of it!

AN ENTANGLEMENT

By "Odette St. Lys"

Norah Dauncey must have been bewitching in her youth. She had the white skin and plumpness that go with fine ankles and wrists, and her eyes were a deep blue, with long lashes. She had been twenty-eight for some years when I met her, but when she sat at the piano in the dusk singing "Where'er you go the roses" with her soft alto voice, I for one should have fallen in love with her at once, had I been a man.

What spoiled her were her hands. They seemed to be without bones. They were soft and white, with taper fingers and filbert nails—hands which only the self-indulgent and unscrupulous have.

But I was young and no psychologist. I loved her for her tender heart and ready sympathy.

There is an old blind man even now somewhere in Kensington who could tell you how she gave him a warm coat once on a bitter winter's day and a fur rug for his dog. Like all the generous-hearted she loved animals, and I have a prayer-book in my possession, "From one sinner to another," which she gave me. Whatever they can not do—sinners can love—and better than other people—because they know the need and value of love.

In her young days she had been engaged to the younger son of a Marquis. She still wore a bracelet which he had locked on her arm, and of which he kept the key; but the engagement had been broken off, for there was madness in his family, and he had gone off bush-ranging in Australia, while she had faded into a boarding-house spinster with a few hundreds a year which were quite inadequate for her luxurious habits.

We were spending the summer — she and I—at a little East Coast fishing village when the war broke out. A strange place you will think for a lady of her type, and so it was. But her friendship for me made her insist on coming with me, and although she was as frightened of a mouse as the average woman, and always carried a piece of camphor in her pocket against any possible germs, the idea of German bombs left her quite undisturbed.

Besides, once there she found another attraction. She never could live without a man, without a man's love—or the possibility of a man's love—and her boarding-house life had made her less exclusive than birth and breeding demanded.

As for others no one could help loving her. She was so entirely frank about herself, and her faults, and she possessed that rare quality—rare and priceless in women—of never judging others.

Dogs and children—and men—drifted to her quite naturally; so it was no wonder that Joe Larkin, handsome as a god with his curly hair and blue eyes, standing six feet in his socks, owner of a fishing trawler, became her victim.

He was not quite the ordinary fisherman either. There was some mystery attached to his birth. He might have been a younger son—he very probably was. At any rate, from the day that Norah and I met him, sitting with his dog Binks among the lobster pots, a mutual attraction between them was evident. Binks, an unruly puppy, making a dash for Norah's ankles, was the cause of the acquaintance. And when had Norah ever seen a handsome man and resisted the temptation of playing with him!

I warned her, but she only laughed. After a time I spoke to her very seriously. The thing began to be noticed in the village.

"WOMEN UNDER FIRE"

Arthur H. Gleason has the following entitled "Women Under Fire" in "The Sphere":—

"What are women going to do about this war?" That question my wife and I asked each other at the outbreak of the present conflict, and we decided to go across to the front to find the answer for ourselves. There were several attitudes that they might take. They could deplore war, because it destroyed their own best products. They could form peace leagues and pass resolutions against war. They could return to their ancient job of ministering angel. That really meant resuming their old-time location in the background. They did all these things, and did them fervently; but they did some-

When at night we went to the "House of Content," the little village inn where we used to buy our smoked herrings, there was whispering and nudging of elbows amongst the men smoking their pipes on the doorstep when before they had merely touched their caps to us respectfully.

Very soon too—after I had gone up to bed—Norah took to sitting out in the moonlight—and not alone.

I became seriously alarmed. The strain of romance in her made her make light of the realities of life. She saw "all crooked," as the saying is, and Joe Larkin, with all his handsome looks had a touch of weakness about him, the same sort of weakness, I imagine, that was Norah's latent and besetting sin.

I began to quarrel with her seriously when she accepted presents—only a canary at first, it is true, but other things presently—when she sent for an expensive cigarette case for him.

But our quarrelling only made matters worse.

I was no longer her "confidante" now. Once she spent a whole day sailing—goodness knows where—coming home late at night from a neighbouring seaside place.

Until at last one day she showed me the locked bracelet broken—and laughed. "An unlucky sign," she said, "it must have a meaning."

It had. The very next day Joe Larkin mysteriously disappeared from the village, and Norah with him.

There always comes a time in life when the weak break away openly from their former self—from the principles and ideals that used to be their life. It suits most of us to glorify the gratification of a sudden whim or passion into some exalted emotion. I knew that with Norah it would be all play—fireworks—she must make Joe Larkin her thing—body and soul—before she could be satisfied. And she did.

To him no doubt she was a vision from his former existence and more. The rugged sea air had instilled into him something stronger and more enduring perhaps than his native weakness. By the magic of a woman's great love he might—who knows—have found his higher self. But Norah was not this woman.

I never heard what happened between them.

Norah is married to a rich American now, a friend tells me.

But it ended in tragedy for him. Tragedy for which she, I feel sure, is responsible.

When, not long ago, there was discovered amid the wire entanglements beneath the Forth Bridge, a German submarine, with every man on board dead, there was found amongst them—Joe Larkin—owner of a steam trawler at R....

Dead men tell no tales.

thing else in this war—they stepped out into the foreground, where the air was thick with danger, and demonstrated their courage. The mother no longer says, "Return, O gallant one, with your shield or on it," and goes back to her baking. She packs her kit and jumps into a motor ambulance headed for the dressing station. My wife and I have had the chance to watch women in this war. We were fortunate enough to be made members of the Hector Munro Motor Ambulance Corps, which has been attached to the Belgian Army since the latter part of September. Baron de Broqueville (Prime Minister of Belgium) placed his son in charge of our corps. We have had access to every line from Nieuport on the sea down for 30 miles. We were able to run out to skirmishes, to reach the wounded where they had fallen. We have gone where the fighting had been at such close range that in one barnyard in Ramskapelle lay 13 dead—Germans, French, and Belgians. We brought back three wounded Germans from the stable. We were in Dixmude on the afternoon when the Germans destroyed the town by artillery fire. We were in Ypres on November 1, the day after the most terrible battle in history, when 50,000 English out of 120,000 fell. For four months my wife has been living in Pervyse with two Englishwomen. Not one house in the town itself is left untouched by shell fire. The three women lived in a cellar for the first weeks. Then they moved into a partially demolished house. In early March a shell exploded in the kitchen and killed two of their soldier helpers. The women were at work in the next room. We have had opportunity for observing women in war, for we have seen several hundreds of them—nurses, helpers, chauffeurs, writers—under varying degrees of strain and danger.

The women whom I met in Belgium were all alike. They refused to take "their place." They were not interested in their personal welfare. There have been individual men, a few of them—English, French, and Belgian, soldiers, chauffeurs and civilians—who have turned tail when the danger was acute. But the women we have watched are strangely lacking in fear. I asked a famous war writer, whose breast was gay with the ribbons of half-a-dozen campaigns, what was the matter with all these women that they did not tremble and go green under fire as some of us did. He said: "They don't belong out here. They have no business to be under fire. They ought to be back at the hospitals down at Dunkirk. They don't appreciate danger. That's the trouble with them; they have no imagination." That's an easy way out. But the real reasons lie deeper than a mental inferiority. These women certainly had quite as good an equipment in mentality as the drivers and stretcher bearers. One reason that they behaved as they did was their desire to help. They could not bear to let immense numbers of men lie in pain. They wished to bring their instinct for help to the place where it was needed. The other reason is a product of their changed thinking under modern conditions. "I went to see the shells," said a discontented lady at Dunkirk. She was weary of the peace and safety of a town 20 miles back from the front. Women suddenly saw their time had come to strip man of one more of his monopolies. For some thousand years he had been bragging of his carriage and bearing in battle. He told the women folk at home how admirable he had been under strain and he went on to claim special privileges as the reward of his gallant behaviour. He posed as their protector. He claimed the right to tax them because they did not lend a hand when invasion came. Now they are campaigning in France and Belgium to show that man's much-advertised quality of courage is a race possession.

One morning we came into the dining room of our Convent Hospital at Furnes, and there, on a stretcher on the floor, was a girl sleeping profoundly. We thought at first she was one more of our innumerable wounded who overflowed the beds and wards during those crowded days. She slept through the morning and through the noon meal. The noise about her did not disturb her. She did not stir in her heavy sleep. She lay under the window, her face of olive skin, with a touch of red in the right cheek, turned away from the light. She awoke, after a sleep of 20 hours. She had come in the evening before, wearied to exhaustion, after a week in the Belgian trenches. That was the thing you were confronted with—woman after woman hurling herself at the war till she was spent. They wished to share with the men the hardship and the peril. If risks were right for the men, then they were right for women. If the time had come for nations to risk death, these women refused to claim the exemptions of sex difference. If war was unavoidable, then it was equally proper for women to be present and carry on the work of salvage. I was with an English physician one day, before he was seasoned. We were under the bank at Grembergen, just across the river from Termonde. The enemy were putting over shells about 100 yards from where we were crawling toward a machine shop where wounded lay. The shells were noisy, and the dirt flew high. Scattered bits of metal pattered on the bank. As we heard the shell moaning for that second of time when it draws close, we would crawl into one of the trenches scooped out in the green bank, an earthen cave with a roof of boughs. "Let's get out of this," said the doctor; "it's too hot for our kind of work. If I had a rifle, and could shoot back, I shouldn't mind it. But this waiting round and doing nothing in return till you are hit, I don't like it." But this is the very power that women possess. They can wait round without wishing to strike back. Saving life gives them sufficient spiritual resource to stand up to artillery. They have no wish to relieve their nervousness by sighting an alien head and cracking it. Smoking they do indulge in. Almost all our women smoke. In it they found the same relief from tension that men find. Cigarettes were what they used. Some of them smoked them while waiting for the wounded as they sat in the ambulance by the roadside. They smoked them at the end of the hard day. The sudden lulls of waiting, when one is expecting action and noise, are hard to live through, and smoking quiets the jumping nerves.

One of our corps was Lady Dorothea Feilding, daughter of the Earl of Denbigh. She had all the characteristics of what we like to think is the typical American girl. She had a bonhomie that swept class distinctions aside. Her talk was swift and direct. She was pretty and executive, swift to act, and always on the go. What she is the rest of the women are. Miss Smith, an English nurse girl, jumped down from the ambulance that was retreating before the Germans, and walked back into Ghent, held by the Germans, to nurse an English officer till he died. A few days later she escaped by going in a peasant's cart full of market vegetables, and rejoined us at Furnes. Miss Macnaughtan is a grey-haired gentlewoman, of independent means, who writes admirable fiction. She has laid aside her art, and for months conducted a soup kitchen in the railway station at Furnes. She has fed thousands of weakened wounded men, working till midnight night after night. She remained until the town was thoroughly shelled. The order is strict that no officer's wife must be near the front. The idea is that she will divert her husband's mind from the work in hand. He will worry about her safety. But Mrs. von der B—, a Belgian, joined our women in Pervyse, and did useful work; while her husband, a doctor with the rank of officer, continued his work along the front. She is a girl of 21 years. Recently the Queen of the Belgians went into the trenches at a time when there was danger of artillery and rifle fire breaking loose from the enemy. She had to be besought to keep back where the air was quieter, as her life was of more value to the Belgian troops and the nation than even a gallant death.

Land of Lilliput.

Conducted by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

I wonder if any of you collect postage stamps or coins! If so, you ought to get very busy now, and try and secure those of the countries at war, because there will be many changes when Peace settles over them, and both stamps and coins will be more valuable.

Among the coins those of Belgium are exciting much interest; and even the authorities at the British Museum realise this; and there has been a special display of Belgian coins arranged there, for the benefit of the public; and those interested in old collections of coins. I am told that the connection between England and Belgium as early as the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, can be seen even in their coins. The English penny is very similar to the "deniers" of France, and to the silver pieces in Aquitaine and Normandy. It was the popular piece in Flanders, and the English penny was closely copied in the issues made in the cities and towns of Ghent, Valenciennes, Namur, Louvain, Mons, Douai, and Antwerp; but strange to say, at the end of the fourteenth century this close similarity was forbidden; and from then until the present time there has been much difference in the size, as well as in the design of the Continental coins mentioned.

The beautiful gold nobles which Edward III. minted at Calais as well as in London, were also copied by the Flemish. And now that war souvenirs are popular, the interest in the "siege pieces" or "money of necessity," struck during the revolt against Spain from 1579 to 1858, are engaging the attention of coin collectors. These pieces include a 36-stivers piece struck at Brussels in 1579, which is inscribed "Perfer et obdura-Bruxella." Of course you understand that all coins are "struck," that is to say produced in the Mint, that place where money is made from metal into money which is called coins, by authority of the Crown!

And another thing to interest collectors is the small paper money—some of which has been issued in times of war. These little notes, some as small as 5 cents, were issued during the American War. Some small notes have been issued in Antwerp and also in Brussels: one issued was for 120 francs. Under the exhibit of several of these notes in the British Museum is the following label: "The Belgian Government on its removal to Antwerp took with it the plant and plates for the issue of bank-notes. The City of Brussels, however, being pressed for small change and paper currency, issued some from old plates still in its possession. These bear the date 27, 8, 14, and a portrait of King Leopold I." You may be sure all collectors will try to get possession of one of these, as they will soon be scarce, being very few in number. Then in England there has been an issue of paper money to meet the necessities of the war-time; but you probably have heard all about this.

Now you all have heard about Napoleon, with whom all Europe was at war about a hundred years ago; and who was defeated at the Battle of Waterloo in June 1815, and whose last days were spent on the Island of St. Helena. But do you also know about his little son, the King of Rome? Whether you do or not, I am sure you will all be interested in reading about the little "L'Algon," as he has been called, so I will give you his story this week which I have taken from "The Weekly Cape Times":

THE KING OF ROME.

On March 20, 1811, Napoleon Francis Charles Joseph, King of Rome, was born in Paris. His father, the Emperor of France, was feared by all Europe, but though he was often brutal to men and women, he had always a soft spot in his hard heart for little children, and would play all sorts of merry games with them. The birth of a son delighted the Emperor greatly, and from the very first there was an understanding between him and the helpless baby who, he hoped, would one day reign in his place. The child loved its father dearly, but he was frightened of his mother, the stupid, selfish Marie Louise, daughter of the Emperor of Austria, who cared for nobody but herself.

The people of France were overjoyed at the birth of the little Prince, and showed their pleasure by sending him a beautiful cot designed by the most famous artists. At the head were curtains of lace sprinkled with golden stars, and above hovered an eaglet. The young Prince was often spoken of as the Eaglet, but he did not live long enough to outgrow the name or to soar high.

This wonderful cradle was only for ornament, and the little Prince lay in one that was very pretty, but not so splendid. It was shaped like a boat, and had a gilded prow, while the curtains of myrtle green were embroidered with palm trees and lizards. The Empress Marie Louise did not look after the little Napoleon, but gave her son to the care of the Comtesse de Montesquiou, whom the child called "Maman Quiou." From the first the Emperor loved to romp and play with his baby son, and sometimes when the play grew rough little Napoleon would begin to cry. Then the Emperor would look grave and say, "What, Sire! Are you crying! A King, and yet you cry! Oh, that is very bad! Kings don't cry!"

Then he would make such funny faces that the little fellow began to laugh again, and lost his fear.

When the King of Rome was able to walk he was fond of knocking at the door of his father's study, but the sentry was forbidden to let him in unless Madame de Montesquiou was with him. Very often he just toddled off by himself. He could not reach the handle, and would say to the sentry: "Open! I want papa." "Sire, I must not let in Your Majesty," said the man. "Why not? I am the little King." "But Your Majesty is alone," replied the sentry.

But Maman Quiou was not far behind, and the door would be thrown open. The Emperor was never too busy to play with his little son, and would let the child sit on his knee while he signed State papers, or would walk up and down with the boy on his back while he dictated despatches.

Like all other children, the little King loved his toys, and he had many charming ones. His father gave him a silver-mounted drum, and he had a Polish Lancer who could move his legs, and a singing bird that sprang out of a fine enamel box. His favourite toy, however, was a woolly sheep, with which he would play for hours, and he had two real white sheep, which drew him about in his go-cart when he took the air in the gardens of the Palace. The Parisians were very fond of the little Prince, and when they caught sight of him cheered loudly, and the child would wave his hands in reply.

LESSONS.

As little Napoleon grew older his father made many careful plans for his education. A special house was set aside for his school, and his father collected 6000 volumes for him to read while he was growing up. So that he might find instruction everywhere the Emperor had a special dinner service made for his use, in which each of the seventy plates contained a lesson. Eleven bore pictures of Roman history and thirty-two celebrated the victories of the French, while the others were covered with pictures of birds, beasts and fishes. The walls of the room and even the backs of the chairs were covered with historic pictures, and so the little King could learn from everything around him. In this Chateau of Meudon the child grew up under the care of "Maman Quiou," who wrote frequent reports to his parents of his health and progress.

The Empress was very indifferent to her son, but Napoleon loved the little fellow most dearly. When he was conducting the great campaign against Russia a portrait of the King of Rome in a white frock was sent to him, and the Emperor for a moment forgot his warlike plans and ordered his Generals to come to his tent to look at the picture.

"Gentlemen," said he, "if my son were fifteen years old instead of eighteen months, it is not only in his portrait that he would be present to-day."

Then he added: "Take it away; it is too soon for him to look upon the field of battle."

Meanwhile the baby King was happy enough in his nursery. He grew rapidly, but he was very slow in learning to talk. He was rather a lonely little boy, for he had no brothers or sisters, and at last it was decided that a little chap named Froment, who was just about a year older than the King, should come and share his lessons and games. The two children became great friends. The little King soon began to talk to his companion. The children were taught to ride, and then life was one happy round of laughter and play.

TROUBLES BEGIN.

For the first two years of his life the King of Rome had all the good gifts a child could have, except one, and that was a kind mother. The Empress Marie Louise was too selfish to trouble about her boy or about anyone but herself. Madame Montesquiou, however, loved him almost as if he had been her own son, and his father adored him.

But the Emperor's star had begun to wane, and in January, 1813, he had to go to war again, but before he set out he called together the officers of the National Guard, and came before them with his wife and son.

"I am on the eve of starting to lead my army to fresh victories," he said to them, "and I leave my wife and son to your care. Will you defend them? Say! will you defend them? Can I trust you? Will you defend them?" The officers shouted their assent, and the Emperor, picking up his son, carried him to where the privates of the regiment were assembled. They shouted, "Long live the Emperor! Long live the King of Rome!"

The Emperor went away with his army, but fortune had deserted him, and the news of his defeat reached Paris, and Marie Louise, who cared only for her own comfort, was anxious to get back to her father in Austria, and had no mind to share her husband's troubles.

The little Napoleon soon found out that there was a change. From being King of Rome, he was now only the Prince of Parma, and he learnt that he was to go to Schonbrunn, in Austria, with his mother.

"I see that I am not a King any longer," he said, "as I have no pages." But worse than this was the parting from his toys. He could not take them all with him, and it was hard to make a choice. He shed many tears when he understood that some must be left behind, but at last he made his choice of two wooden horses, a stable, a grenadier, a husar, a cow, and a milkmaid, a Turk playing on a mandoline, and a grocer's shop. Then, too, he got permission to take the little carriage drawn by sheep and a hundred and fifty pebbles which he had himself collected.

It was a long journey to Schon-brunn, but once in Austria the little Napoleon was happy. He scarcely heard anything of his father, but he had with him Madame Montesquiou, his nurse Marchand, and a charming girl called Fanny, who was the jolliest playmate ever known. They had many happy hours together, and now that the boy was older he had to work hard at his lessons. There was history and geography to be learnt, and he had to learn Italian and German also. Like his father, the boy loved warfare; the noise of guns never frightened him, and a military band was his greatest delight. One day life at Schonbrunn was disturbed by the news that the Emperor Napoleon had left the island of Elba, where he had been a prisoner, and had entered France at the head of an army. The Empress Marie Louise was anxious to remain in Austria and to make her son an Austrian, so the boy was taken to Vienna. Madame Montesquiou was ordered to go back to France, and the parting was heart-breaking for her and the little boy, who had spent all the four years of his life by her side. Fanny and Marchand did their best to make the child happy, but he missed "Maman Quiou" sadly, and did not like the lady who came to take her place.

By-and-by the order came that Fanny was to go also, and the little Napoleon was very sad. He said nothing, but brought her his greatest treasures and told her to take them back to France. There was his little gun, his soldiers, the medals that had been struck at his birth, and other precious things. "Take them," he said to Fanny, "take them back to France."

A little while after this his kind nurse Marchand was sent away. One night early in 1816 she put him to bed as usual, and when he woke it was to see an Austrian officer looking down upon him. He had learnt by this time not to ask questions, and only said: "Monsieur, I should like to get up."

One by one his French friends were being taken away from him, and his heart was very sore.

His father meanwhile was a prisoner in St. Helena, and his mother and grandfather were doing their best to make him forget France and his French friends and to make an Austrian of him. His first name of Napoleon was dropped, and he was called Prince Francis Charles.

At ten years old the boy was sent to a public school, where he showed himself clever at mathematics and history, and he was specially fond of drilling. He still thought a great deal about his father, and it was a terrible grief to him when one day the news was brought to him of Napoleon's death. His recollections of his father had grown dim, but he had never ceased to love him and to hope that one day his captivity would end. The boy had made up his mind to be a soldier, and at seventeen he was a captain in a Chasseur Regiment. He was very proud of his position, and said: "The spur of honour, and the wish to merit such distinction, have completely changed me. I wish to shake off everything that is childish in me, and become a man in the best sense of the word."

But a soldier's career was not for the boy, for very soon he began to show signs of weakness. His lungs were diseased, and though he fought gallantly against his weakness and pain, he lost strength rapidly, and in July, 1832, he died. Once there had been some hope that the people of France would try to place him on the throne, but the hope was never realised. The Eaglet was never to reign in the place of the Eagle.

SWEET PEA AND ROSE SHOW

SUCCESSFUL FUNCTION AT BELGRANO

The Belgrano Sweet Pea and Rose Show, which has now become an annual institution, was held in the Parish room, Calle Cramer, Belgrano, on Nov. 6. The contributions, which numbered over 50, presented a most charming appearance and occupied two long rows of stands in the centre of the hall. The variety of colour and the quality of the exhibits reflected great credit on the amateur growers of both sweet peas and roses.

Attendance was very numerous and included many visitors from the suburbs.

The hall was prettily decorated with ivy and the Argentine and British colours, and the garden was laid out with tea tables and illuminated with Chinese lanterns.

Particulars of the financial result will be published during the week.

The sale of articles from stalls was most successful. Mrs. Dickinson's provision stall did a roaring trade, judging by the empty counters at the end of the day; Mrs. A. Forrester's Fish Pond also by its dark emptiness, and Mrs. Chantrell's Fancy stall, as well as the Flower stall of Mrs. Rendtorff, which was originally full of attractive plants in pot, etc.

There was a brisk trade in afternoon tea and refreshments, all of excellent quality.

Mr. A. Forrester, in his best business manner which proves him a veteran "rematador," did very successfully both in the afternoon and evening in the sale of flowers and plants, some fetching unheard of prices.

At 5.30, Mrs. Mackie, wife of the British Consul General, presented the prizes, after being introduced by the Vicar, and made an effective speech congratulating the winners.

The prizes consisted of two challenge cups, as usual, and owing to this being "war year" handsome certificates hand-painted on vellum and framed were presented as other prizes. Those for the sweet peas were painted by Mrs. Bevan Chantrell, and those for the roses by Mr. W. Lacey.

In the evening, there was a continuation of sales, and raffles. Two fine oil paintings of roses, and dolls, and an auction of plants and flowers; and the rest of the evening was occupied by a concert. Mr. Lloyd Davies organised the entertainment, all items of which were fully appreciated. Miss Whitaker rendered her violin selections with much ability, also Mrs. Spanton. The Rev. H. Morrey Jones gave a banjo solo. Master Boyd recited some Scottish poems in the garb of the Gael.

The Vicar and Committee wish specially to thank Mr. Samuel Hale Pearson, of the "Yatay" Model Dairy, Calle Cabildo, Belgrano, for 30 litres of milk, 2 litres of cream and 2 kilos of butter; also Mrs. Langlay Stocks for articles for fish pond; Mr. Barber, of "Té Sol," for tea; Mr. Burbidge, of Harrods, for saten for decorating flower stands; the Gresham Life Insurance office for Chinese lanterns; Gath and Chaves for balloons; A. Mackintosh, Donnell and Palmer, Sr. Mario Calderol, Mr. J. Page, and Mrs. Farran for provisions. Also the judges, Messrs. P. Tudor and Walter Fleury, THE HERALD and Standard for the many notices, and all the ladies and gentlemen who assisted in decorating the hall and other arrangements for making the show such a success.

The programme of the concert was as follows:—

Violin duets by Miss Whitaker, L. R. A. N., and Rev. F. O. Spanton, "Salut d'Amour" and "Ave Maria."

Songs, "My Fancy," "The temple bells" and "Til I wake," Mrs. H. Mohr Bell.

Piano solo, Leybach's 5th Nocturne, Mrs. Duley.

Banjo solo by the Rev. Morrey Jones.

Recitations, "Angus Macdonald"

ADELA VERNE

FIFTH RECITAL.

Miss Adela Verne's fifth concert took place on Nov. 6 in the Salon Teatro, 1362 Cangallo. The house was full literally, both the body of the hall and galleries being fully occupied. Enthusiasm prevailed throughout and the recalls were continuous. In Mendelssohn's Prelude, Fugue and Chorale, Miss Verne was remarkably fine. In the three pieces for "The Spinnet," ancestor of the piano, "Musette" by Rameau, "Le Coucou" by Daquin, and "Minuet" by Handel, she displayed great delicacy of interpretation. Sweet, thin and ghostly, the airs seemed to come from the old instrument across the spaces between us and the dead century to which they belong. It is not mere trickery, there must be sympathy and understanding, besides technique, and Miss Verne has it. Mozart's sonata, Chopin's Allegro, Allegretto and Ballad in Sol minor, completed the first part.

Schumann's Carnival, which is sufficiently well known, occupied the entire second part of the concert, and the various movements were magnificently interpreted.

In the third part, Rachmaninoff's Prelude, Raff's "La Fileuse," De Severac's show piece "The Old Musical Box" followed each other. Musical boxes are antique survivals; the nasal blatant gramophone has killed them; but for a few minutes Miss Verne brought before us the polished walnut box, the polished cylinder and its innumerable stemming spines, with their true tinkling, pathetic, old melodies.

The concert concluded with the "Legend of St. Francis walking the waves." The power of the opening bars and the continuous mutter and thunderlike breaking surf seem more than one pair of hands can produce. Miss Verne had an ovation at the conclusion, and a tribute of roses was handed up to the stage.

UNITED STATES UNIVERSITIES CLUB

SOCIAL EVENING

On Nov. 6 at the Majestic Hotel the United States Universities Club held a concert, quite informal but a most jovial, happy and enjoyable evening.

There was no printed or arranged programme. Everything was spontaneous and Mr. J. B. Sullivan, Mr. J. Reece and Dr. Hall entertained their fellow members, to their best ability.

Songs, mostly appertaining to those attractive melodies belonging to the States, to the "home and jolly" feeling of all, were well enjoyed.

Supper was served and refreshments and although the whole evening was of an informal nature, it was one of the best of the many thoroughly enjoyable and informal socials celebrated by a Club that deserves every recognition.

VICTORIA SAILORS' HOME

SATURDAY NIGHT'S CONCERT.

One of the largest—even crowded—audiences was present at the concert given at the Victoria Sailors Home than has been the case for some time.

Popular, useful and enjoyable as these Saturday night concerts are, it can be truly said that last night's was a splendid one. Quite apart from the fact that more vessels were in port, the very items themselves would have attracted an audience from every corner of the dock and would even have tempted any but the most "duty bound" sailor away from his ship.

Mrs. Monks sang beautifully, her rich voice ringing through the hall and "For all eternity" was followed by "Because" in the first half and by "Thora" in the second.

It would be both invidious and difficult to say which song was the most pleasing, but as a choice "Because" was one of the most charming items of the evening.

Miss Stella Grindrod, Miss Beryl Lovejoy and Miss Woodwell were tremendously appreciated.

In fact if close detail were attempted, a string of names encored and encored again would find its way into the subject of a really good concert.

Mr. W. H. Crispin was a fine accompanist and was untiring.

Messrs. Scott, Victor Reid and Hazelton filled a fine programme as follows:—

Part I.—Piano, Un peu d'amour, Mr. W. H. Crispin; Song, "When they ask you what your name is," "I wonder if you love me sometimes," Miss Stella Grindrod; Song, "Young Tom of Devon and a Little Irish Song," Mr. Lynne Hazelton; Song, "Huskin Bee," and "Where the river Shannon flows," Miss Beryl Lovejoy; Song, "Somewhere" and "Sympathy," Mr. Victor Reid; Violin, "Irish melodies" and "Berceuse" (Jocelyn), Miss E. Woodwell; Song, "For all eternity" and encore "Because," Mrs. J. B. Monks; Comic, "By the sea" and a "Tale untold," Mr. P. G. Scott.

Part II.—Song, "Thora," Mrs. J. B. Monks; Song, "Molly Bawn" and "To my own love," Mr. L. Hazelton; Song, "Tipperary Mary" and "Night time in Dixie," with a violin accompaniment, Miss Lovejoy; Song, "Beautiful Garden of Roses," Mr. Reid; Violin, "Perpetuo mobile" encored, Miss E. Woodwell; Song, "They all love Jack" and "Shadowland," Miss Grindrod; Comic songs, encored, Mr. Percy G. Scott.

The National Anthem.

RIOT AT CONSTITUCION

ANARCHISTS AND POLICE.

A disturbance is reported to have occurred on Sunday afternoon in Plaza Constitucion, when a body of workmen holding a meeting and expressing Anarchist opinions came into collision with the few police on duty. Encouraged by the fact that the latter made little resistance and were loath to use their firearms, the crowd made a demonstration against Comisaria 16, where the occupants had rifles in store, but no ammunition. Some mischievous fellows intent on disorder and violence are said to have made inflammatory speeches threatening assaults on the Police, who evidently did not expect such extreme action. The demonstrators were ultimately dispersed with considerable vigour, some shots being exchanged, and six of them, all Spaniards, were locked up in the Palace of Justice. Among them is Manuel Fernandez, considered the ringleader of the disturbance. It is thought possible that these are a gavilla of Spanish anarchists who have come here with the intention of acting together. They are ill-advised, as the Argentine Republic has already demonstrated that while giving the open hand to the orderly and well-disposed, men of violence may be expelled.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

All the Zeppelin raids on England have been carried out at night, and it is interesting to see from our first illustration this week how the German airships are directed to their stations when operating in the dark. It is stated that long before war broke out the Germans were experimenting in night-flying, and the Government erected aerial light-houses all over the country. In these lighthouses there are very powerful search lights and signalling apparatus. Our picture shows a Zeppelin flying at night and directing its course by signals received from one of these stations. The story of the wonderful landing on Gallipoli Peninsula is never old and keen interest still attaches to the means whereby the Allies got their first grip on the "toe" of the Peninsula. Since the transport River Clyde was deliberately run aground, the British have made a permanent mole leading from the wrecked steamer to the shore and in the pictures troops are shown landing to strengthen the fighting forces inland. The third picture is interesting as demonstrating the determination of the Russians to allow nothing of value to fall into the hands of the Germans. Even the church bells were removed so that the metal could not be made use of by the Germans. The map which we present this week will help readers to understand the story of the big offensive movement which the Allies made early last month. The next picture is a famous artist's conception of one of the most dashing of the attacks carried out by the British in the offensive movement referred to. The next picture shows a motor-bus turned into a travelling pigeon cote. Carrier pigeons are widely used by the French to convey messages from one part of the country to the other, though in this instance the pigeons are mainly used by aviators. The last of this week's illustrations gives a fair idea of the wooded country of the Argonne in which the Crown Prince's Army has been fighting desperately to pierce the French lines.

UNITED CLUB

ANNUAL MEETING.

The United (ex Janus) Club held its second Annual Meeting on Nov. 6 under the Chairmanship of Mr. F. H. Chevallier Boutell, President of the Club.

The turn out does not reflect credit on the members, only about fifteen being present. The report was read but in view of the small attendance no business was transacted in the way of electing officers for the ensuing year. The question of whether the Club shall be maintained in existence has been seriously considered, and it is understood that a call for another meeting will shortly be issued, at which a larger number of members will, it is hoped, make an appearance, to manifest some sign of interest and to consider the Club's future (if any) and scope.

Undoubtedly the feeling of the stalwarts present last night was that, with a little enthusiasm, the Club has much useful work in front of it yet.

An exceedingly eloquent peroration to the report by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. Owen, was read, and will probably be printed for circulation among members.

Mr. Blackwood, Mr. Burney Wall, and other gentlemen who have given their time as instructors were thanked, and votes of thanks were passed to the President and Hon. Secretary.

The Club has had 301 members; 75 have gone to the front, and 221 remain, so a better attendance might be expected next time without excess of optimism, unless members desire to see the Club expire of inanition, which is not desirable, especially with things as they are.

COMODORO RIVADAVIA

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Oct. 10.

Weather.

At present the prospects for the farmer are anything but bright. Though for some years, except last year, we have had small rainfall, it has not been as low as this year at any rate not during the time of the occupation by the Boer immigrants. The lowest fall as recorded was 5 inches, and this season it was only 36mm. The camp along the coast is as a general rule green and pleasant to the eye in September, and even sometimes in August, but though it is October already you see nothing but a grey, miserable, parched camp. Along the pampas the outlook is not so bad yet, but if there is no more rain during the summer, then the case for sheep breeders will be serious.

Puerto Visser.

The inhabitants of this little port and people interested in the properties in the vicinity are now petitioning the Government to grant various favours and concessions to Puerto Visser and to Salamanca. Puerto Visser is much better situated than Comodoro Rivadavia, the ground is quite level and of sandy-gravel fit for cultivation while water is obtainable by sinking wells. At Comodoro Rivadavia all these advantages are absent, and yet, should the Government grant the petitioners their prayers even on all points, the older port stands in no danger of suffering in any way through the advancement of the younger simply because the centre of attraction is already firmly established at Com. Rivadavia, chiefly so by the existence of oil-fields and the railway. Whereas the extension of this little place will in various ways facilitate business for the neighbouring farmers and produce a revenue to the State.

Immigration

A short time ago there was a rumour here that some two hundred immigrants (whether families or single males is not clear!) were coming from South Africa with Mr. C. J. N. Visser of this colony to settle here. Whether this is true or not has so far not been ascertained. The serious point at issue is, however, what are these people, or any other immigrants, going to do here? The South African Boer is a farmer ab initio, and to imagine him as a peon, or even an artisan in this colony is not absolutely impossible but certainly very improbable. Ground there is not to be had, not even a chacra or less, as there are scores of men, married and single who, have done everything in their power to obtain land here but to no purpose, and are to-day wandering about this God-for-saken wind-driven and desert colony to find a place to settle, but without avail, as all land, on which even 'existence' is possible was taken up long ago.

To encourage people to come to this part of Argentina for the purpose of taking to farming is nothing but criminal and cruel? Of course, any one who is satisfied to become a day-labourer, or go inland about fifty or sixty leagues, and gradually become de-civilised, has plenty of scope here, as labour is unobtainable and much needed.

News in Brief.

The marriage of Mr. Barend de Klerk, widower, to Mrs. van Blerk, widow, was recently celebrated. The couple are somewhere about seventy but nevertheless hale and hearty.

Mr. M. M. Venter has returned from Buenos Aires after some months' residence there, but his family is still there. Mr. Venter has been confined to his bed for some days.

Building in Comodoro Rivadavia is still going steadily ahead. Only lately burned bricks have come into evidence and give an improved appearance to the buildings and the place.

The engagement is announced of Mr. Malan Cook, second son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cook, Sr. of Cañadon Pilar, to Mrs. Watson, widow of the late Mr. Charles Watson, of this colony.

Mr. William Cook, of Cañadon Pilar, has also been very much indisposed, and was suffering from asthma. He is better again but by no means in his usual health.

The Late Dr. R. Krieger.

The death of Dr. R. Krieger, of this Colony, on Monday, Oct. 4, occurred under very tragic circumstances. Some time ago the doctor took poison on two different occasions but was saved by prompt medical aid. Late-ly he looked very well and was out on his farm, Kilom. 38, F.C. According to information to hand he was very much annoyed last Monday by a minor incident relative to a letter. He was in the dining-room with his family and soon got up and left, going to his private room, opening under the verandah. He returned saying that he was tired of life, or words to that effect, and went back to his room. He came back a second time and said "Good-bye" to the others, returning to his room. Mrs. Krieger evidently feeling uneasy told her son to go and see what his father was doing, but before he reached his father's room they heard a revolver shot, and found the doctor lying on his bed with a bullet wound in the head, dead. He seems to have gone quietly and determinedly about this tragic work, for, his spectacles were taken off and put down, and he was lying on the bed with his hand still holding the weapon, resting on his chest. The bullet apparently entered the right temple, passing the head. He was buried on Wednesday on his farm. He leaves a widow and one son, grown up, to mourn his loss. Though the late doctor Krieger was hasty of temper he was exceedingly kind-hearted, and there are many here who deeply regret his death and will miss him sincerely.

During the Anglo-Boer war, Dr. Krieger was commandant of the German corps raised in the Transvaal to help the Boers and he proved himself a courageous leader. He was gazetted for bravery (an honour comparatively few received during the war) by the Government. This honour was equivalent to the granting of a V.C. as in the English army. After the war Doctor Krieger with Mrs. Krieger and their only child Herman came to this Colony. He was very poor but subsequently did well here. He has one of the most valuable farms, with the Railway line running through it, stocked with sheep and cattle.

Illness of Mr. Venter.

Mr. Frederick Venter, one of our oldest immigrants and much respected here, has been very ill now for some time. It is stated that general debility is the cause. He is an elderly man and that militates against his recovery.

Italian Red Cross.

Recently a very successful and well patronised cinematograph performance in aid of the Italian Red Cross was given here.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK

SATISFACTORY FIRST HALF YEAR

Very satisfactory results are reported of the first six months of the National Post Office Savings Bank, that is, from April 5 up to November 1.

At present there are 537 branches, a large number in the Capital or Province of Buenos Aires, which has 165, the Capital 64, Cordoba 42, and Santa Fé 67. There are 54 in the National Territories, and the number is gradually increasing everywhere, showing that habits of providence and thrift are making headway among the population.

Spring Tennis Tournament C.A.C.

The inclement weather of Sunday last greatly interfered with the Spring Tennis Tournament of the Cordoba Athletic Club, as the courts were too damp to permit of play. On Monday morning, with one court fit for tennis, the men's singles between Schibler and Zimmer (last year's holder) took place, and again substantiated the excellent handicapping, 7-5 and 8-6. The tennis committee politely request all players who have matches unfinished to appear at the Courts on Saturday and Sunday, in order that the Tournament may be brought to a close.

Cordoba Team wins Cabret Cup.

The Central Cordoba football team journeyed to Buenos Aires last week end to play in the final of the railway league for the handsome cup presented by the F.C.C.C. General Manager, H. G. Cabret. The Cordoba boys won a well deserved victory from their Buenos Aires rivals by the close score of 3-2. The winning team was composed of the following players:—E. Tablada, P. Andrade, E. Poggi, J. Garcia, L. Salvatelli, E. Camurri, J. Prax, M. Martinez, S. Bolognino, R. Rivero, and E. Pieri. The team returned to Cordoba on the night train on Sunday.

International Football Match. Uruguay v. Cordoba.

The football team representing Uruguay in the international matches with Cordoba arrived in town last Sunday morning, accompanied by Dr. Paes Formoso and Señor José Perez Pisano, representing the Uruguayan Football League. The team was met at the station by a delegation composed of the League football commission of this city, and after an exchange of cheers and greetings, automobiles were engaged for a sight seeing trip, a visit being made to Sarmiento Park, the Zoological Garden, and other points of interest. The return journey being made in time for breakfast at the Hotel San Martin, where the team stopped during their stay here. The team during their three days' sojourn in Cordoba found time to visit Alta Gracia, and also the Dique San Roque. The first match in the series of two took place on Sunday afternoon on the field of the Cordoba Athletic Club in General Paz, the spectators numbering some four to five thousand people. Cordoba football enthusiasts were treated to an exhibition of "soeker" which has never been equalled in this city. The Uruguayan team displayed perfect dribbling, and their passing and combination play should prove a most useful lesson to our local team. Several times one of the visiting team would be tackled by two or three of the Cordoba team without avail, so clever was the footwork of our visitors. The game, as on the previous Sunday, was devoid of foul play

REFORM OF MILITARY LAW

ANOTHER OUTRAGEOUS CASE.

Constant proofs are adduced of the crying necessity for the reform of Military Justice or the Code which passes by that name. The reforms are approaching possibly, but on shoes soled with lead. Sentences pronounced by military courts are constantly marked by a severity which is nearly German in its savage rigour. The case of the unfortunate Enriquez is not yet forgotten, and another prisoner, Valois Ramirez, has recently been awarded the frightful sentence of twelve years imprisonment for "infractions of discipline." How unfit these men who try such cases frequently are to act as judges, and how dangerous their unfettered judgments are, has been proved conclusively in this case, where the Supreme Army Council, after carefully examining the case, decided that six months' arrest was sufficient punishment for the soldier; this is just 5 per cent. of the Teutonic sentence awarded by their Worships the Military Injustices. Such examples are not rare. Their results may be seen occasionally as in the killing of a captain of German extraction last year by a Sergeant whom he had outraged and publicly assaulted, and they are most prejudicial to proper military spirit and discipline.

and unpleasant features, and one of the cleanest I have seen here. The Cordoba team, due to the absence of the Central Cordoba team in Buenos Aires, was composed of players from Belgrano, University and Alta Cordoba and they gave the strong Montevideo team a very good fight, the final score being 3-2 in favour of the visitors. The second match which took place on Monday afternoon was another enjoyable game, and a big crowd again put in an appearance. The home team were strengthened by the return of the Talleres Club from B.A., and a close game was anticipated. Uruguay started the scoring early in the game, and in less than twenty minutes had shot two goals. In the second half Cordoba scored from a penalty kick in front of the goal. Again the pretty passing of the Montevideo boys, and knowledge of the game were in evidence. The visiting team was composed of the following players:—E. Cornu (Peñarol Club), J. Zuazú (Bristol), A. Urdinasarain (Defensor), F. Broncini (Central), C. Marquez Castro (Wanderers), A. Pasearello (Reformers), C. Pereyra (Belgrano), F. Izargaray (Reformers), A. Martinez (River Plate), A. Artigas (River Plate), and L. Altamirano (Wanderers).

Cordoba lined up for the first game as follows:—A. Gargaro (University), M. Unamunzaga (Belgrano), A. Rosetti (Alta Cordoba), A. Pereyra (Belgrano), M. Flores (University), A. Lutri (Belgrano), C. Ompré (Belgrano), A. Figueroa (Belgrano), J. Lazcano (Belgrano), N. Alonso (Belgrano), and F. Alberti (Central Cordoba).

The team for the second game was exactly the same as against the Estudiantes of Buenos Aires, with one exception, J. Prax (Central Cordoba), replacing M. Martinez from the same team.

Referee, G. Guassoni, the Official Referee for the Argentine Football Association of Buenos Aires, was in charge of the whistle, and he performed his work to the complete satisfaction of both teams, in fact, no criticism could be made as all his decisions were given with perfect judgment.

The Uruguayan team left on the 6 p.m. train Tuesday night for Buenos Aires, where they embarked for Montevideo on the river boat. Dr. Gregorio Martinez, President of the Cordoba League, Sr. Esteban Juarez, Secretary, Sr. Guillermo Fuehs, L. G. Babb and many others were present to bid the plucky players "bon voyage."

Sports and Pastimes

THE TURF

PALERMO

THE CARLOS PELLEGRINI ON SUNDAY.

There she comes! That's Ocurrancia, and that's Smasher, the winner of last year's National. Look, there's Packoy, who beat Ocurrancia the other day in this year's National.

What's that little one? Oh, that's Siete y Medio. He's the "tip" for the race, and even smaller than Capullo, who is only a little fellow. Now, do you see these two coming last? That one is Evoé and the last Dijital. What a race it will be and what lovely horses.

All kinds of remarks like these were heard when the field paraded for the most interesting race of the year.

The filly came as usual down on her toes, and once again bathed in some unnatural sweat, but the others walked in their very best Sunday manner and the huge crowd, went away excitedly to make their bets and returned to watch the event of the year in which, best meets best irrespective of age.

Suddenly a road went up. "They're off!" and past the stands came the field, thundering along and travelling at a tremendous pace. The blue and gold leading is Evoe, from Packoy and Ocurrancia. How they galloped! In 59 2/5 seconds a thousand metres, and a third of the distance had been run. There was no change when another 500 metres had been reeled off. Dijital's beaten, she can never stick the pace! and an angry look came into the face of a wildly excited race goer. "What do you mean? Ocurrancia's done for," and with this scornful remark he returned to his watch.

Such remarks as these and a hundred others were heard before and during a race which provoked tremendous enthusiasm, excitement and over which, many were delirious (temporarily) with the latter sensation.

Round came the horses and still no change. The second 1000 metres was run slowly, and at last they came to the Belgrano bend, still no change!

What tremendous excitement, what a roar of voices, a waving of hats. "Arcuri viejo"; "Ocurrancia, no más," and the din increased, when it was seen that just after the bend was passed and the whole field had entered the straight, that two horses suddenly showed up. Ocurrancia and Dijital! and they raced, and they raced. Side by side, head to head, and for a distance of 420 metres, one of the most sensational encounters seen at Palermo was fought out. How they left all else standing, when they once began, and how they fought, amidst the cries of a great multitude!—a dead heat!—and so the Pellegrini was over, and the two greatest horses, both mares, had proved their respective claims to further consideration at Palermo.

To enter into details of a race, which will live for long in the annals of South American racing, is unnecessary, as it has been described a hundred times, but there still remains points of interest. There still remains the point of how Ocurrancia confounded the knowing experts, who said she could not stay, there still remains the wonderful combination race put up by Evoe and Dijital, one of the most perfect specimens of jockeyship ever seen at Palermo. There still remains the fact that Packoy's performance in the Nacional was proved but a flash in the pan, and that though a Val d'Or, Ocurrancia is entitled to a name second to none. Against such class imagine four lengths between the second.

Imagine what a mare Dijital is, and how wonderfully the race was ridden.

At the finish Mingo and Arcuri almost wept on each other's shoulders, and some actually did weep when it was known that the saddest accident possible happened during the race. Smasher, the great whole-hearted Smasher broke a leg, and thus ends a noble career. No more genuine could be public sympathy for anything or anyone, than for this sad occurrence to a great horse.

Has it occurred how utterly cold, everything of the younger generation was beaten? Has not the race shewn how immensely superior the daughter of Val d'Or is to all her brothers and sisters of an age.

It is useless to enter into details and discussions, but after her victory over Aventurero and Smasher, and her latter day consistence, Dijital is a great mare, but in spite of her eight kilos given, she is not the mare Ocurrancia is, and this will be proved.

The remainder of the programme provided the most sensational day's racing seen at Palermo for many and many a long day. In all races save the youngster's event, the finish was wonderful. Necks, half necks and heads. Could anyone, a winner or a loser, desire better sport?

Thamar got home in the first race by the skin of her teeth from Ríparia.

Melody, the surprise, easily beat the hot favourite Salvadora. Fachinal beat Polavieja, and then the grey old stiff Don Gabino "put it across" a hot favourite in Velazquez, by half a neck.

Then came the classic and an awful reaction!

Espartillar, an outsider, beat a goodish field by half a neck from Tamandará, with Vittone, the favourite, nowhere.

Still more excitement when Retrechero had another half neck victory over San Paulo, and when Gringuito, an outsider, paying an enormous price, got within half a head of Palo Errao in the last race.

Never was such a day experienced never such excitement, and such all-round sport.

It was this that was the essence of the meeting. The public, so far as betting was concerned, did none too well, but they got their money back in sensation, and so ended a great and memorable day—but poor old Smasher!

LA PLATA

A good day's racing was enjoyed at La Plata on Sunday although the attendance was small on account of the great race at Palermo.

A fine race was seen between Fine Mouche and Old Green in the Premio Inicial and on the decision to run this event off, the first named won by the narrow margin of a neck.

There were one or two surprises or perhaps "long shots," because nothing surprises the racing man especially at La Plata and perhaps, due to this some few were sorry that they had not gone to Palermo.

The results were as follows:—

Premio Iva, 1400 metres.—1st, Grey Lara, 57 kilos. J. Arismendi; 2nd, Ogham 57.

Also ran: Nochero, Coup de Foudre and Los Indios.

Dividends: Grey Lara $6.40 and $3, Ogham $4.50.

Won by a neck.

Time: 1'30 2/5.

Premio Infante, 1400 metres.—1st, Licinio, 49 kilos, H. Barcena; 2nd, Irú 50.

Also ran: Didur, Genial, Quiroguita, Simonide and Loteric.

Dividends: Licinio, $6.70 and $3.30; Irú, $4.70.

Won by a length and a half.

Time: 1'30 2/5.

CRICKET

HURLINGHAM v. BELGRANO

As a preliminary to the coming cricket season, Belgrano travelled to Hurlingham on Sunday for a friendly match which ended in the most exciting manner.

The visitors lost by the narrow margin of one run, after a good game in which Messrs. Gardom, Mold and Lacey for Hurlingham, and Messrs. Dornning and Magrane for the visitors were the outstanding performers of the match.

Hurlingham batted first and started disastrously, losing Jackson and Mendl at once. Powell-Jones who joined Gardom, also had a short life but Mold, by steady, if slow play, helped the total.

The last man in, Lacey, hit well, and rattled up 42 before being beaten by Bulman, and the score read all out 165.

Belgrano started exceedingly well with Dornning and Magrane, but after they were separated a rot set in, and the innings closed for 164 not out, of which Dornning and Magrane scored 132.

It was a good and enjoyable game, with the following scores:

HURLINGHAM
N. W. Jackson, b Dornning . . .	0
F. J. Mendl, c and b Griffin . .	0
W. D. Gardom, b Griffin . . .	45

BASEBALL

BUENOS AIRES V. LA PLATA

A record number of spectators turned up to witness the great game on 'Armours' ground, Berisso, La Plata, and it proved most exciting. The populace of Ensenada,—British, North Americans, Argentinos and even Turks,—are beginning to take a great interest in the game. Some three or four hundred were present, and probably because of the lovely sunshine the Ladies turned out in force.

The Band of the La Plata Fire Brigade discoursed excellent music which added greatly to a most enjoyable afternoon, and the band-master must be congratulated on selecting English operatic music and American Rag-times, which naturally appealed to the majority present.

Play started at 2 p.m. The Buenos Aires team commenced well, and the game was six-three in their favour until the ninth inning, when they seemed to get a bit tired and La Plata to wake up.

Jaeverts made two magnificent catches. Sturgeon who came to the bat in the ninth innings as a pinch hitter in place of Winscibich, made a two bagger, driving in two runs and then scoring the run that tied the game.

Cannon's fine hit in the tenth which brought in the winning run, and the coaching and rooting of Kid Anderson, caused great enthusiasm, especially amongst the ladies present.

Taking the game all round it was a very fast one and the better team won. There was some pretty work on both sides. Perhaps the B.A. boys were a bit handicapped by the hard ground.

They will do better with a bit more practice.

ARMOUR V. FRIGORIFICO ARGENTINO

Before an enthusiastic crowd that taxed the Club house veranda and adjoining grounds to capacity, the Frigorifico Argentino Central were completely overwhelmed by the Armour boys while the Buenos Aires Base Ball Association were being beaten at La Plata. The Armour defensive was a revelation to the fans and their batting was just as wonderful. The Armour team is blessed with a pair of twirlers in Lopez and Wilson who are the equal of any seen at Talleres in many a day. They were masters of their opponents from the very start and backed up by errorless fielding had the local lads at their mercy. Roy Gottman, Gallaway, Stratton, Gooley and the rest of the Armour boys played their usual good game.

The Argentino Central showed weaknesses in certain positions that must be overcome if they wish to be contenders for the pennant. It is hoped that some good ball players will report to fill up these gaps. Manager Bliss of the Argentino Central team would like to hear from some likely ball players and it is suggested that they get in touch with him at once. However by no means are the Argentino Central out of the race and it is a safe prediction that the end of the season will find them up with the league leaders.

Score :—Armour 26, Argentino Central 4.

BELGRANO ATHLETIC CLUB

GENERAL MEETING.

The minutes of the last meeting were duly read and passed, the balance sheet and the report also were duly submitted and approved.

For the coming year Mr. H. C. Thompson was elected President with Mr. H. Dornier as First Vice-President, and Mr. E. W. S. Thomson as second Vice-President.

The Committee chosen were Messrs. J. H. Wood, W. Watson, A. G. Pruden, R. E. H. Anderson, F. L. H. Maitland, D. H. Nye, A. E. Forget.

Mr. J. G. Brown was elected captain of the Association Football, with N. H. Vignoles as vice-captain, and as a Committee member, Mr. J. H. Wood.

The change in rules 9, 10, 11, 14 and 15 was adopted.

The captaincy of the Rugby Football and of the Hockey, was left in the hands of the governing committee, owing to so large a proportion of members having gone to the war, and the regular programme of games being uncertain.

After the usual vote of thanks to retiring members, the ex-President, Mr. J. D. Shepard, made a suitable reply, in which he thanked the club members for their support and confidence in past months.

The meeting then concluded.

SAN ISIDRO (1) v. ATLANTA (0).

A surprisingly good game was put up by Atlanta on their own ground at Parque Chacabuco on Sunday. They held the champions well and were unlucky in not being able to draw.

San Isidro scored through Marini, by a somewhat lucky effort. The game was well contested and bright and afforded the spectators with a good afternoon. The teams were :

Atlanta—E. Bolinches; R. Valentini and M. Lesa; A. Freedes, R. Denecini and J. Pereyra; T. Alvarez, C. Chevez, F. Hegoburo, F. Rafin and A. Cazenave.

RACING v. TIGRE.

Played at Avellanada on Sunday, a most one-sided game resulted in Racing scoring without difficulty no less than six times, and Tigre never once.

The game caused the spectators plenty of fun on account of the fact that Racing played with their opponents just as they wished. The scores were Ohaco 4; Hospital 1; and Comaschi 1.

AT LOOS

ANGLO-ARGENTINE'S EXPERIENCE.

(To the Editor).

Sir :—Perhaps you may kindly find space to transcribe a letter from Leonard Hearne to his mother in England, after having taken part in the general advance at Loos towards the end of September.

Leonard, who has only recently completed his 19th year, joined the "London Irish Rifles" shortly after the declaration of war, probably being the first "Quilmero" to volunteer. His elder brother, Maurice, the only other in the family of an age to serve the old country, is attached to the R.F.A., and from the last news to hand was expecting to be drafted to the Eastern field of operations.

My Dear Mother,

"At last I have time to write a line to you. Early last Saturday morning we went into the trenches. Our orders were for the whole of our division to charge and take the 1st and 2nd line of German trenches. Of course waiting in our own trenches for the final order to be given was a bit unnerving, but directly we got over the ladder and were advancing toward the German lines we felt all right.

"Nº. 13th Platoon, that is the one I am in, with two others from A and C Company, were the first to get over. Then we advanced towards the Germans. It was very thick with smoke as we (here the censor has crossed out a line) and managed to get to their line. We advanced altogether about 1,400 yards, and of course our battalion suffered pretty heavily in killed and wounded, and there are still a good few cheaps who are not yet accounted for, although I expect in time their names will all appear in the English papers.

"We lost a great many officers, and from our Platoon of three, two were killed and the other wounded, but still we were told that we had done very well indeed, and when the names of the battalions taking part in the attack are made known, I think you will find ours well in evidence, in fact we were told by one officer that our battalion did as well as any other in the British Army could possibly have done.

"I am pleased to say that I am quite alright and as cheerful as possible under the circumstances.

"All I got was a bullet that touched the 2nd finger of my right hand, but that is a mere detail. We stopped in the trenches until Tuesday night, and now, Thursday, we are a good way behind the line, and I expect in for a bit of a rest, which I can tell you we can do with.

"The Germans are a mean lot, as with my own eyes I saw them shelling our Red Cross, but our boys gave them "gip." I saw plenty of the devils, dead and alive, but was unable to get a German helmet for Ernesto. I must tell you that souvenir hunting is rather a risky job, and for the present think it better to let it alone.

"Well mother be sure not to worry about me as I'm going along splendidly."

Yours, etc.,

ALBERT HEARNE.

ENGLISH HIGHER GRADE SCHOOL

ANNUAL SPORTS

Monday, Nov 8

Favoured with perfect weather, the annual sports of the English Higher Grade School, postponed from Saturday last, were held at the Villa Urquiza ground yesterday.

Sharply at 9.30 a.m. the fun commenced and lasted until 6.30 at night, and the large number of some 600 ladies and gentlemen present had an enjoyable although tiring day. As for the children and the competitors, what a great day they had!

All kinds of events were provided for them, and it required a large committee to look after the arrangements. Both lunch and tea were provided, and the fun was at its height to a late hour.

POLICE ARMAMENT

EXAMINATION BY WAR OFFICE.

By order of the Minister of War, a careful examination of all arms and munitions in possession of the Central Police Department is being made, to ascertain that the weapons are in a serviceable condition.

A number of armourers detailed from the Arsenal under a Captain of the army are making thorough overhaul of the Mauser rifles in the Police barracks, noting all deficiencies. It is expected that the work will extend over several days.

A report of the proficiency in shooting of the members of the force is also to be supplied to the War Office.

A quantity, some 6000, Mauser rifles were issued to the Police of the Province of Buenos Aires some time ago by the National Arsenal.

It is alleged that the Provincial Police have failed to comply with this order on the ground that the armament cannot be found or is in use and that an offer has been made to reimburse the arsenal to the value of the weapons. The 6000 rifles are said to be valued at $40,000, which certainly appears cheap. No one can object to pay less than $7 for a modern repeating rifle, but such prices are naturally not for the public.

BRITAIN IN WARTIME

ANGLO-ARGENTINE VOLUNTEERS

The following interesting letter has been received by an official of the British Society from Mr. A. W. MacLachlan, who was well known in this country some little time ago:—

No doubt you are already aware of the combined victory on the part of the French and British forces gained last Saturday.

The great news was given out publicly last night, at a concert held at the Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, by the director, and I assure you the reception of the same was magnificent.

My countrymen in the Argentine are probably sceptical as to what Great Britain is doing in the great fight with the Huns, but let me say that as far as I can see and judge there does not exist the slackness that some of our papers attribute to us. Nowadays it is very difficult to see a young man, who is fit, that is not in khaki, and believe me when I state that the enthusiasm shown by those unfortunates (as they call themselves) to have a go at Kaiser Bill and his hordes, is beyond description.

I know of cases where young Argentine born boys who hold commissions in his Majesty's forces are so disgusted at their not being sent to the front, that they are almost tempted to resign their rank, and enlist as Tommies in some regiment already at the front, and whose ranks have sadly diminished. Only last evening at the Concert a young Lieutenant told me that he has had 11 months training, and is afraid he will not have a cut at the Huns. This is the universal spirit and wish of the large majority.

Eastbourne has a big R.A.M.C. encampment, and also an enormous convalescent home, so I have occasion of seeing both the recruiting and its results. It is wonderful to see the great interest taken by the recruits in learning how to drill and march, and I assure you after a month's hard work, the new recruit looks as if he had had a year's training, and when they are exempt from duty, their martial bearing gives me the idea that no "Hum" will "Pisar their Ponchos," unless they know the reason why.

Just at present the convalescent camps are full of men who have been badly wounded, and who have been sent to Eastbourne to enjoy the beautiful sea air, and to be bucked up before rejoining the colours. To look at them one would never think they have been in the trenches, as they are very happy and contented, and with rare exceptions, very anxious to rejoin. The exceptions being those who are loath to leave their families, but even these are few.

The new budget and taxes have been well received by the public, in fact everyone is anxious to pay their whack, and help on the Government. Of course the fact that we have to pay more for tea and sugar, coffee, etc. hits the poorer class heavily, but then those who want to work are earning good wages and can support the extra cost. I have put in 3 weeks hard work in the Registration of the Eastbourne Population, and now this work is finished, I find it hard to know what to do to pass the time.

On the 8th of this month I happened to be an eye-witness of a Zeppelin raid over London, and if it had not been for brutality of the whole affair, I assure you I would never have enjoyed a fireworks display with greater appreciation. The reception given to the Zeps was very warm, and one, at least, was in full view of the enormous crowd for at least 20 minutes.

The work done by the Fire-Brigade was marvellous, as at 12 p.m. blazes were seen at four or five different parts of the city but next morning they were all put out.

I hear that the British Society has started an "Aeroplane Fund" and I have instructed my partner to sub-

KILLED IN ACTION

MR. LEONARD HEARNE

"There is but one task for all—
For each one life to give.
Who stands if Freedom Fall
Who dies if England Live?"

—Kipling.

By a melancholy coincidence, for the second time the publication in THE HERALD of the battle experience of an Anglo-Argentine volunteer in the Franco-Flemish campaign, has been followed by the death of the writer in action.

Under the heading "At Loos: An Anglo-Argentine's experience," a letter was published on Friday, Nov. 5, from Mr. Leonard Hearne (serving in the London Irish Rifles), who, it is said, was the first volunteer from Quilmes. His description of that glorious and hard fought action and of the doings of Platoon 13, was bright, clear and modest. He had a graze from a bullet, and expressed strong opinions on German methods. When his letter was written he was resting with his company at the rear of the fighting line, but evidently this was not of long duration, as news of his death arrives almost on the day of publishing his letter. His bereaved relatives will receive the sympathy of all for his loss. The last words of his letter, "I am going along splendidly" shows how true it is that "The brave man dies but once, the coward in his life dies many times."

Mr. Maurice Hearne is also serving in the Royal Field Artillery. It is a fine family record.

FISHERMEN'S STRIKE

AT MAR DEL PLATA.

There has been, of late, a sufficient difference of opinion between the owners of fishing vessels at Mar del Plata and the fishermen as to cause yesterday a general strike of the latter.

They are demanding several concessions in an attempt to ameliorate their condition and have firmly expressed their wishes, but at the same time have stated that they have no desire to aggravate the matter and that they are prepared to consider any concessions.

Perfect order prevails and any interference by the port authorities has been found quite unnecessary.

The trade is by no means at a standstill. The owners of vessels have replaced the crews with a number of peons, but the fishing results have been found to be very poor.

The matter is not regarded as serious and a reasonable settlement is hourly expected.

My letter to you has resulted rather lengthy, but as I know how enthusiastic you are over the British Society, and its doings, I trust you will pardon me giving you such a long yarn of a member's views.

Believe me, dear Sir,
"Great Britain is out to win, and win we shall."

The Argentine born boys who are serving in the British ranks, and whose parents are living in Eastbourne are:—

Lieutenant, Harold Duggan; Private, Jack Brown, both relatives of the Wilsons; Captain, Eric Cassels; Lieutenant, Frank Cassels, sons of Brank J. Cassels, late of Quilmes.

Of the above, H. Duggan is now in the trenches, and all the others mad to go.

TRADE WITH THE STATES

PROSPECTS OF EXTENSIVE DEVELOPMENT

CAUSE OF EARLY FAILURES

Mr. Sternfield, consulting engineer, of this city, has recently returned from the United States, where he has been engaged in investigating the opportunities for an interchange of business enterprises between both countries.

Now, according to Mr. Sternfield, is the time for both countries to move towards that end.

The war in Europe, he stated, has effectually wrought a vast change in favour of the United States in South America.

"Unquestionably the Latin American people are looking to their northern neighbour as they have never looked before," he said, "Argentina, as well as the other Southern Republics, has learned to her sorrow what dependence upon Europe has cost her. She realizes what a closer union commercially with the United States might mean if mutual concessions and co-operation could bring it about. It is for the Americans to meet her half way toward such a consummation, and now is the time for Argentina as well as the United States to manifest material evidence of that desire."

"When I say 'material' I mean the investment of capital in South America," he continued. "Any serious campaign for the extension of America's trade must eventually contemplate a considerable outlay in Latin American enterprises, and these projects must be under the direction of American managers."

According to Mr. Sternfield, the railroads of South America, particularly in certain sections, offer to their commercial neighbour a most attractive opening, and there are many reasons why this should be the case, especially at this time.

He stated that there were transactions which could be accomplished at the present time at reasonable terms that would have been practically impossible a few years ago, and perhaps only two years ago.

At the present moment the South Americans would welcome the United States as they would not have done a little while ago.

"Many people might remember," he said, "how about three years ago the Farquhar-Pearson interests sought to create an ambitious system of railroad extension and dominion in South America. American capital was to prevail and ultimately there was to be direct rail route from Canada to the lowermost tip of South America. The outbreak of the first Balkan war upset the money market and the proposed consolidation fell through, although American capital did gain some valuable holdings."

The opposition to the project called the scheme a "United States dream of conquest" but those who really understood the motive behind the effort realized that the aim was for American financial and commercial co-operation and a business union between two great neighbours.

"There are possibilities now of achieving just this end, and the United States chance has come from the seed sown by their mercantile rivals of Europe and the bitter harvest that the Latin Americans have reaped through too ready an acceptance of the gilded plenty temptingly offered them from Europe."

"Foreign capital," he went on to state, "dominates most of South American railways and this has given United States commercial competitors a great advantage. A tabular statement of the conditions of affairs will clear the matter."

"Take the Argentine Republic, for example, where the richest field now exists for railroad enterprises. Strange as it may seem, there is only one railway in South America owned by native capital apart from the lines controlled by the Argentine Government. The rest are mostly owned by foreign corporations, as the following figures will show:—

	Length in kilometers	Capital invested
British	22,908	$875,000,000
French	3,770	112,000,000
Argentine (private)	269	9,000,000
Argentine Gov.	5,907	122,000,000

32,854 $1,118,000,000

"This shows the meaning of the foreign outlays in the Argentine. Alien capital has a very close grip upon the transport arteries of the country and; logically, a controlling hold upon every contributive exploitation or dependent interest. In some ways South America to-day is a duplication of the United States' own history during the pioneer period of railway development and it is well known how close and how lasting were the relations between those lines and the new communities and the outlying regions so fed."

"Argentina is by nature primarily an agricultural country, and the raising of live stock has been its greatest source of revenue. At first the ranges were relatively near to the coast or close to the Parana and Uruguay rivers—especially the former. Naturally, in the course of time the ranches and the ranges spread further and further inland over the wide grass-region, and this in its turn called for tapping railroads to facilitate the transfer of cattle and hides, and, later wheat to the seaboard at Buenos Aires and La Plata. All this has affected an economic revolution, and quite intimate is the relation of the railroads with this development."

Mr. Sternfield stated that there are practically no manufactured articles made in the hemisphere south of the United States. Latin America, he considered, requires all sorts of iron and steel products ranging from pins and needles to bridges and locomotives. Besides these there is a growing field for cement for masonry, coal for generating steam, some kinds of structural lumber and wearing apparel household effects, kitchen, utensils, etc.

These are the things, which, as Mr. Sternfield states, the great industrial centres of the sister continent up in the north, are turning out in ever increasing quantities as the years go on, and the manufactories are seeking for a wider outlet for their surplus.

He also remarked, that despite various handicaps, the United States have been able to compete with European manufacturers to some limited extent. Their rolled steel products such as rails, structural shapes for buildings and bridges, have, thanks to the progressive business methods of the great steel industries, won recognition both in this country and elsewhere, notwithstanding the higher cost of labour there.

He then pointed out that agricultural machinery, typewriters, sewing machines, phonographs and other mechanical specialties are the peculiar fruit of American inventive genius, and have been welcomed largely because their equals could not be bought elsewhere. And while a vast number of other manufactured articles and materials, have been, until the outbreak of the war, generally obtained from European sources; they are now produced by the United States itself.

In exchange, he proceeded to mention, "South America has to offer the fruits of her soil, agricultural and pastoral aid, some minerals in which she is rich. The latter, however, do not include coal and iron."

"It is evident, then," he said, "that the United States is prepared to offer in trade things which they produce in abundance, and yet it is strange to assert that with the exception of her hides and moderate quantities of other things, South America has but a modest market in the States for the bulk of her ranch outputs."

"England, France, Germany, Belgium, etc. do need South America's foodstuffs, and for that very reason the southern continent has been a ready return market for Europe's excess of manufactured articles."

"Indeed, Europe and South America were brought in close commercial touch by the force of reciprocal needs."

Mr. Sternfield then alleged that conditions are rapidly changing. The United States is becoming more dependent upon the foodstuffs of South America.

He claimed that it was absolutely necessary for the United States to seek South America for a market, and find ways to sell other goods here in greater quantities and wider varieties, and be able to do this in the face of the most energetic competition.

"Now, we shall see what Britain's interest in South American railroads," he continued "will do toward carrying out this proposed campaign of trade absorption. The figures already given show in the case of Argentine that English capital represents quite 78 per cent of all capital invested in the railroads of that Republic, while approximately 70 per cent of the mileage is under British control. In Chile the lines are either operated by the Government or by British interests. There are something like 12,000 miles of lines in Brazil. In the latter country, the United States has been fortunate enough to gain a foothold. Half the mileage in that country is controlled by a company incorporated in the United States, but the capital, however, has been drawn from English, French and Belgian banks. Some of the remaining half is owned and operated by the Brazilian Government, but the major part is under British dominance."

"In Ecuador, the Guayaquil and Quito railroad is partly controlled by American interests, but of the 4,500 miles of railways in the rest of South America, the larger part is owned and managed by British capital. In Central America there are 1500 miles of railroads which are very extensively controlled by interests allied with the United Fruit Company. These lines buy their supplies, as a rule, in the United States and American operative methods are employed. Among the Government owned railroads in South America there is a disposition to favor American supplies and equipment, but these lines constitute but a very modest part of the total mileage."

"Here is just where the hitch comes in at present," he said. "If an American salesman approaches the purchasing agents of the European owned lines he is almost sure to meet with a rebuff. The rolling stock, the rails, the miscellaneous equipment, etc. are well nigh universally of British or continental origin."

"There are many reasons why until now no great headway was made by the United States in this country. Such, for instance, as the want of knowledge of the native tongue; a lack of graciousness on the part of some salesmen; goods not packed to suit the South American transit facilities; the need of American banks; the grace of long credit; the need of transportation in American owned ships; direct mail routes, and many other causes."

"But these are of secondary importance. The real issue is the necessity of Americans coming over to this country to invest capital, which will not only mean South America's welfare, but that of the United States."

"There are many obstacles to overcome, but with money and energy, vast improvements could be realized," he concluded.

DISUSED RAILWAY LINES

It is stated that the Minister of Public Works has been in conference with the authorities of the Central Argentine Railway regarding the lines existent in the Paseo de Julio, the same account avers they are to be removed and the ground occupied by them made over to the Municipality for the purpose of constructing a continuous line of gardens as far as possible in order to link up with the Parque 3 de Febrero.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

ADVICE TO BRITONS.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—There is a matter on which the British commercial community here is woefully wanting in energy, viz: the consignment of goods to German firms by British firms in England.

That this is going on is a well known fact to many of us, to the everlasting shame of the British firms so concerned.

I have myself been able to detect one glaring case, and have duly reported the matter to our Consul here, who has at once taken up the matter and is reporting to the proper authorities at home.

What I have been able to do, can easily be done by one and all of us, by simply watching the ships' manifests in our own particular lines and reporting all cases to the Consul who will no doubt take the matter up as he has done in my own case.

As a matter of fact we all know the marks of our German rivals who are working against us, and we need only request our respective despachantes to watch the manifests for us and report the matter, and I almost think it would come within the scope of the Patriotic Society to take the matter in hand on their own account, or appoint a sub-committee to do so.

I would also remind the British community here that our Second Aeroplane has not yet been fully subscribed for, that flag waving kills no Germans, but the aeroplanes can and are intended to do so.

I see in the Home papers that the community on the Gold Coast has already sent sufficient funds for two aeroplanes, and surely we can do what that small community can do.

Yours, etc.,

S. A. ROGERS.

P.S.—Every British firm at home should be made to disclose on oath the ultimate destination of every consignment, with a severe penalty for a false declaration.

EMPLOYMENT OF GERMANS

CASE OF THE SUBTERRANEAN.

(To the Editor)

Sir,—With reference to your item "Trading with the Enemy" I beg to call your attention to the Anglo-Argentine Subway. It is a well known fact that this concern has been practically run by Germans who insisted on employing German workmen as far as possible although it is understood that there is little or no German capital in the business now. Until October last these Germans were comfortably installed in good billets and formed quite a fraternity among themselves, much to the discomfort of other workmen who did not happen to be kulturists. It would be interesting if through your columns, you asked the Anglo-Argentine authorities here, if it is a fact that instructions were sent from England to the effect that all Germans were to be discharged and if so why they did not clear them all out instead of putting off some 50 or 60 and leaving all the German heads in their positions who in return retained a few favoured German workmen. We know that no large concern can dismiss their head staff in a short time, but the war has been on nearly 15 months now and no move was made to clear them out until October 1915 when only workmen were discharged and not one German official.

Yours, etc.

CAMP NOTES

(By Our Agricultural Editor.)

The recent rains and present warmer weather will have a most beneficial effect on all out-door pursuits, and help to bring away the grass more rapidly, which in some parts is wanted. The large swarms of locusts to be seen even in the outskirts of the Capital are rather disheartening for many farmers who have sown large areas of maize, and possibly only for the locusts to clean up.

From Home journals to hand I notice that the Swift Meat Co., had recently shipped from Montevideo some extra choice quarters of beef which made the satisfactory price of 6s. for hinds, and 4s. for fores per stone of eight pounds. The extra weight of such quarters was possibly the cause of their not making a higher figure, as hind quarters chilled were quoted to 6¼ per stone about the same date, while in some cases fores made 4½, or 7d. per pound.

Trade for pigs has been slightly firmer here of late, as more than one of the important freezers have no doubt been tempted to consign pigs to the London market where values have been ruling as high as 1s. per pound. If our pig breeders would only take the necessary steps for catering for this market by supplying animals of the necessary weight and quality, then the buyers here would operate more freely and with more advantage for the feeder.

Reports from the principal centres in Scotland show a considerable drop in cattle values. Formerly best quality handy weights of butchers' cattle were realising up to 72s. per cwt. live weight, but values have recently receded to 64s. per cwt. live weight, which means a very big difference to feeders in Scotland.

Large supplies of cattle have been received at the local market this week, and values have been well sustained with a firm demand for all classes of cows or rougher cattle for butchers' requirements. The top price reported for steers was $270, while the exceptional figure of $216 was obtained for fat cows. Good quality "frigorifico" steers in the camp are reported to be worth about 30 cents a pound dead.

Sheep entries were about the same as the preceding week, but less interest was shown by the freezers for wethers, though hoggets and good quality lambs experienced a fair inquiry, and late rates were maintained.

During the month of September the total number of cattle sold at the Liniers market was 89,127 head. The aggregate price was $12,724,770, and the average $144.30 a head. The average price in January was $99; in February $89; March and April, $95; May $96; June $94; July $115.10; August, $135.40. The average of $144.30 for the month of September shows a remarkable rise over that month last year, when $115 was the average.

On the Southern Railway system 2,089,000 hectares are computed to have been sown with cereals, distributed approximately as follows:—1,309,000 wheat; 700,000 oats; 60,000 barley, and 20,000 linseed. The total area sown is considered greater than last year's. Maize sowings are now finished, and the plants are noticeable above the ground. Other crop conditions are reported favourable on this line, the late rains having been very beneficial. Harvest is expected to be later than last year, but that greatly depends on the weather experienced between now and harvest. Locusts have not been reported as having done any damage so far.

The Central Argentine Railway supply the following figures computing the areas sown with the different cereals within their zone. The area sown with wheat amounts to 2,075,000 hectares, as against last year 2,062,395, a slight increase of 13,382 hectares. The area under linseed this year is 1,045,868 hectares, while last year's was somewhat greater, amounting to 1,085,043 hectares, which shows a decrease of 40,175 hectares. Maize this year covers 2,502,076 hectares, last year 2,364,805, increase 137,271 hectares. The principal maize zone, computed to represent more than half the maize area, is traversed by this railway.

Mr. A. J. Marshall, a well-known figure in the importing of pedigree animal trade, is returning home by the s.s. La Negra. It is now a considerable number of years since this gentleman joined the ranks of importers of pedigree animals, and during that time he has made many friends and gained the confidence of breeders in this Republic, by his straightforward methods and upright dealing, combined with the invariable high quality and good results obtained by his importations. Mr. Marshall does not depend on purchasing all his animals from breeders, as he is the owner of one of the most numerous and best selected herds of pedigree Shorthorns in Britain, containing a great infusion of that most exclusive and select line of females, "Augustus," justly famous the world over for their invariable good quality and true breeding characteristics. Mr. Marshall's many friends here wish him a safe and pleasant journey home.

Mr. James Sidey, who is very well known in live stock circles here as a partner of the firm of Messrs. Sidey and Poels, left England on the Avon. It is understood that Mr. Sidey's stay here will be a brief one, as he intends returning to England in time for the important home bull sales in the Spring. His many friends extend him a hearty welcome back to the land, where he is well "kent," and that for "guid."

ARGENTINE HORSES IN ENGLAND.

The operations in the horse export trade are being confined solely to the acquisition of a suitable grade of horse for army purposes, with a few operations, on a limited scale, for the best quality heavy draught horses. Conversing with a large shipper the other day he informed me that the very conspicuous brands on all animals coming from this Republic had been prejudicial to their sale at home.

The designating brand told the prospective buyers that the animals had come from the Argentine whose horses, for quietness or soundness, have not earned a very enviable reputation. It can readily be understood that "potros," or colts, only tied up here for a few days to a post, and possibly able to lead, are quite likely to give a lively time to the purchaser in Britain, as the salesmen in the interests of their clients would describe the horses as having performed work in this Republic. A worse animal than the young unbroken horse is the old mare, many of which were included in shipments, and had never done a day's work in their lives. Some of them are only broken to leading in a rough sort of a way previous to shipment. Such class of animals, and there were many shipped, would surprise any farmer who after satisfying himself by the mare's mouth that she was a seven-year-old, would find her turn out so bad when he attempted to put her into harness as to "scare" him off any such class of horses. He would also advise all his friends in the district about the bad performance of a seven-year-old Argentine mare, which was possibly sold to him as having been working here. She might have been yoked according to the peculiar systems here, and then turn out too lively when harnessed under the different conditions in Britain.

Many happenings of a similar nature have not improved the reputation of the "branded" horses as Argentine animals are described. The North American breeders for export are very careful, and as a rule do not brand their horses or at least not in the prominent way followed here. To make the mark more conspicuous it is generally "cast-branded" by the owner previous to loading, as a sign that the animals have been sold. Some times they are branded with a third mark which many working animals carry, denoting the present owner. Horses can be branded in such a way as to be distinguishable without really burning the flesh of the poor beast, as not unfrequently happens here. It behoves breeders of horses that are likely to be exported to mark as lightly as possible. It will be to their advantage as the exporters can rely on selling such horses more readily at British sales than if they are heavily branded.

HORSES IN CONDITION.

All whose work depends upon their horses desire to have them in right condition, by which is meant perfect physical fitness for the particular purpose for which they are kept. Though the notes as herewith are to a certain degree applicable to all horses, they are concerned more directly with horses that are kept for farm work of one class or another.

To attain condition in a horse it is always advisable to study the individuality of the particular animal, the more especially so in the case of one that is high bred, sensitive and nervous. With regard to a horse in which the latter traits are especially developed, keep such an animal amid familiar home surroundings as much as possible; let it occupy the stall that it is used to, and, if turned out, let it be into the familiar paddock, and the work of conditioning will be decidedly facilitated.

The horse cannot stand inaction, and to get him into condition, or to maintain that condition, regular exercise is an absolute necessity. As to the exact amount of exercise required, no rule can be stated. The class of horse and the individuality, too, must in every case be taken into account, and these factors, aided by a little common sense and a fair general knowledge of horses, must be relied upon to determine the point. Do not overwork if a horse is desired to gain in condition, but endeavour to strike the happy medium.

The grooming of horses is not always given the consideration it deserves. Proper grooming has much to do with condition. Grooming, of course, materially improves the appearance of the coat; but, if done properly, it does more than this, as it means the thorough and pleasurable massaging of the whole of the skin, and helps very greatly in the imparting of tone and vigour to the whole system.

Cleanliness in and about the stable and all its fittings has a vital bearing upon condition. Keep mangers and racks clean, and attend to adequate ventilation. A horse does not require a draughty stable, but an airy one, and so housed is hardier, healthier and better in every way than one forced to suffer stuffy quarters.

Whatever purpose a horse may be called upon to fill, the harness or gearing used should fit exactly. In ill-

THE GARDEN AND ORCHARD

HINTS TO AMATEURS

(By "The Rustic.")

Garden.—The transplanting of plants as advised in our last article is to be continued. Lawns should be mowed; evergreens trimmed and pruned and trailers trained. Sprays must be repeated at intervals, if rains have washed away the previous ones. Sow Asthers, Balsamine, Cyclamen, Carnations, Sweet William, Cosmos, Coxcombs, Chrysanthemums, Flox, Geraniums, etc. Roses may be grafted; but it is perhaps a little late for the early spring graft, and it would be advisable to wait till the late summer. For this purpose it is a good practice to mark all plants from which grafts are to be taken with the name and variety of the rose; also all other plants from which seeds are to be gathered for next year.

Orchard.—The thinning of excess fruit should be continued. Prune unfruitful branches and put supports to the weaker ones where the excess of fruit is liable to break them. Prune vines of unfruitful branches, specially on the trunk and main trailers.

Plagues and Insects.—Employ the pulverisations mentioned in our last article. Special treatment for wood worms, as described in our general notes. The black ants are commencing to make their appearance, so attention must be paid to them.

Snails and slugs are also putting in an appearance, and specially those small slugs which attack the pear, apple, and plum trees, eating the soft part of the leaf, and leaving the veins, so that the leaf looks just like a piece of lace-work. Also the small round ball-shaped insect generally found around small plants growing in shady places. I shall be glad to give special information through these columns to anybody consulting me regarding the treatment of plagues, and will be obliged if they will send, where possible, a well preserved specimen of the insect or plant affected, as the case may be.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

The wood worm plague is very common in the fruit trees around Buenos Aires, specially the peach tree, and is apparent by the general weak appearance of the tree which shows signs of drying up, and at the same time sends out large quantities of gum. This emission of gum can easily be confused with another very different disease known as "Gomosis," if not observed closely. By sharply cutting the surface of the bark in one of the spots where gum is issuing, if a clean hole about the size of a pin's head is disclosed, it is a sign that the woodworm is present, but if it is an irregular hole or slit, or the wood is dark in colour, and no clear opening is visible, it will be the "gomosis." The worm works in the bark of the tree, between it and the trunk, and burrows in in all directions until same is destroyed. Of course, if there is any doubt as to fitting harness a horse is bound to suffer in one way or another, and this reacts upon condition. Do not be content with tackle fitting fairly well, but see that it fits perfectly. A proper adjustment of the parts has much to do with fit and comfort, but the vital parts, such as the draught collar and the riding saddle, must conform to the anatomy of the particular animal.

In the exercising or working of a horse condition depends very greatly upon the individual to whose hands the horse is entrusted. Upon exactly the same diet and general care one man will keep a horse in good condition, whilst another will have him lose condition, even though the work may be exactly the same in each case. The one man is in sympathy with the horse, whilst the other is not. The horse is worried in many little ways, and the nerves react upon the system.

whether it is the worm or not, by taking a large branch and peeling the bark off, the work of the worm can then be clearly seen.

The treatment for this is to prune the tree thoroughly. That is in the first place to cut right away all badly-affected branches and prune the others down so that they will be forced to send out new wood. This, of course, means the loss of fruit for the current year, but it will save your tree. Then the tree should be strongly manured. The best manure for this case is Chilian Salitre, applied round the root in a circle 1 metre from the trunk. Chemical manures based on phosphates and ammonium compounds are also recommended, but not so stable manures, because these are too slow in their effect if dry, and would burn the roots and give no result if fresh. The quantity of salitre used is about 200 grams, applied in two doses of 100 grams each, the first when the plant is pruned, and the second some months after, when the vegetation is in full force. The other chemical manures should be applied in accordance with the instructions given in each case, increased by about 30 per cent. The object of this treatment is to produce a reaction in the life of the plant, causing the sap to flow abundantly, and thus expel the worm, as this insect lives preferably where the flow of sap is poor and slow, but cannot thrive in healthy trees. It is therefore obvious that this plague enters plantations which for some reason or other (old age or some previous plague) are weakened, and consequently the prevention is better than the cure. And the prevention is to keep the trees healthy, well pruned, and free of disease. Many fruit tree plantations suffer from insufficient drainage, and this is specially the case with peach trees. We will touch on this point in one of our next articles, and also on the Diaspis Pentagona, which does such serious damage to the plantations in this country. The prevention against the woodworm includes the destruction of all cuttings by fire, and the disinfection of the trunk and branches with lime, etc.

To conclude we will make reference to the rose and sweet-pea show taking place to-night at Saint Saviour's Parish Room, Belgrano, and expect there is a treat in store for all amateur gardeners, as it is certain there will be a good display of flowers from the many lovely gardens which adorn our suburbs, and which, during the last few years have improved and increased in number so much.

SALE OF IMPORTED SHORTHORNS

Messrs. José M. de Yriondo and Co. submitted for auction on Nov. 4 before a representative attendance of estancieros, a select lot of imported Shorthorns, the property of, and in many cases the animals were also bred by, Messrs. R. and G. Hughes, than whom no firm hold a more honourable position in this country, for the invariable good quality of their importations. The lot submitted for sale yesterday afternoon were looking admirably well, and shown in splendid bloom, which fact was very favourably commented on by interested visitors. Bulls sold at prices ranging from $1500 to $7000, with an average of $3555 for the 9 bulls sold. LAND IN CHUBUT

A REPLY TO MR. J. THOMSON.

(From a Correspondent.)

It is impossible for me to explain to Mr. John Thomson what the land laws of the Argentine are, but I can tell him what the practice generally followed is. To begin with, there is no Government camp for sale in "this irrigation district." In fact, there is no Government land in the valley which can be irrigated by means of the system of canals as it now exists. Almost all the hills, however, which bound the valley belong to the Government, and much of it, say, one-tenth of it at the most, could be irrigated by means of windmills or any other mechanical contrivance. I have heard of a little of such land being sold by the Government in years gone by at the rate of $2 per hectarea, but I have heard, and know of many more who have been for many years trying to buy from the Government which as persistently refuses to sell. The same can be said of the land "up country" beyond the valley. I know men who have squatted on land for many years and have been trying their hardest to get their deeds for the land, but have not yet succeeded in getting them. One such has been on the land for 14 years, but he is no nearer getting his title deeds for the land to-day than he was when he first set foot upon it. The Government refuses to move in any direction. It will not give this man his rights, nor will it sell him the land. The man is not alone in his trouble by any means, nor is his period of squatting by any means the longest. I think it would be hopeless for your correspondent, Mr. Thomson, to begin worrying about Government land sales. If he is very keen on getting land here, let him buy with his $4000 a piece of the valley which is already under irrigation, or which can be easily brought under the system now existing. There is any amount of land for sale—all kinds of land—land under cultivation; land partially so, and land untouched, but the amount he is willing to invest is small for land of any kind except the last-named. Besides, it is in the valley that his experience in agriculture will be of most use to him. Of course, Mr. Thomson might by some stroke of luck be able to induce the Government to sell a patch of land, but if one is to judge by the experience of former squatters who have been on the land for years, and who know the legal ropes very well, the best thing he can do is to leave it severely alone.

The new train service of the F.C.C.C. along the extension to the Upper Valley began on Nov. 5. This will be a great convenience to those for "up there" to come down to Gaiman, Trelew, or Madryn, to do their business. I have also heard that a bridge is to be built across the R. Chubut, to enable the inhabitants of the Salt Lands to bring their produce to the new station. Rumour has it that the F.C.C.C., in conjunction with the Government, are bearing the expense of it.

AWARDING THE PRIZES

Excellent weather favoured the judging which took place within the Rural Society's Show grounds yesterday, but it is incomprehensible how there was not a larger attendance of estancieros present to follow with interest the judge's decisions in the various classes. It is the enthusiasm that shows the life or spirit in any undertaking, but, judging by the very meagre attendance present during the forenoon, and the slightly larger number in the afternoon, there would not appear to be any interest at all taken in placing the awards at the Fat Stock

Show. The Shorthorn classes this year do not come up to the high level of some former exhibitions, though there are some outstanding animals in various classes. The Aberdeen-Angus are a considerable improvement on what I have seen at past shows and comprised many most useful, big, fleshy good stamp of butcher's cattle. The Herefords were also good, while the winner in the milch-tooth class was one of the levellest and sweetest models I have seen for many a day, and if his perfectly symmetrical form be retained as he grows bigger and heavier, he is destined to occupy an important position at some future show. The animal to which I refer is the property of Messrs. Duggan, in whose hands he is sure to be brought out in the best possible manner or as far as experience and skill in handling can effect. Several very grand specimens were also shown in the cross-bred classes, and augur well for a little more crossing to produce a better class of butcher's cattle, which is the aim of this show. The following comments were made on the different classes as they paraded before the judge in the ring:—

SHORTHORNS

The competing animals in the older Shorthorn class began to enter the ring at 8.30 a.m., but it was close on nine o'clock before the Comisario, Sr. Meyer Pellegrini had succeeded in parading all the animals entitled to compete. Mr. Mark McCormack then began to select the most conspicuous animals, and form them up, for further scrutiny. The large number of 61 animals all representative of the best fed Argentine meat, was to be seen at this parade, though it is regrettable that such a small attendance was present to witness the most important part of the show, viz.: the judging. A selection of 17 animals having been made, a parade was again formed to allow the judge to make further selections, which comprised representatives from such well known feeders and breeders as Srs. Martinez de Hoz, Ginocchio, Casey, etc.

Five more animals were sent outside reducing the number to twelve, which were really a splendid spectacle to observe as they paraded the ring. This lot of big heavy cattle were fortunate in having cool weather during the time they were on parade as there is no reason for so much walking as these animals were subjected to, prior to the judging, bearing in mind the amount of flesh necessarily carried by animals at a fat stock show. The representative of Sr. Ginocchio was finally awarded the leading honour and was to all appearances a very compact type of steer.

A very level fleshed white steer shown by Sr. Lorenzo Casey was awarded second place while a very big strong steer the property of Sr. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz had third honours. A nice quality and well brought out steer, the property of Sr. Villatte Olaguer, had the fourth award. The fifth ticket went to a strong, useful steer belonging to Messrs. Duggan Bros.

The following class for younger steers comprised 43 entries, and the quality here was again good. After a very careful scrutiny the numbers were reduced to the fifteen most likely candidates for the honours. The representative of Sr. Martinez de Hoz was an outstanding winner in this class, and afterwards annexed the Championship of the show.

The runner up was a big red bullock, the property of Sr. Alberto de Bary, while a compact red, the property of Sr. Juan J. Baurin, was awarded the third ticket. A strong roan shown by Sr. Villatte Olaguer was awarded fourth honours.

There were only 19 competitors in the class for younger steers and in this class Sr. Alberto E. Castex, Vedia scored many successes being awarded first, third, and fourth prizes, while the second award fell to an exhibit of Sr. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz.

A still younger class comprised only ten entries and the judge was very expeditious in fixing the awards. A curious coincidence was that the three winners were white in this class, the first prize winner going to Sr. Lorenzo Casey, while the runner up was the property of Srs. Stent and Baurin, as also was the third winner.

The last class for Shorthorns comprising animals with their milch teeth, brought out 13 entries, and a handsome and beautifully presented roan, the property of Suc. de Vivot was an outstanding winner. Second honours fell to Messrs. Baurin and Stent. The winner in this class was a most promising youngster and likely to be again heard off at some future show should he be retained for that purpose.

HEREFORDS

Class number one for this breed only brought forth thirteen competitors, and though one or two of the competing animals were somewhat patchy this was undoubtedly a strong class of a big good stamp of cattle. When parading the judge's eye caught sight of that exhibit of Mr. Charles A. Brown which was a most conspicuous animal for his merits, but was ultimately awarded 3rd ticket. After a very close scrutiny an exhibit from San Juan was placed at the head of the line and finally awarded the leading honour. This was a great steer, well fleshed, and a perfect handler, though not as level on his back as one would wish. The triumph of this animal is a notable testimony of sound, practical, and successful methods employed by the manager of that important estancia and who also had the honour of bringing out the world's record priced steers, sold at $11,500 a head, at a former show.

Mr. John E. Stent was the winner of the second award, and Mr. Charles Brown was placed third.

Ten animals were lined up in the following class for animals from four to six teeth. An exhibit of Mr. Charles Brown was again the first to be drawn out for the final scrutiny, and was well deserving of his position as he was a most symmetrical level fleshed animal, and 1 afterwards learned was "Dick," who has got a great show yard career to his credit; having already won six first prizes including Championship at the last Rosario Show.

Mr. John E. Stent had the second award while third honours fell to the same exhibitor. The second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth were all bred by Messrs. Duggan Bros., and is a convincing proof of the high quality of their cattle.

There was a small entry of four animals in the class for animals with two to four teeth, and an exhibit from Duggan Bros., was an outstanding winner, the second honours falling to an exhibit belonging to Sr. Ayerza.

Ten animals paraded in the class for animals with one to two teeth, and for the third time, the animal belonging to Mr. Charles Brown, was the first to catch the judge's eye and be selected for the ultimate revision. This animal was finally awarded the leading award followed by an exhibit belonging to Sr. Ayerza, while Mr. Brown also annexed the third ticket.

The class for animals with milch teeth brought out two entries, though one of them was a most meritorious exhibit, being one of the thickest and levellest animals yet seen in the ring. This exhibit was bred and exhibited by Messrs. Duggan Bros. Judging by present indications this meritorious animal is sure to be again heard of as a prize winner at future fat stock shows. The second award was the property of Messrs. Ricardo C. Quesada and Co. and was a fair bullock.

ABERDEEN ANGUS

The class for animals with full mouths brought out eight entries, and comprised many animals of superior quality. The leading award went to a very well fleshed compact specimen shown by Messrs. E. Brown Bros., while second honours were awarded to Sr. Alfredo F. de Urquiza, the third ticket being also annexed by the Messrs. E. Brown Bros.

The class for four to six teeth steers brought out twelve competitors, including a large portion of an exceptionally good class of butchers bullocks. The Messrs. E. Brown Bros., were awarded leading honours for a very compact and well finished animal while the second ticket was awarded to Sr. Alfredo F. de Urquiza for another good steer.

Ten animals represented the class for animals with two to four teeth, and again the animals were of superior quality. Messrs. E. Brown Bros. carried off the three leading honours, a fitting testimony of the unquestionable high standard of their exhibits.

The class for animals with one to two teeth brought out three entries the first and third awards going to two very sweet animals the property of Sr. Carlos Guerrero, while second honours fell to an exhibit belonging to Sres. Enrique Brown Bros.

The class for other breeds brought out some very suitable butchers cattle, the leading award falling to a very big useful steer shown by Messrs. Duggan Bros. while second and third honours fell to the same firm.

In another class for other cross breeds the Messrs. Duggan were again the victors, the runner up being Sr. Alberto E. Castex.

The following class brought out eight entries, and comprised several animals of outstanding merit. From a butchers point of view this class comprised many noteworthy specimens, big, fleshy good handling cattle. The leading award was given to a big, good fleshed steer from Tatay, while Messrs. Baretto's exhibits were awarded the second and third positions.

After finishing the previous classes an adjournment was made for lunch when an early start was again made by Mr. McCormack to place the awards in several small classes of farmers or smaller holders animals. The attendance of visitors though somewhat larger than in the forenoon was by no means representative of the great cattle trade of this country and certainly shows a great lack of interest in these important instructive, and beneficial exhibitions, which all those interested in the stock trade should not fail to see and profit by the instruction to be learned by all regarding the judges preference for the best type of animals for butchers purposes.

JUDGING THE CHAMPIONS

The first prize winners in their respective classes were now paraded for the judge to give the final awards, or Championship honours. Seventeen first prize winners were lined up and presented a very pretty spectacle, comprising several representatives of each breed. The animals were again paraded when five animals were finally selected for further inspection, these were the exhibits of Sres. Ginocchio, Martinez de Hoz, Enrique Brown, Carlos Brown, Samuel B. Hale Co., the final selection lying between the representatives of Sres. Ginocchio, Martinez de Hoz and Samuel B. Hale's Aberdeen Angus. The position of the animals as they stand was changed, that splendid level fleshed good backed steer the property of Sr. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz was awarded the championship, the reserve ticket being awarded to a most meritorious animal the property of Sr. Ginocchi. The winning of the Championship by such a popular sportsman as Sr. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz, was the scene for great acclamations on the part of the interested spectators when many congratulated this enthusiastic and successful stockman, and his manager, Mr. Barry, on their well deserved and popular victory. The judge now placed the winners or special prizes in a few small classes of chacareros' cattle after which the groups of three animals were paraded for the judges verdict. In this class the three Aberdeen Angus shown by Messrs. Enrique Brown Bros., were a most level

FAT STOCK SHOW

Little Interest

SHOWN BY THE PUBLIC

Wednesday, Nov. 10

Yesterday very few visitors were to be seen within the grounds, which is incomprehensible to any one that so little interest could be taken in any sort of a show within the beautiful grounds at Palermo; but this neglect is more noticeable when we consider that the Fat Stock Show is representing one of the Argentine's greatest and most profitable industries, which is the backbone of this country and contributes towards the maintenance of a great part of the better class population of Buenos Aires. To say that there were not forty visitors to the grounds in the forenoon would be within the mark, while there was scarcely any visitor noticeable in the afternoon, which would be accounted for by the warm, heavy atmosphere. The only movement noticeable in the afternoon was the photographing of all the first prize winners. More visitors will possibly visit the show grounds to-day on account of a partial holiday in town. Visiting the sheep classes yesterday, some very useful class of breeding sheep were penned though the general run of butcher's sheep, with the exception of Sr. Malbran's, were of very poor quality and not what one would expect to see at this show. Mr. E. St. C. Haydon also showed some very level useful pens of sheep in the Romney Marsh classes. In the pig classes, with the exception of the middle-white Yorkshires, competition was poor, and the lot of strong well fleshed class of butchers cattle, and looked the most "useful" three steers of any breed on parade. Several lots were sent outside the ring but I was somewhat surprised to see the Aberdeen Angus not being longer retained. The two last lots in the ring were the property of Sres. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz and De Barry. The judge finally giving the award in favour of three massive animals including the champion, belonging to Sr. Miguel A. Martinez de Hoz, that very level lot of three nice level red steers belonging to Sr. De Barry well deserving their place. Four Aberdeen Angus winners of leading awards in their classes were now paraded for the championship of the Aberdeen Angus breed. The final decision lay between two handsome animals both the property of Messrs. Enrique Brown Bros., one eventually getting the leading honour of the breed with another animal of the same mark being reserve champion.

This finished the judging of the cattle classes though Mr. McCormack afterwards placed the awards in the pig classes. The sheep judges resolved to postpone their judgment till to-day as the operations within these show yards have never been remarkable for any celerity in the completion of any task, though that remark does not refer to the judge Mr. Mark McCormack who discharged all his duties expeditiously and to the general satisfaction of the visiting experts. At the afternoon parade many of the animals were showing signs of lameness due no doubt to the amount of walking exercise in the parade grounds.

Mr. William Kelvey, who has for some time been in charge of the Hackney Stud at "Tatay," Carmen de Areco, has arranged to leave for home at an early date. The many successes achieved by the Tatay Hackney exhibits, was in no small way due to the ability and painstaking efforts of Mr. Kelvey. A large circle of friends wish him a pleasant journey home and a safe return here at no distant date.

animals in the Berkshire classes of inferior quality for show pigs. The Champion and Reserve Champion of the Middle-Whites, belonging to Señor Emilio Meyer Pellegrini, were animals of considerable merit and deserving their position.

AIDING RED CROSS FUNDS

Entertainment at Splendid Theatre

EXCELLENT PROGRAMME; UNQUALIFIED SUCCESS

Wednesday, Nov. 10

Material success certainly attended the efforts of the Committee of Ladies who had arranged the Red Cross entertainment last night at the "Splendid Theatre" Calle Santa Fé. The house, which is one of the prettiest and most comfortable in town, was quite full and the audience thoroughly appreciated every item of the programme which was as follows:—

Part 1.—Cinema; Allegorical Tableau: Red Cross, Carlota Nicholson; Britain, Elena Smart; France, Gladys Baillie; Russia, Ofelia Surra; Italy, Eileen Scott; Belgium, Lola Hettima; Serbia, Lillian Drabble; Gavotte by children: Stella Wilson Rae, Lidia Reynoso Rosso, Zulema Luque, Clara H. Tallatelli, Maria Amelia Mazza, Mary Smart, Ofelia Montenegro, Maria Rosa Diaz, Carlitos Smart, Nestor Palacios, Norberto Palacios, Fernando Reynoso Rosso.

Interval.

Part 2.—Madame Butterfly (Puccini), by Sta. Francesca Rona; Violin Solo, by Sta. Alba Rosa; Song, "Who" (Tosti), Sta. Francesca Rona; Violoncello Solo, by Sr. Oscar Nicastro.

Part 3.—Tableaux, "The quarrel and the reconciliation," Miss Carlota Nicholson and Mr. Andres Schichen-dantz; Meefing, Flirting, Engagement and Marriage, Mr. Peluffo and Miss Scott; Dances by Mr. Edson Finney and Miss Nancy Finney; Dances: New York Trot, Pavlova Gavotte, by Mr. Edson Finney and Miss Nancy Finney; Imitations by Master F. Demortier.

In the Red Cross tableau, the ladies composing the same were no less notable for their personal attractiveness than for the excellent fancy and artistic finish of their costumes.

The Gavotte was a pretty thing and reflected great credit on the juvenile exponents.

Sra. Francesca Rona sang "Who?" and Sra. Alba Rosa's violin playing is always a treat for its sympathetic quality and correctness. Sr. Nicastro's cello solo was also very fine.

The pictures in the third part were very effectively arranged management of screens and lights giving the actual persons engaged a remarkable distant and almost spirituelle effect, like a tinted drawing. They were, if anything withdrawn a little hastily from our admiring vision.

Master Edson Finney and Miss Nancy Finney gave a most professorial and at the same time lively exposition of the New York Trot and the Pavlova Gavotte.

Some imitations by that talented youthful artist, Master Demortier, concluded an excellent programme very well carried out. The amenities of the theatre were greatly enhanced by the presence of the Scouts in the costumes of the Allied nations, selling sweets, in which they appeared to do a brisk trade, and a "Guard" of microscopic Boy Scouts who, with axe and belt, near the entrance curtain had a very "swashing and a martial outside."

Messrs. C. J. Christie and Son, Cangallo 832, kindly lent the piano for the occasion.

The organising and arranging was in the hands of a Committee of ladies consisting of Mrs. Emilia Campbell Drabble, and the Misses Carlota Nicholson, Lillian Drabble, Eileen Scott, Gladys Baillie, and Elena Smart.

The ladies of the Committee desire to convey generally to all friends and helpers their cordial thanks for their assistance.

Among those present were Sir Reginald Tower, H. B. M. Minister, and Mr. H. G. Mackie, H. B. M. Consul General, with Mr. F. H. Chevalier Boutell, whose energy and enthusiasm in the good cause of the Red Cross are nutring.

RUMANIA AND GREECE

FRIDAY, November 5, 1915.

Recent experience has proved that nothing is certain or stable in the Balkans, and the declaration of the Rumanian Government to remain neutral—a declaration made in the face of a strong demand for participation in the war on the side of the Allies—may not be sustained. Unfortunately, however, the chances are largely in the other direction. Rumania is in a peculiar position, and it would be distinctly unfair to charge her with breach of faith because she has been forced to consider her own material interests, rather than to allow her actions to be dictated by the sympathy which she undoubtedly entertains for the cause of the Allies. She has seen the Austro-German forces combine with the Bulgarians, and the Serbian army driven back and placed in grave jeopardy. The enemy is in strong force along her frontiers, and she is in direct communication only with Russia. A study of the map, and an understanding of the military position in which Rumania now stands, reveal at once that she could only declare for the Allies at great danger to herself, without any assurance that she can help them.

There is little doubt that Rumania is largely influenced in her decision by the fate of Belgium, though it must be equally true that the failure of the Allies to act vigorously in opposing the junction of the Austro-German forces and those of Bulgaria, has also had much to do with it. Rumania is obviously in fear of making a false move. She would, we believe, like to fight for the Allies, but she cannot see much chance of fighting with them, and to fight alone, surrounded as she is with powerful enemies, would be so dangerous that she has been forced to take up a neutral attitude. Whether her neutrality will be respected is entirely another matter, but there is a sinister meaning in her determination to keep her armies on a war footing. If Austria and Germany see the necessity for it they will not hesitate to claim a right of way through Rumanian territory. In that case we believe Rumania will fight and risk the consequences. She would make a better struggle for her integrity than Belgium did, because she has a first class army, ready for war, and in that respect she has a decided advantage which brave Belgium did not have.

What will happen in Greece is a matter for interesting speculation. On several occasions "The Herald" has asserted a firm belief that M. Venizelos is the real power in Greece, and that eventually he must carry the country with him into war on the side of the Allies. We believe a great deal is to be hoped for from the downfall of the Zaimis Government, and that is what we presume the failure of the motion of confidence means. M. Venizelos has a high reputation for his political astuteness, and he appears to have outwitted his opponents on this occasion by simply allowing them to court a defeat by inviting an expression of confidence. If King Constantine, who is notoriously pro-German, refuses to permit M. Venizelos to form a Cabinet, then he must grant a dissolution. In that event there is every likelihood of M. Venizelos once more receiving a substantial majority in the electorates. The only issue of the election would be the question of war, and if the result of the polling is favourable to M. Venizelos, then King Constantine and the German-controlled press would have to give way, or risk a revolution.

Greece is in a vastly different position from that of Rumania in the event of a declaration of war against the Germanic alliance. She has a powerful and well trained army which must be almost at fighting pitch, and she runs no grave risks. Every day British and French troops are pouring in through Salonika to aid the Serbians. The latter, though up to the moment they have received comparatively little assistance, so far as numbers of men are concerned, are holding up the Austro-German and Bulgarian advance. Greece must know that at any moment she can throw a tremendous weight into the scale, perhaps sufficient to press the Teutons back. Seeing masses of fresh troops coming up in support she might well be confident that her decision would be the wisest one. Very strong self-interest will operate in her case. If she does not help the Allies, and they are beaten, she will probably suffer from Germany for having permitted the Allied troops to make a base of her territory. It looks as though the chances are strongly in favour of Greece fighting, and perhaps such a decision will change the attitude of Rumania.

PROFIT AND PROPAGANDA

SUNDAY, November 7, 1915.

Premising the fact that nothing Germany can do will surprise us by its nastiness or divergence from what has hitherto been regarded as legitimate behaviour in war time, we can only marvel at the way in which the Central Empires contrive to keep their trade alive, at the same time doing their best to influence the outer world as to the goodness of their cause. However much the average Britisher may decry the business of propaganda, regarding it as something beneath his dignity, or at the best something that can only have an infinitesimal effect on the ultimate outcome of the war, the organizing German is contrary-minded, and seizes every opportunity of driving home his points and his wares.

It must have occurred to many people that the German firms now in Buenos Aires have either had remarkable resources in money and goods, or that they have been able to renew their supplies since the war began. Otherwise the majority of them would have closed down long ago. The question of goods can easily be answered by an examination of the customs house returns for 1914, and the conclusion arrived at is that German houses were overstocked, in common with their competitors, but that their stocks were not so heavy as to last right on to date. Financially it is a matter of common knowledge that German trade rests on the shoulders of the German banks in this part of the world, and by stretching the comparison a little we may liken the situation of the German banks, German traders, and their Argentine customers, to the state of affairs in Germany itself.

The German wholesale house is giving its customers long credit against bills; these bills are discounted with the German bank, and, for all that the general public knows, they may be re-discounted under the special law sanctioning such action that was passed early in August. Credit is built up on credit, and even a relatively small proportion of payment by the ultimate buyer is sufficient to keep the machinery going. Capital usually supplied "en commandité" by the banks on the guarantee of the German manufacturer, or syndicate of manufacturers, in Europe, may for the present be neglected. At some time or other in the past it has been put up, either in goods or in cash, but actually it does not enter into the question to-day. British traders do not seem to realise that German traders here and at home are playing a purely gambling game. They may be losing money; as far as can be seen, they must be losing money. But the resources behind them are very large, and provided that they can keep their losses as low as possible, whilst maintaining their trade relations, they reckon on recouping themselves as soon as the war is over.

Every mail brings evidence that the German manufacturer is fighting just as hard as is the German army, and that he is equally regardless of the ethics of his methods of attack. A case is reported from Russia where large consignments of chocolates packed apparently by an English firm, Cailler, were on sale with very treasonable pamphlets hidden beneath the layers of sweets. Subsequent enquiry showed that boxes, sweets, and pamphlets had been prepared by a German firm—said to be Stollwercks—shipped to a neutral country, and thence consigned for sale in Russia. British trademarks are being falsified wholesale, the label "not made in Germany" is applied "ad libitum," the goods are sent to a neutral market, and then re-shipped to places where Germany is anxious to retain her connection. Argentina, Chile, and Brazil are specially favoured in this direction, the goods coming either via New York, Copenhagen, or Rotterdam. It is impossible to blame the neutral countries for handling this transport trade, and given the benignancy of British official methods it seems equally impossible to check it. It has been urged that insistence on all outward goods being consigned to British firms would stop it, but a moment's consideration will show such a course to be out of the question.

The only course open to the British trader is to try and get all the support and all the trade he can for his legitimate goods, at the same time penalizing, through the law of the land, any flagrant falsifications. Here in South America, a system of competent commercial observation ought to be exercised whenever possible on the working of German and Austrian houses. Much can be gained from a study of the various manifests and commercial returns dealing with in-coming cargo, and there are other means that will readily suggest themselves for the purpose of checking the enemy. But if such action is to be effective it must be well organised, systematic, prompt, with all the surmises examined, the proved facts extracted, and the results sent home without delay. Well meant, amateurish, efforts are worse than useless. They usually end in the amateur investigator receiving a smart snub for his pains, and though he may know himself to be right in his conclusions he is unable to make any use of his enquiries. Admittedly organization is not Britain's strong point, but we cannot help feeling that it is a weakness that might very well be strengthened, especially when the protection of her export trade is at stake.

BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES

TUESDAY, November 9, 1915.

The Government of the United States has presented a note to Great Britain protesting against the inconvenience to American commerce caused by the British blockade of neutral ports. The document is perfectly friendly in tone, and on the face of it it presents a fair case for American commercers, but a case which it is hardly likely Britain will admit. It is clear that the American Government has no protest to make against the blockade as a blockade, but merely against the manner in which it operates in regard to the right of "visit and search." In other words the desire of the United States is that the blockade should be carried on with the minimum of inconvenience, and that the spirit and letter of the international law should be strictly observed. There will be no quarrel between Britain and the States on this question, for, as we have frequently pointed out, understanding, reason and good faith, permeate the relationship of the two countries.

We do not think, however, that the British Government will abandon its created rights on this question, but on the other hand we think the United States will realise that in this war there are peculiar conditions which justify the policy of the British Government. Under the strict reading of the international law a ship and her cargo cannot be detained indefinitely because they may be under suspicion, and it is true that under the same law the granting of redress for inconvenience or loss suffered by detention under unfounded suspicion does not lie in the last resort with a court of the belligerent country conducting the blockade. A ship is presumed to have a right of way unless she can be proved to have forfeited it, and she is also presumed to be entitled to the benefit of any doubt that may exist as to her bona fides. These, however, are largely theoretical rights, and despite what American jurists may claim, no country at war with such a power as Germany, and under such circumstances as actually prevail, would forego the right to make certain the real character of a ship, and the real nature of her cargo.

It is obvious that under the conditions which prevail it is impossible for a ship to be thoroughly and effectively searched at sea, and it is more than likely that Britain can easily prove that except in isolated cases the necessary search and investigation are more expeditiously conducted in a port, than they would be were the ship kept at sea until all shadow of doubt as to the nature of her cargo had been removed. To ask Britain to forego this right of complete satisfaction under the peculiar conditions which obtain would be to ask too much. America has among her population many millions of Germans, all interested naturally in promoting as far as they can the interests of their country. The history of the war has shown that they are not scrupulous as to how they do it. Some of them have evaded the vigilance of American navigation officials and have placed bombs in cargoes. German officials in America have not hesitated to tamper with the machinery of government. They have taken part in the forging of passports, in promoting strikes, in making improper use of wireless stations,

MANAGING THE WAR

WEDNESDAY, November 10, 1915.

The critics of the Government of Great Britain, and of that Government's methods of conducting the war, have not been without their own critics, and it is still fashionable in certain quarters to consider those who have not been satisfied with the established order of things, as traitors or meddling fools. The one party has refused to believe that Britain entered the war with a Governmental organization perfect in every respect for waging a colossal conflict involving not only the destiny of nations, but the future of civilisation. It claimed, after a study of facts, that the system was not only not perfect, but in many respects quite incompetent to manage the war, no matter how capable it might have been to direct the affairs of the nation in time of peace. The critics of the critics have rested their case on the presumed proof "that whatever is best," and a firm belief in the efficacy of the reiteration of certain verbal formula, such as "Trust the Government," and an implied confidence in the value of abusing the enemy, in order to assure victory.

To-day the critics of the Government, and of the old order of things; the men who advocated vital and seemingly revolutionary changes; the men who refused to be silent when they saw things going wrong, or to refrain from pointing out where in their opinion our methods of handling the war might be improved, stand justified in their attitude—justified by the actions of the very Government they criticised. The outcry regarding the lamentable shortage of shells and munitions was denounced by the "Trust-the-Government" party, as disgraceful and unpatriotic. The leaders of the movement for organization of the munitions supply were informed that they were quite wrong in their facts, and outside the pale of decent Britons because of their criticism. A week or two afterwards the Government admitted the facts were as stated by the critics, and the Government appointed Mr. Lloyd George to organize the supply of munitions. It is possible the Government might have done this had all the press maintained silence, or even if it had described the Government as a perfect one. But until the contrary is proved we believe the critics who were not afraid to criticise are entitled to some credit for what happened.

Coincident with the munitions problem there was that of conscription. The few original and very unpopular advocates of compulsory service have seen members of the Cabinet support them publicly, and to-day in the United Kingdom there is no one ready to oppose conscription once the Government, or what is left of it, says that conscription is necessary. But the greatest shock the anti-critics have had has been the succession of moves whereby the Government has eliminated itself and voluntarily delegated its powers to a council of three. Months ago "The Herald" advocated the centralisation of the management of the war in the hands of such a council. To be quite frank we went even farther and openly stated our belief that the situation called for a dictatorship. We may have been unpatriotic, and we may have been wrong, but the fact remains that the Government has done just what we strongly urged should be done. If we and all other critics were wrong, and wickedly and malignantly wrong, how do our friends, the advocates of adherence to established systems, traditions, and ancient sayings, explain the actions of the Government?

Of course they cannot explain them? They cannot say that the Government has at last broken down under the attacks of its critics, because they have told us all along that those critics consist of a small minority of fools, simply overwhelmed by the flood of righteousness and commonsense emanating from the vast majority of the intellectual and patriotic. The simple explanation appears to be that the critics have been right all along, and that the Government has had more sense than its supposed champions, for it has learned to see with the eyes of its critics, that for this war at least the old order of things must change. The Government has realised what the critics saw long ago, that the whole Cabinet could not direct the war with the same strength and fixity of purpose that could be looked for from three capable men, or even one, provided they or he were given full power. We believe that even now the extreme policy which we advocated long ago is to be followed. A council of three has been selected to handle the war, but there is really only one man in it, and that is Mr. Lloyd George, to whom it has fallen to dictate, or if that word be too harsh to British ears, to "direct," the destiny of Britain. And Mr. Lloyd George will direct it well.

and generally they have proved themselves dangerously active. They are not above making false declarations as to cargoes.

It is against the trickery of Germans in America that Britain is forced to act in what may perhaps appear an arbitrary manner. She is not actuated by any animosity toward the United States, and this fact is widely recognised by the States themselves. Clearly in view of what has transpired, and in view of conditions which have radically changed since the law of the blockade and of the right of visit and search were laid down, it would be foolish of Britain to submit to the strict reading of the law, and take any chances with ships or cargoes destined to neutral ports, but under grave suspicion of being actually intended for Germany. That the courts of England have been called upon to decide vital facts relative to what are, or are not prizes, and what is, or what is not, confiscable cargo, does not imply that Britain sweeps aside international rights. Somebody has to make these decisions, and it is well that Britain places the matter in the hands of her highest legal experts, instead of leaving it in the hands of naval officers who are fighters and not lawyers. American shipowners and shippers cannot be deprived of the right to present their claims through the ordinary diplomatic channels, but Britain has not set up any such contention. She has merely determined that she will not allow anything to reach Germany that she can stop. If her determination injures or inconveniences neutrals, and she can be shown that the injury or inconvenience can be minimised, she is ready to comply with any suggestion to that effect that does not imperil her own interests. If any wrong is imposed she will be the first to propose redress. It is because we know that America knows Britain's regard for honesty and propriety, that we are certain there can never be any serious misunderstanding between the two countries, and even this trying war cannot create one.

THE GUILDHALL SPEECHES

THURSDAY, November 11, 1915.

By time-honoured custom the banquet following the installation in office of the Lord Mayor of London is made the occasion for the delivery of messages to the British Nation from the lips of His Majesty's principal Ministers. Generally the speeches are fraught with momentous subjects, and the Empire waits keenly expectant for the declarations which unfold the ideas, aims and policy of the Government. Perhaps because we are at war we attach a much greater importance to the Guildhall speeches than we did before, and perhaps we do so unreasonably, because if we recognised the obvious, we would see that it could not be expected that the Government would so publicly proclaim to the world its intentions regarding the war, nor even enter upon a discussion of certain phases of it. Therefore it is not surprising that from the speeches delivered by the brilliant statesmen present at the banquet, we learned little or nothing. The occasion was really made one of reaffirmation of certain principles upon which there can be no discussion among Britons, because there is nothing to discuss.

Following M. Paul Cambon, the French Ambassador, who reaffirmed the justice of the Allies cause, the Prime Minister renewed the vow made by Britain and her allies a year ago that they would never sheathe the sword until all that we entered the war for is won. Nobody can fail to agree with this determination, and we are not aware that anyone has done so. There are a few people who want peace, and want it at any price, but there is no doubt that if there is one thing upon which the Nation at large is absolutely and completely in accord with Mr. Asquith, it is in the determination that come what may the war must be fought right out, or at least to that stage when Germany yields all that the Allies have gone to war for. We are not aware that the critical newspapers, the critical private citizens, or the critical Members of Parliament differ from Mr. Asquith in this matter, which is one of principle. Even the severely castigated "yellow press of Lord Northcliffe," may be quite in accord with the Prime Minister, and in fact if a persistent effort to get the determination translated into action can be taken as a criterion, then possibly the impatient Northcliffe press may be more determined than anybody that we shall win the war.

Just why the Prime Minister should describe the critical press as "hypocritical" we cannot understand. It may be hypocritical, but it does not appear positive that it is so, and Mr. Asquith has not offered any proof in justification of his assertion. A newspaper can be critical without being a hypocrite, because there are critics who are quite sincere, and some of them may even be patriotic. If there were a thousand passengers on a ship, and she struck a rock, we have no doubt they would all be completely in accord in their determination to get safely to land. If one, or two, or any number criticised the captain and his officers for shouting different orders and having no definite plans to effect the common object, we do not think the critical passengers could be called "hypocrites." They might be wrong; they might be foolish; they might even be endangering the safety of all, but surely they would not be convicting themselves of hypocrisy?

To carry this simile further, if it transpired that those critical passengers, by their criticism, induced the captain to take firm command, really to exercise his commanding position; or to delegate the command and control to three officers, instead of ten, would it be fair to call them foolish, or wicked, as well as hypocritical? If they propounded ideas that led to getting the boats out more expeditiously; if they showed a way to utilise all the brains, all the energy, and all the available resources of the ship, to get everybody—or at any rate the greatest possible number—safely to land in the shortest possible time, should they be abused as cowards or villains, or should they be accorded the credit of honesty of intention? And supposing the captain did abuse them and discredit them, and then he and his officers adopted their suggestions, would it be fair to say that they were wrong for having criticised and suggested, or would it be fair to admit that they were really right? And again, following out this interrogatory argument, if the critical passengers were a nuisance and menace to the ship's safety, and the captain declared emphatically that they were, would it not be better to put them in irons, or to shoot them, than to argue about them?

The difference between Mr. Asquith, or between his Government and the critical press, is not over principle but over methods. Mr. Asquith may be quite right in his statement that "to-day, as on the first day of the war, we are . . . on the right road for certain victory," but unfortunately the facts are against him. We do not say that we shall not achieve victory. We are certain we shall, and so we believe are all the critics. But we are not certain that our methods to date have been the right ones to make that victory sure, or to bring it within the least possible time. And though we derive no pleasure at all from being critical, or from suggesting that Mr. Asquith is not correct in anything he states, we must point out that in his statement quoted just above he is absolutely wrong. There have been too many drastic changes already in Britain's conduct of the war, as the result of the criticism to which Mr. Asquith objects, to permit us now to believe that from the first day of the war we were on the right road. If we were, why has Mr. Asquith permitted those changes? Because as a patriot he knew they were necessary, and he knew it only when they were pointed out to him.

CRIME IN BUENOS AIRES

OFFICIAL STATISTICS.

The "Bulletin of Crime" giving the official statistics of illegal acts in Buenos Aires during the third quarter of the year, shows that there is a reduction of 24 per cent in crimes committed, as compared with the corresponding 3 months of 1914.

Twenty-four murders are recorded, fourteen in the street and the remainder in private houses, all by men between the ages of 21 and 30. Only 66 per cent of these criminals have been arrested.

Thefts amount to $759,533 of which only 8 per cent or $90,000 odd have been recovered. Youths of 16 to 20 years of age are responsible for these.

This latter official statement in itself shews up a great scandal in this city and one which the authorities would do well to study. Juvenile crime of all kinds is very rife and yet the police do but little to prevent it. It is possible to state that there are many more thousands of dollars stolen monthly which are never reported to the police at all.

Again it should be remarked that only 33 per cent of this class of criminals have been apprehended.

According to further official statements the most common crime is wounding.

Public Opinion

as expressed in the Argentine Press.

DREDGING THE PARANA

(La Prensa.—November 4).

It is stated that the Rosario Chamber of Commerce has resolved to ask the National Deputies not to suppress or diminish the sum allotted to the dredging of the River Paraná between Rosario and Santa Fé. Looking through the Budget statement La Prensa says that it fails to find any special sum allotted to this end, though there does appear a sum of $60,000 to be used for maintaining the existing depth of water between Paraná and Rosario. There is therefore no special reason for the allotment mentioned by the Rosario Chamber of Commerce, the fundamental necessity being to see that the whole river depth is maintained at a level sufficient for safe navigation, and as La Prensa remarks, it is to this end that all efforts should be united. Perfect dredging of the Paraná has always been desirable, and every township along the banks of this great waterway, many of them important and some with an unlimited future before them, is constantly calling for efficient action towards maintaining the navigable channels in their proper state. Nor can it be denied that much has been done to realise these aspirations.

Yet there is still much to do, especially seeing that the river in flood frequently brings down great banks of sand that interrupt or delay navigation between Santa Fé, Entre Rios, Corrientes and the Chaco. The time is not auspicious for adding new charges to the Budget, but it is equally true that no saving should be made at the expense of the hydraulic works connected with the River Paraná. It has been proved that the slightest suspension of the dredging works immediately leads to the formation of new banks and a change in the river channels. Hence it is illogical to diminish the money devoted to this object through mistaken motives of economy. This is a matter in which not only the Chamber of Commerce of Rosario, but also all the other public bodies situated along the river, as well as the territorial powers of Formosa and the Chaco, ought to unite their energies in order that no interruption in the dredging of the Paraná be allowed to occur, since, as La Prensa concludes, the work is of essentially national importance.

THE CUSTOMS TARIFF

(La Nación.—November 4).

The existing customs tariff is based, says La Nación, on incorrect figures, and is moreover ten years old, and both the Chamber of Commerce and the Industrial Union agree at last that revision is necessary. They are now convinced that recent changes have made the official scale of values of no real utility, and feel that a stable tariff is what trade really needs. According to the report of the 1911 Budget Committee there are 1,125 articles of merchandise classified solely by analogy, whilst there are still more unvalued and taxed on their declared value, to say nothing of the many antiquated and deficient classifications still in force. All these anomalies, leading as they did to the creation of a special body in permanent session charged with the task of valuing, are now still more impractical owing to the profound changes brought about by the war.

The customs tariff is based on the

THE PERFECT INTENDENTE

(La Prensa.—November 6).

There are none too many men, declares La Prensa, who, whilst being fitted to occupy important positions in the state, are at the same time able to realise that the honours and advantages accruing to them from the post are of very secondary importance. If only the classic adage, "know thyself," were consistently borne in mind by the aspirants to such posts, there would be fewer failures, and this observation applies generally, whilst a particular application may be found in the case of the first municipal functionary. With thirty-five years experience as a Federal Capital, Buenos Aires ought to know what are the qualities required of its Intendente, a man who must undoubtedly fill an arduous post, given the variety of matters that come up for decision in a city of a million and a half inhabitants. Frivolous people imagine the post to be merely a personal honour, implying social brilliance; in the political world the Intendente is regarded as a powerful presidential lever; few are those who realise that the Municipal Intendente must be a man of ripe intelligence and skilled in statecraft.

A mere glance at the various duties that fall to his lot will show that he must be a good business man, a man of acknowledged social position, and versatile. Equal in rank to the Lord Mayor of London, his administrative duties are even more important and more varied. But whereas a mediocre minister of state may be of some service to his country, a mediocre Intendente spells failure owing to the lack of any controlling influence. Hence it follows that in many cases men of sound commonsense are often better qualified to take such a post than their fellows who can boast a greater degree of academic learning. Moreover the situation in Buenos Aires is still more complicated owing to the organic law of the Municipality. The selection of the Intendente, left to a general election, would be wider than the mere appointment of an individual at the will of the President. All these considerations, says La Prensa, emphasise the responsibility that the Government assumes when it appoints an Intendente. Without in any way wishing to deprecate the possession of titles to social esteem as a factor in the choice, La Prensa points out that aptitude for the duties to be discharged ought to stand first. A man may be suitable for many posts without being well fitted for municipal office, and he need count it no offence if he is passed over when such an office is to be filled.

value of the goods, hence this latter item must have a certain stability if it is to be of any use for reference, and given the state of trade with the countries now at war, prices are beyond all regular means of calculation. Thus these abnormal figures upon which taxation is based mean heavier duties and additional charges to the consumer. There is no alternative to a system of frequent and partial revision, such as has already been begun by the Government with regard to petroleum and its derivatives. In so far as a general alteration is concerned, it must perforce wait until trade becomes normal and the re-establishment of competition places the price of imported goods at its true level. The consequences of the war are bound to be dearer prices all round, in so far as industrial production is concerned, and until the general effect of these circumstances has given prices a settled range La Nación is of opinion that nothing can be done to place the Customs tariff on a newer and sounder base.

THE POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK

(La Prensa.—November 5).

From the outset, says La Prensa, it has been a firm supporter of the Post Office Savings Bank, and facts have fully justified this attitude. Letting the figures speak for themselves, it will be seen that in the seven months during which the institution has been working, or down to the end of October, there have been 63,500 accounts opened, representing $1,034,295, an average of $25.72 per account. Comparing these results with those of the Savings Bank Department of the Banco de la Nación, one finds them singularly satisfactory. Begun in 1891, by the end of 1892, this department of the Bank had a total of $1,000,000 and a year later it had only risen by $100,000. Compare this with the Post Office Savings Bank, which has reached the million mark in five months, and which will, according to La Prensa be over two millions at the fifth of December.

Analysis of the figures is interesting, inasmuch as it shows that the object of the institution, the encouragement of saving in cents, is being realised. First and foremost, the average at the credit of each account, $25.72, is more or less on a par with English experience. There the Post Office Savings Bank, founded in 1861, gave an average in 1862 of £3 per account, or say $35, a sum which La Prensa considers will concur more or less with the Argentine figures. The extraordinary growth of the postage stamp method of saving is also noteworthy. In September some 13,000 forms were thus filled, whilst in October the number was nearer 20,000. The efficiency and economy of the system employed has also been clearly demonstrated. When the matter was discussed in the Chamber of Deputies it was said that one employee would be required to control every seven hundred accounts, whilst by the system of personal pass books it is proved that one employee handles 15,000 accounts, and will be able to take up to 20,000. Hence in four or five years, concludes La Prensa, the Post Office Savings Bank will have covered its cost and show a profit even more rapidly than its European prototypes have done.

THE TYRANNICAL MOTOR

(La Nación.—November 8).

Dealing with the great influx of river folk to the Tigre during the past week, La Nación draws attention once more to the inconsiderate behaviour of the average motor launch. Light craft, frequently half outriggered, are preferred by the rowing public, who as a rule frequent the shady creeks and quiet waterways of the Delta, but who must perforce come back to the Lujan as evening falls. With one exception, all the clubs are situated on that river, hence between five and six of an evening the stretch of the river between Tigre and the Carapachay is usually quite crowded with skiffs, "shells," and other light craft. This last stage of the journey is now universally recognised as being the most perilous of the whole day.

For the motor launches, aggressive, noisy, and relying too utterly on the skill of the man at the helm, make this their favourite time for parading up and down the river at full speed. Their owners forget that however skilful they themselves may be, the same rule does not always apply to those who are coxing the rowing boats, craft that are not so easily diverted. What this means let the clubs say, continues La Nación. Every Sunday brings its tale of oars splintered, planks split, rowlocks broken, whilst there is always present the danger of still more serious disaster. Hence it is in the highest degree advisable that the sub-prefecture of the Tigre should take note of these infractions of the regulations, doing whatever may be possible to check the mania for speed that animates so many owners of motor boats.

THE EMISSION OF CEDULAS

(La Nación.—November 5).

The Minister of Finance has been approached by a commission with the request that a fresh emission of Cédulas on account of the Hypothecary National Bank be sanctioned, in accordance with the terms of the law and the needs of the market. The directorate of this institution has remarked on previous occasions that the demand for such mortgages is numerous and constant, but that lack of means renders them unable to comply with the majority of these requests. At the same time steady quotations and a large volume of business in Cédulas is proof, says La Nación, of the constant demand for this class of investment, whilst the fears expressed at the beginning of the war as to the effect thereof on a stock whose principal foreign market was Antwerp, have not been realised, the Cédula being to-day kept at its present level by national capital.

It will not be forgotten that the sharp drop of some 25—30 points was soon regained, and experience has shown that even the situation of the property market has not affected the bank nor the regularity with which the service of its loans to the public has been met. Hence La Nación sees no objection to making the emission asked for. It will help credit and at the same time tend to lessen the paralysis which is characteristic of the market for loanable capital. The only reason that the Government could in justice urge against the suggested emission is the fact that the Cédula competes favourably with the internal loans of the nation, a fact that might make it appear advisable to check such competition by disallowing further issues. There is however room for all, and the market rates level up the difference of interest between the Cédula and the Internal Loan. Hence, concludes La Nación, the Minister of Finance would do well to give a favourable reply, authorising the emission of a respectable amount, since a reduced authorisation would defeat its object, since comparatively small loans would have to be granted in order to satisfy all the applicants who have come forward.

BAGS FOR THE HARVEST

(La Nación.—November 9).

In view of a probable increase in the price of harvest bagging, sundry managers of co-operative societies in the Rosario district have met to arrange for collective purchases of this article. The initiative shows, remarks La Nación, how much the producers fear the attacks of the speculators, who select the most critical time to raise prices. Similar preventive measures have been tried before, but without result, owing to the fact that the manufacturers simply withdraw from the market, thus making the prices of the bags as dear as before. Equally futile was the Government scheme for buying up a large quantity of bags abroad, since the sudden demand merely made the price of bagging rise, which made it impossible for government to sell any cheaper than did the local trust. The net result was that the cultivator had to pay dearer than ever for his sacks.

In short, Government measures have always proved failures, owing to the businesslike manner in which the monopoly is organised, the ample capital behind it, and the fact that the official schemes lack funds and are unduly precipitate. The co-operative societies who purpose uniting their funds in order to buy abroad on a large scale will, says La Nación, find that the trust is dealing against them. If on the contrary they deal with the trust, they will have to pay such prices as are asked by that body. Only by putting up a skilled and amply endowed authority, such as was proposed in the Banco Agrícola, to deal for them, can they hope to get the better of the bargain. Private and casual initiatives are bound to fail, lacking as they do all the means that are at the disposal of the syndicate they oppose.

UTILIZATION OF INTERNAL CREDIT

(La Nación.—November 6).

Public works to be carried out against the emission of government bonds cannot for the present be proceeded with owing to the fact that the necessary funds wherewith to take up the said bonds are not available. Many of these works are nevertheless urgently necessary, hence the suggestion that the government should make use of the deposits of the Banco de la Nación by converting them into bonds of an internal loan carrying a higher rate of interest than that which they now obtain from the bank. La Nación dwells on the fact that the operation is very simple, and declares that the depositor will not make any objection, seeing that he gets better interest, certainty of regular service, and freedom from the risk of stock exchange oscillations.

That is the proposition in a nutshell, but as La Nación remarks, the deal will call for very careful manipulation in order that not only revenue but also withdrawals may be well secured. The first condition is to limit the amount thus transferred to a reasonable sum, considering this rather in the light of an experiment which will prove whether the treasury is capable of handling the business, involving as it must do unexpected and possibly heavy amortisation. This is where the chief difficulty comes in for the government, since payments must be made out of current revenue, the depositor being assured that he can withdraw his funds whenever he needs them. Private banks have lent to the government, and, argues La Nación the private depositor, under the proposed scheme, will be able to do the same, whilst circumstances favour the arrangement seeing that present conditions render inevitable a further reduction in the deposit rate, which will be an added incentive for adopting the government plan.

ARGENTINE WARRANT LAW

(La Prensa.—November 8).

Notwithstanding that Argentina has legislation dealing with the use of warrants that dates back to 1878, this powerful aid to mercantile interchange has not as yet, says La Prensa, been really made part and parcel of Argentine commercial practice. Personal credit has been the base of local trade for a long time past, whilst the agricultural and pastoral interests have had the additional facility of hypothecary loans. Given good times these resources are sufficient, but when lack of confidence becomes widespread they are insufficient. On the other hand merchandise at such a period usually increases in value, as is instanced by the ruling figures for agricultural and pastoral products, notwithstanding that the producer himself is frequently forced to realise for whatever sum may be offered him, thus losing the profit that would be his, were he able to choose his own market.

La Prensa does not pretend that it is enunciating anything new when it states that the general use of the "warrant" would remedy this state of affairs, but the fact remains that although the remedy is known, it has not as yet been applied. The new Warrant Law of 1914 is practically unknown to most of the traders in this Republic. In a recent official publication data are given dealing with the use of the warrant in other countries, and it is shown that whilst in the United States, France, England, and the free cities of Germany, the warrant has proved of the greatest utility, here the sugar producers are the only people who have made real use of its faculties. This must not be attributed, continues La Prensa, to mere indifference; it is rather due to a lack of attention to detail when the law was drafted. Moreover it is advisable to find out by enquiry whether the principles adopted by the Government are those best suited to bring out the efficacy of the system, since the mere proclamation of a law does not necessarily lead to its application.

TEXTILE FIBRES AND THEIR UTILIZATION

(La Prensa.—November 9).

The report of the Government Commission appointed to study the possibility of using local textile fibres for bag making and similar uses has recently been published, and La Prensa uses the fact as the base of another appeal for considering the problem with the intention that its importance deserves. Linseed flax is not the only fibre available, but it is the most readily workable and obtainable, whilst there are 1,800,000 hectares under linseed. On an average each hectare produces 2,500 kilos straw, a total of 4,500,000 tons, of which 3,375,000, or say 75 per cent is utilisable. It yields from 15 to 25 per cent of fibre, but calculating on the smaller amount sufficient flax could be secured to make 405,000 tons of bagging, which in its turn represents 1,012,500,000 bags for the agriculturalist. How is that result to be obtained?

In the first place the fibre must be made—and the fibre is worth 400 francs a ton, a sum more than sufficient to pay the rent of the chacara—and the separation of the fibre is quite distinct from the weaving of it into bagging. Only 15 per cent of the flax straw is left as workable fibre, which implies heavy cost for cartage, owing to the relatively light weight of the load, the unsuitability of the carts used, and the fact that other harvesting operations are in progress at the same time. Hence as La Prensa points out, the chacarero must himself ret his flax straw, work that is looked upon as purely agricultural in all European countries, and that might well be carried on during the winter here, and thereafter bale the flax ere sending it to the factory. The financing of the factories is to be either in the form of a state guarantee, or an incentive is to be provided by giving free entry to all the necessary material, the latter suggestion being undoubtedly the best. But ere the factory can work it must have its flax to work with, and the state will do well to bring home to the agriculturalist how much he loses by burning his flax. When the fibre is available the factories will not be slow to follow. Half a million tons of fibre at 400 francs a ton work out at close on $40,500,000 gold. Is not this sufficient incentive, concludes La Prensa to make the cultivator ret rather than burn his flax?

MORE ABOUT THE WARRANT

(La Prensa.—November 10).

Again referring to the question of warrants for grain, La Prensa states that it is notorious that the law of 1914 has not removed existing difficulties. Given the strong and constant demand for wheat, maize, oats, linseed, wool, and hides, the producer of these articles ought to be certain of being able to pledge them for money at need. In England and in the other European countries, the merchant who has sugar, coffee, and similar products lying to his order, is always able to obtain an advance on them until such time as it suits him to sell. But whereas in those countries the business began by building great warehouses to store the goods on which the warrants were based, here in Argentina the process has been exactly inverse. Who, asks La Prensa, is going to lend money on piles of wheat in bags, when that wheat is liable to deterioration through the weather?

The warrant is useless unless the merchandise that it represents is perfectly safe. Ordinary risks can of course be covered by insurance, but the same cannot be said of rain, which is a normal and a frequent occurrence. If it was possible to insure cereals against bad weather the premiums would be so high as to

A THIRTEEN MONTHS RECORD

(4th AUGUST, 1914, TO 4th SEPTEMBER, 1915.)

The following communication has been received from a Montevidean at present in England.

A little more than a year ago Great Britain had the largest navy and the smallest standing army of all the European Powers. Her total military establishment was 254,000 white men, of whom 76,000 were stationed in India. Germany had more first-line men on the French frontier when the war began, than Great Britain had all over the world. The total British force available immediately for service on the Continent was scarcely 12 per cent. of the German army kept with the colours during times of profound peace. Great Britain's field ordnance and her reserve of small arms were in proportion only to the size of her army.

Yet here is what Great Britain has done:—

1.—She has bottled up the German navy so securely in the Kiel Canal that not a German vessel, other than a submarine, has ventured into the North Sea since January 24th, 1915, when the Blucher was sunk.

2.—She has completely driven the German flag from the seas of the world. The only German merchantmen not now interned, or tied up in home ports are those in the Baltic Sea.

3.—She has destroyed, or forced into make the business unsuitable. Thus, continues La Prensa, one finds oneself compelled to recognise that official action in favour of agricultural interests leaves much to be desired. The legal enactments regarding the building of sheds are being forgotten; hence, with no efficient storage facilities available, the utility of the warrant is almost nil.

internment, every German man-of-war absent from home waters on the outbreak of war.

4.—She has raised, equipped, and put in the field more than 2,000,000 men, in addition to those available last August (1914). She has more than another 1,000,000 in reserve, and in training. All these troops are amply supplied with arms, transport, uniforms, etc., before they are required to be sent into the fighting line.

5.—She has multiplied the out-put of her arms factories more than 20 times, and has increased by 700 per cent. the air-craft available for her forces since August, 1914.

6.—She is financing the Belgian and Serbian Governments, and has loaned large sums to Russia and Italy.

7.—She has seized in Africa, German colonial possessions in the Orient, with the assistance of Japan, she has hauled down the German flag from every settlement, every island, and every coaling station that owed allegiance to the Kaiser.

8.—She landed in France a small force approximately 110,000 men, at a time when these reinforcements enabled General Joffre to form the army that took Von Kluck in flank on the Ourcq.

9.—In the battle of the Marne the British led the attack that drove back the German host from the approaches to Paris, and also bore the brunt of the retreat. In the battle of the Aisne they forced the crossings of the rivers and again enabled General Joffre to inaugurate flanking tactics.

10.—Transported to the Yser, the British took the Ypres-La Bassée line and held it against continuous attacks from October 16 to November 5, and again from November 10 to the end of December, 1914. These attacks were intended to open the road to Calais, were of the most vital importance to the Allies, and cost the Germans 200,000 men.

11.—The British were entrusted by General Joffre with the front where the Germans were strongest, and they have been subjected to more constant and unremitting attacks than have been delivered by the Germans against any of the other western defences.

12.—After nine months' fighting on the Ypres line, despite the fact that the Germans have repeatedly hurled their best troops against the front, the British lines to-day are at no point further to the westward than when the Germans began the assault.

13.—The British have supplied 75 per cent. of the men and ships employed in the operations against the Dardanelles, and they made the landings which are ultimately to open the way to Constantinople.

14.—In addition, and until the surrender of the last forces of the Germans in Africa, Great Britain was conducting five other over-seas campaigns—on the Sinai peninsula; at the head of the Persian Gulf; in the Cameroons; in German South West Africa, and in German East Africa. These were exclusive of all operations in the Orient and in the Mediterranean.

15.—The British losses to date are some 400,000, an average of 8900 a week.

Mention might be made to the indirect benefit derived by the Allies from our Navy's splendid patrol, and convoy work, in home waters, in which it has been nobly assisted by our magnificent Mercantile Marine.

There is also another small matter worth recording. In thirteen months well over £50,000,000 have been raised in the Empire for distribution in the form of charity, without distinction of creed or nationality.

All this may of course mean that the British have done nothing, but if it does, heaven help the Teuton Allies when the British really begin fighting.

PAMPHLET ON HOG BREEDING.

The "La Blanca" Freezing Company who recently issued a descriptive booklet of their plant in Avellaneda have now gone one further in the form of an instructive pamphlet on the economic breeding and feeding of hogs.

The main point of the publication is to call the attention of the Argentine Hog Breeder to the advantages of using the "Big Brand Meat Meal" to assist the growth of the pig, and at the same time to reduce cost of feeding by using this product mixed with other food.

This pamphlet is being given away by the "La Blanca's" representative at the Fat Stock Show at Palermo and can also be obtained at the offices of the Company, 499 Cangallo, Buenos Aires.

RISE FOLLOW DECLARATION OF THE B.A.P. DIVIDEND.

London, Nov. 5.

On 'Change yesterday money was reported unchanged; discounts steady. The Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England are both recommended for another year in office. Clearing House increase is £24,553,000. Exchange is stronger on Greek news. Rails are improving and Argentines have advanced freely on Pacific Dividend of £2.16.6 on Second Preference which is considered satisfactory.

The principal quotations are:—Southern, 84¼; Western, 85½; Central, 87¼; Pacific, 46¾. Investors acquainted with Argentina and its conditions were steady buyers.

All the big companies are making satisfactory gains, and it is believed that in the absence of adverse weather they will recover in the course of this year the ground lost in the past bad season.

After showing some signs of weakness, shares in the London and River Plate Bank have returned to favour, as a sure sign of a return to better conditions.

Bonds were well maintained, Peruvians strong on Amsterdam buying.

The Southern Land Company has declared a dividend of 9 per cent. and carried forward £19,015 to current account.

RUMANIAN NEUTRALITY

THE "INTERNATIONAL" DANUBE

(To the Editor.)

Sir,—With regard to the war news in to-day's papers that Rumania has refused to grant Germany's request that she should intern two Russian torpedo boats lying in the Danube, and that freedom to navigate in those waters is no violation of neutrality, it may interest your readers to know that the Danube from its mouth at the Rumanian port of Sulina to the town of Galatz (about 80 miles up the river) is international, and that such portion of the river is governed by a body known as "The European Commission of the Danube." The Commission is composed of the following Powers: Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Germany, Austria, and Rumania. One of Great Britain's commissioners was General Gordon, of Khartoum fame.

As is well known, the Danube has three mouths, namely, the Sulina, Kilia, and St. Georges, but the Sulina mouth is the only one navigable for steamers of any size.

Each of the above mentioned Powers has the right to have a small man-of-war between Sulina and Galatz. Probably the Russian torpedo boats referred to were stationed at the latter river port. Above Galatz the Danube is Rumanian until it touches Bulgarian territory on the Bulgarian side. It might be a breach of neutrality if Rumania permitted any man-of-war belonging to the belligerents to ascend the river about Galatz, but not so between Galatz and the river mouth. But at the same time it appears that she has permitted the passage of "troops" up the river.

Yours, etc.,

H. GORDON NORDABY.

(We thank Mr. H. Gordon Nordaby for his interesting letter and for the valuable information contained therein. The statement that the Sulina channel of the river Danube is "international" is quite correct. Although our own knowledge of the Danube extends little above the town, or village, of Sulina, we have frequently seen the European Commission's dredgers at work, and have also seen the small "men-of-war," to which reference is made. There is, however, one point which gives us cause for reflection, and that is whether or not large troopships would be able to ascend beyond Galatz, even supposing Rumania were disposed to permit such an operation. The quantity of silt brought downstream is so great that continuous dredging is necessary to ensure a nav-

SHIPS THAT HAVE PASSED

"LA RAZON'S" LATEST DISCOVERY

La Razón, the evening paper whose heart bleeds for the welfare of Argentina, and whose pen is always drawn to defend the right, has made another discovery—the frigorificos are robbing the cattle raiser.

In its issue of Friday La Razón set out to show that the slump in prices for frigorifico cattle was due to the freckers deliberately tampering with the law of supply and demand. In other words it accuses them of not shipping beef, and then making the excuse for lower prices that shipping space is not available. La Razón says that in the Port of Buenos Aires there are the following steamers:—Highland Piper, Lynton Grange, Kelvinbank, Araguaya and La Negra, all British ships; as well as the Italian steamer, Tomaso di Savoia; and the French vessel, Amiral Troude. At Port La Plata it asserts there are the Verdi, Highland Glen, Highland Enterprise, La Rosarina and the Desna. La Razón does not spell the names correctly but that is immaterial. It adds that these ships have a capacity of 60,000 tons, and it asks "Why are not their holds filled up?" Of course the Government is called upon to do its duty, whatever that may be.

Unfortunately for La Razón six of the twelve ships mentioned have sailed. The Desna sailed on October 25; the Highland Glen on October 27; the Verdi on October 28; La Rosarina, October 29; Highland Enterprise, Oct. 30, and the Araguaya on November 5, and probably the Razón's shipping reporter went with one of them. The Lynton Grange is now loading general cargo, and the Kelvinbank is already loaded. The 12 steamers have capacity only for from 20,000 to 25,000 tons. La Razón is not convincing.

igable channel, and grounding is frequent. The larger grain traders are compelled to complete at Sulina for the simple reason that there is insufficient water in the upper reaches. SUICIDE FROM THE KELVINBANK

It is now established that the man who drowned himself from the s.s. Kelvinbank was the second cook, Thomas Gray, aged 22. A lady on shore saw him descend to the water, as she supposed to lift something, but seeing that he remained submerged all but one hand, she raised an alarm. Gray left a paper among his clothes telling his intention to destroy himself as he was attacked by an incurable disease. The body is believed to be under the vessel's keel and is being searched for.

GLIMPSES OF WAR
SEEN FROM THE BRIDGE
EXPERIENCES OF THE S.S.
BOLLINGTON GRANGE

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Bahia Blanca, Nov. 7.

The s.s. Bollington Grange arrived here on Friday, having steamed out from England in ballast to load frozen meat. She is an old vessel, with two funnels, and was at one time the Buteshire, belonging to the Shire Line. Her commander, Captain Boadie, has been in the ship for seventeen years.

Although a peaceful merchantman, the Bollington Grange has been closely associated with the great war from the early days following the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia. She was requisitioned at the commencement of hostilities by the Admiralty Transport authorities, and subsequently acted as a supply ship. When in Boston, loading meat for France, she lay alongside the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, who, it will be remembered left that port for Bremen with five million dollars in specie on board and subsequently returned to port hastily on receipt of the news that war had broken out in Europe.

In June last the Bollington Grange was in Dunkirk discharging cargo. At that time the giant Krupp guns were bombarding the city from a distance of over 20 miles. One of the huge shells, weighing about a ton, struck a cotton mill only a hundred yards from where the vessel was lying. Soldiers and firemen were engaged in extinguishing the resultant conflagration when another projectile fell, killing or wounding sixty men. The damage caused by these shells, so I am informed, was appalling. Great pits were made in the roadways—some of them twenty feet square and ten feet deep. Tauhe aeroplanes were constantly hovering around the Bollington Grange and on one occasion a hostile craft came very little above the mast head and dropped a dart, which, however, fell on a ship just ahead and spent its force in a coil of rope.

The trenches were only eighteen miles away and the firing of the big guns could be constantly heard.

Within ten miles of Dunkirk were the English monitors. They were daily engaged in shelling the German positions. The effect of the continuous gunfire was jarring to the nerves of the men on the vessels in the harbour, and, after a few days experience of the unusual sound, the eardrums were considerably affected.

After her Dunkirk experiences, the Bollington Grange had yet another adventure. She was returning to England when she picked up a wireless message from a White Star Liner, who informed her that an enemy submarine was in the neighbourhood of Ushant. Captain Boadie communicated with the shore authorities and two destroyers approached. When they were about a mile away, the "wanted" pirate showed above water between the destroyers and the Bollington Grange. The last thing seen by the crew of the latter vessel was the spectacle of two destroyers zig-zagging from point to point in an endeavour to discover their then-submerged enemy. On arrival in port, the Bollington Grange officers learned that on the previous evening a submarine had been sunk by an English destroyer off Ushant.

The second officer of the Bollington Grange was in Penang when the notorious Emden sailed into port under false colours and sank an unsuspecting Russian warship. He was in charge of the first boat put into the water to rescue the survivors. In all, he was instrumental in rescuing 34 men, including the Russian commander who was injured, and a poor fellow whose legs had been carried away, as well as another man who had lost half his face.

On leaving England recently, the Bollington passed fourteen floating mines in the Channel. These had been strewn by German submarines, and on more than one occasion only missed the Grange by about ten yards.

CASE ARGUED IN COURT.

London, Nov. 17.

Yesterday morning the hearing was continued of the case in which the Anti-German League seeks to establish the illegality of Sir Edgar Speyer and Sir Ernest Cassel, as German born although naturalised as British, holding the ranks of Privy Councillors.

Counsel for Sir E. Speyer stated that in view of the fact that his client had offered his resignation to His Majesty, who declined to accept it, the present proceeding must be considered entirely inconsistent, nor was it proper that he should be subsequently required to appear to assert his right to membership of the Privy Council.

Counsel for Sir Ernest Cassel contended that by the Act of 1870 conferring all rights and privileges on naturalised British citizens, any disabilities had been removed and abolished. This contention the Anti-German League disputed. Sir J. E. Smith, the Attorney General, said that a judgment favourable to the applicants could not be enforced as it would practically involve an order against the Crown.

The Ancona Murders

VIENNA'S FEEBLE DEFENCE

Washington, Nov. 17.

The State Department publishes the text of the Austrian Government's version of the sinking of the Italian liner Ancona.

The submarine is stated to have fired a shot across the Ancona's bows as a signal to stop upon which the liner fled at full speed complying with the instructions officially given to all Italian steamships at the beginning of the war to try to escape if held up by submarines or to ram the latter. The vessel was repeatedly fired on while fleeing and was hit several times. Forty-five minutes were given for passengers and crew to leave but intense panic prevailed and some of the boats lowered were occupied only by the members of the crew who pulled hastily away. Many boats, which would have sufficed to save all hands were unoccupied. After fifty minutes the submarine torpedoed the Ancona which sank in 45 minutes.

If many passengers were drowned, the blame entirely rests on the crew. The statement that the submarine fired on the loaded life-boats and on drowning people in the water is a malicious fabrication. Ammunition is much too valuable. No shot was fired after the vessel stopped.

The steamer was fired upon without any notice, as were also the ship's life-boats while the drowning people who approached the submarine were repelled with brutal jeers. By these means some two hundred women and children were drowned.

ITALIAN INTIMATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

The submarine savagely shelled the ship killing and wounding passengers. Those who when in the water approached the submarine hoping to be saved were driven away with brutal insults and jeers. The denunciation is made to the United States irrespective of whether the submarine was German or Austrian.

CHURCHILL'S DRAMATIC FAREWELL

SPIRITED DEFENCE IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

London, Nov. 15.

To-day in the House of Commons Mr. Winston Churchill made a speech justifying his action during his period of office as First Lord of the Admiralty.

Referring especially to the Dardanelles operations which have been criticised with great acerbity by some of the opposition papers, Mr. Churchill spoke with particular vigour and eloquence producing a distinct impression.

After having assigned the various Ministerial responsibilities, without shrinking from his own, he affirms again that this operation was absolutely necessary for the carrying out of the Allied plans.

In conclusion he demonstrated that it is not necessary in order to defeat the Germans, to expel them from the territories they now occupy beyond their own frontiers. In the second or third year of the war they will be beaten by our command of the seas.

The prodigious losses of her soldiers cause the German military power to decay while that of Britain is increasing owing to the great reserves which will be thrown into the scale.

During the campaign of 1915 the Allies suffered from lack of munitions. During 1916 the Germans will suffer from a more fatal scarcity; that of men.

ASQUITH'S TRIBUTE.

London, Nov. 15.

Mr. Winston Churchill was cheered on taking his seat in the House. Mr. Asquith made a brief speech praising him highly, in which he observed that he had always found in Mr. Churchill a wise Councillor, a brilliant colleague and a faithful friend. He carried with him, universal goodwill.

THE DARDANELLES ADVENTURE

Mr. Churchill said that he regarded the chances of the Dardanelles expedition as a legitimate war gamble for a prize of inestimable value, with a very reasonable chance of winning. If any operations in History were worth while carrying through with sustained fury and disregard of life, these were they. The Admiral on the spot said that the fortifications could not be taken by a rush, but might be gradually reduced by bombardment.

WHERE FISHER FAILED

Lord Fisher, Mr. Churchill continued, had not given clear guidance before the Dardanelles enterprise nor did he afterwards give the firm support which he as Civil Head of the Navy was entitled to expect from him. Lord Fisher opposed the reduction of Naval strength in Home waters by the expedition, but never criticised the methods of attack on the Dardanelles.

KITCHENER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Churchill then asserted that he declined to accept undivided responsibility for the Antwerp relief force which, he caused a sensation by declaring, was really sent at the instance of Lord Kitchener and the French strategic experts, whose idea it was to check the Germans. Notwithstanding its failure as a military venture, he defended it as later it forced the Germans to give battle on the Iser instead of further South in France.

LORD HALDANE'S RETIREMENT

SIR EDWARD GREY SYMPATHETIC.

London, Nov. 11.

Speaking in the House of Commons this afternoon the Secretary of State for the Foreign Office, Sir Edward Grey, said that at the time Lord Haldane left the Cabinet he himself expressed a desire to resign, and but for the crisis in public affairs he would have done so.

Sir Edward added that Lord Haldane's resignation was a loss to the public service, and he regretted that there had been no opportunity to utilise the services of that nobleman in the Foreign Office.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE

THE POSITION OF BRITISH CREDIT.

London, Nov. 12.

The announcement by New York of the names of the Committee men who are working at the American exchange problem has caused surprise, as the details of the scheme are still incomplete.

The fifty million dollars mentioned as a British credit to be arranged at New York are expected to have a steadying effect on exchange rates and keep the gold in this country; but it is believed here that that will constitute only a small portion of the credit that will ultimately be arranged.

WOMEN AND THE WAR

"SAVE THE SOLDIERS FIRST."

London, Nov. 11.

The "Morning Post" of to-day states:—

"A correspondent has sent us a statement made by the captain of a French cruiser which illustrates the part that is being played in the war by many noble women.

"The captain was instrumental in saving a number of passengers by a British transport which had been torpedoed in the Aegean. The transport was conveying a party of thirty-six nurses, ten of which were drowned. When the French boats approached the sinking ship, the nurses called out:—'Save the soldiers first.'"

The newspaper comments on this: "Such devotion deserves to live in British history."

and in regard to the cruisers lost in the North Sea, as in the case of the destruction of Admiral Cradock's squadron in the Pacific and the Falklands battle, he could produce documents to indicate his responsibility.

THE NEW WAR COUNCIL.

Mr. Asquith following Mr. Churchill said that the discussion to be raised on Tuesday on recruiting was an obvious attempt to enforce compulsion which could not be applied without consent of Parliament. Sir Edward Grey he added, was not in the new War Council at his own request but would assist at its sessions when he desired. Nevertheless he shared the responsibility of the Government's war policy.

CONSCRIPTION!

EARL DERBY'S THREAT

NOV. 30 FIXED AS TIME LIMIT

[The cabled news did not state precisely what this promise was; presumably, however, Earl Derby's statement is a threat of compulsory service. — Ed. THE HERALD.]

"SPECTATOR'S" APPEAL TO REASON.

London, Nov. 12.

Commenting on the American protest against British interference with the trade of the United States, the "Spectator" says:—

"A harsh and unsympathetic tone will not make us relax in the slightest degree the grip on the throat of Germany which our sea power gives us.

"The British have torpedoed no American ships, nor have they killed any Americans. We do not believe that the majority of Americans would endure seeing Britain stabbed in the back."

BRITAIN AND THE BALKANS

SIR EDWARD GREY EXPLAINS.

London, Nov. 12.

In a speech explaining the British policy in the Balkans, Sir Edward Grey stated in the House of Commons that, in accordance with an understanding with France, the Government offered to send 150,000 men in order to give Greece a chance of fulfilling her treaty with Serbia. All the troops which were available were immediately despatched to the Balkans, and preparations were made to send further contingents to various points in Greece.

It then became plain that Greece did not intend to carry out her undertaking, and after consulting with the French Government it was decided to land the troops at Salonica.

Great preparations will be made in Constantinople to receive the Emperor with all pomp and circumstance.

GERMANY'S FAILING STRENGTH

NEW YORK JOURNALIST'S VIEWS.

New York, Nov. 15.

In the "New York Tribune," Mr. Simons publishes an article sustaining the opinion that Germany must be overthrown by exhaustion for lack of men.

Comparing the population of the Allied countries with that of the Germanic Powers he finds that the former can dispose of 27,500,000 men against 11,750,000, the uttermost maximum of the latter.

The Allies' success greatly depends on the speed with which they can organise and equip their armies. If this can be done it may be hoped to force the war to a finish next autumn or possibly midsummer.

Food difficulties also exist in Germany.

Differences in the French and British computations of German losses are slight, and all signs indicate that the complete exhaustion of Germany will take place in the middle of next year.

German military experts say that they can put a total of 9,000,000 men under arms, but they cannot retard the inevitable. In German opinion France and Russia are exhausted of resources, and will not tarry in seeking peace, but this does not affect the basis of the matter, for it can only happen when the Germans have been completely conquered.

The writer concludes thus:

"I think Germany went to the Balkans rather to enforce peace than to conquer the Balkan States. Had Constantinople been in the hands of the Allies, the result must have been disastrous, but anyhow, the Germans have decided to abandon their attacks in Russia to precipitate action in the Balkans, all of which is confirmatory that Germany begins to feel exhaustion and is playing her last card."

ROSARIO NEWS

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT].

Nov. 16, 1915.

The Garden Fete.

Quite a number of little lives are in a state of suspended animation on account of the Garden Fete which is to open on Saturday at the residence of Mrs. J. P. Crouch, "La Quinta," near the Talleres. To-day is not Tuesday with them, but the early hours of Saturday—horribly interposed by an unkind calendar between themselves and the delightful programme which is being arranged for them. Such toys, and such games are in store, and if Tommy's proverbial mother can make better cakes than some of which I have seen the plans and specifications, then I can only say he lives in such unapproachable bliss that nothing further can be done for him, and he should stay away to avoid disappointment! There will be no difficulty in reaching "La Quinta," for a special train will leave the Central Station on Saturday and Sunday at 3 o'clock, and when it stops you have only to follow the other people. Tram lovers have convenient ones in Nos. 4 and 16, which set passengers down at the foot of the Pasaje Caledonio Escalada.

Saturday afternoon will the Children's Day, and the programme includes flat and sack races, obstacle rushes, and egg and spoon manipulation, divided up for boys and girls, and further divided for children above and below the age of nine. For the wee kiddies a carriage drawn by a couple of goats—elected from half the bearded population of the Province, I believe—will provide that amusement with a spice of potential danger to which they are so partial.

For grown-ups, Sunday's programme includes a costume race for men in which competitors will have to attire themselves in miscellaneous garments of feminine cut and get first to the post. The more modern the rig—judging by the trend of fashion of late—the better chance will a man have of romping home first. Hat-trimming will also exercise their inventiveness. The ladies will have to garner potatoes and to juggle with the egg and spoon. Broad comedy is expected from the "tilting at the ring," in which the competitor mounted on a donkey must either make good at the target or bring sawdust retribution down on the plural of donkey. It will be good fun, all of it.

Concert at the Methodist Church.

With the exception of the vocal quartette, for which a pianoforte solo by Miss Watson was substituted, and one or two changes of part in the little comedy "To be Let, furnished," the programme given on Friday night at the Methodist Church followed that which I published in my last letter.

Mr. Dickson, British Consul, was in the chair, and in a happy little speech said that just about a year ago he had stood on that same platform on one of the opening days of their Grand Bazaar. On another occasion, also just about a year ago, he had presided at a concert similar in many ways to the one in progress. On both those occasions the whole of the yield was given up—the first to the Prince of Wales's Fund, and the second to the local Victoria Benevolent Fund. He was not told so at the time, but he knew perfectly well that this had called for a tremendous sacrifice, because those two functions were of regular occurrence and were primarily designed for the support of the Church. He thought it very splendid of them, and he could never forget the fact, and if there was anything he could do for them at any time he should always be most happy to do it. He believed every member of the congregation who could go had already gone to the war; and he sincerely hoped that when they met for next year's concert they would be able to welcome the boys back after a successful termination of the fighting—(Applause).

The comedy was a great success, and two at least of those taking part displayed a good deal of talent, namely Mr. L. H. Heinert as Miss Penelope Freebody, M.D., and of the American heiress, and Mr. A. Mitchell as Mr. Simon Skipper, the house agent. The fun was kept alive all through.

Of the concert items, the choruses by the Male Voice Choir deserve special mention. The pieces chosen were "Crossing the Plain" by T. Mal-dwyn Price, and "The Crusaders" by Dr. Protheroe, N.B., and the audience were helped in their enjoyment of the selections by printed slips of the words.

The Sailors' Home: A Splendid Effort

Recently a meeting of the Committee of the Sailors' Home was called by the Chairman, Mr. Spenser S. Dickson, to consider ways and means. There was a deficit of about $2000, owing to the fact that the subscriptions were about $600 short; and added to this the Home was in a deplorable condition for lack of funds. Indeed, it was only owing to the public spirit of Mr. Halberg, the Superintendent, and Mrs. Halberg, that the institution was kept going at all. Reform was necessary. A sub-committee was appointed to look into the matter, and they decided that to remedy the then existing state of things, Mr. Halberg's allowance must be increased by $1800 a year at least. On this basis the figures showed a present deficit of $2000, and an annual deficit of $2300. Lists were therefore opened, and appeal was made for donations and for new and increased subscriptions. These sums are still coming in at the present time, and the Committee now have more than enough to make up the deficiencies in annual subscriptions, while the donations exceed $3000. The Consul is very gratified at the response our people have made, and is specially grateful to the gentlemen who have worked so hard in collecting subscriptions—Mr. Charlie Parr, Mr. A. Martin, Mr. A. M. Barnes and Mr. Alwyn Ferguson.

The Markets.

Wheat has been a dull, drooping market all through the week. Prices close easier, and only a small business has been done. Old wheats are more freely offered, but millers are uninterested in view of the favourable prospects for new crop wheat, which promises to be ready for milling during the next month. January delivery may be quoted $9.65 to $9.80, February and March $9.35 to $9.40. New crop is progressing well under the influence of another week's fine weather. The temperature has been higher this week, which is what is needed to bring the crop on. There was rain again during the week-end, but it did not reach the wheat, the precipitation being heaviest in the Province of Buenos Aires, near the coast.

Maize has been a slow sale; the market is dull, and exporters generally are short of tonnage. Spot is worth $4.95 to $5, December $5.05 to $5.10, and January $5.20 to $5.25. Freights are very scarce.

A Word to Shippers.

Notice has been received from the Foreign Office that a Society similar to the Netherlands Oversea Trust has been formed in Switzerland, to be known as the "Société de Surveillance Economique." This has resulted from an agreement between the Allied and Swiss Governments. The Society will be the only authorised consignee of practically all commodities on the lists of contraband or restricted exports proclaimed by the Allies, and it will begin its functions on the 1st of December next. Under the arrangements made, nothing can be sent to the Society without the formal consent of their office at Berne being first obtained by the ultimate consignee; therefore shippers and shipowners are advised to require proof of such consent before making shipment to Switzerland of anything on the lists above-mentioned, if they wish to escape detention. The British Government cannot forego the right of search in respect of consignments to which suspicion may attach, but it is naturally hoped and anticipated that there will be no trouble in regard to any goods consigned to the Society. Lists will be duly published from time to time in the Board of Trade Journal and in Switzerland.

Concert Tea at the Savoy.

Mrs. Spenser S. Dickson is arranging the Concert Tea at the Savoy Hotel, on the 4th prox., on lines which must commend themselves to everybody. It is to begin punctually, and those who really have the best interests of their fellow men and women at heart might make a special effort to be in their places a little in advance of four o'clock. I know it is usual at home for late arrivals to be mistaken for duchesses; but all the duchesses I know out here are strictly incog., and could hardly run such a risk of discovery as going late or early to a public function. Then the music is to be the real thing. One of the names on the programme is that of Sr. Pedro Vidal, the distinguished violinist, and he will be in most excellent company. Again there is to be a time limit: the whole function is not to exceed two and a half hours. How often the undue length of a social gathering spoils everything! Lastly, and most important of all, one of the only too rare opportunities will be afforded of meeting, and I hope of hearing, H.B.M. Minister, Sir Reginald Tower, who has kindly promised to be present.

I hear that many of our Allies have signified their intention to attend; and this calls for a mention of the gratifying circumstance that there is a good deal of cordial working together between the Franco-Belgian and British communities. Last night there was an entertainment at the Palace Theatre—conjuring and cinematograph pictures—organised by a Committee of which Mme. Hof is the inspiring genius. There were numbers of British people present, including Mr. Spenser S. Dickson, H.B.M. Consul, and Mrs. Dickson. Mme. Hof, unfortunately, was indisposed, but M. Hof, the French Consul was present, and also M. Flondrois, the Belgian Consul. I have used the word genius in reference to Mme. Hof, and no one can deny that she is a wonderful organiser, with the tact to seize upon and remedy a defect in any scheme afoot. Take these periodical entertainments. It was found that people did not care to go into the second tier of boxes at the various theatres: they were not chic. When the next occasion came round Mme. Hof arranged that the Consular officers should themselves occupy boxes in the unfashionable row—which, of course, immediately became quite as much "the thing" as the first row boxes.

Lawn Tennis.

The play at Plaza Jewell on Sunday in the Tennis Tournament finals brought out the fact that Miss Knight from Tucuman, sister of Mr. Stanley Knight, is an exceptionally good player, well ahead of any lady about here. In the mixed doubles the two had an easy win. There was a good attendance thanks to the glorious weather, and the standard of play was well maintained. There is one feature to be noticed, and that is the great improvement of late in the form of the Argentine players. Possibly the handicappers were a little easy upon them, but be that as it may, they figure in practically every final, winning either first or second prize. They secured second in the men's doubles, they are still in the class "A" singles—which were not concluded on Sunday—they were first and second in the class "B" singles, first in the ladies' doubles, and second in the ladies' singles. It shows how good the soil of the country is —once games such as football and tennis take root they flourish.

Cricket.

Cricket—well, no! It does not seem to get hold in Argentina among the natives; and of course this year will see a tremendous slump in the game among the British community, so many men having gone away to the war. There is to be a knock-up game at the Plaza on Sunday next to see if there is any new blood available, but it is hardly likely that there will be anything really worth calling a cricket season.

News in Brief.

I hear that Canon Pepys will not be back until the new year. The school goes on at St. Bartholomew's, and is nearing breaking-up day. The Sports will take place at Plaza Jewell, by kind permission of the Committee, on Dec. 18, the Saturday before Christmas.

Milton still survives as a classic, though somewhat neglected at the seaside and in the railway carriage. He is being brought to remembrance at Alberdi High School to-night, and with such a fine evening there should be a good attendance. The British Consul and Mrs. Dickson have promised to attend.

Contributions for the Sale of Work to be held on December 8, at the High School in aid of the S.A.M.S. fund will be gratefully acknowledged, and the invitation to be present is extended to all. For years past the Sale has provided not a few people of the riparian suburb with the means to remember their friends at Christmas, and filled the sack of many a Santa Claus.

Cheap excursions should be run during the week to view the s.s. "Eastville," Captain R. Mackay, which is loading for Dreyfus. As the only British vessel in port she is a bit of a curiosity!

All are heartily invited to the Talleres Church, F.C.C.A., on Sunday next. Evening Service is at 8 p.m., and the preacher will be the Rev. S. C. Deacon.

A special Intercession Service will be held in the Talleres Church Hall, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 23, at 8 o'clock, when members of the congregation and friends of members, who are fighting the just cause of our King and country, will be specially mentioned in prayer. It is hoped that a large number will take the opportunity to be present. Those wishing to have the names of their friends on the Prayer List are asked to send them to the Chaplain, c/o the Vestry Clerk, Instituto Mecanico, Talleres, F.C.C.A.

The British and French Ladies' Committee are arranging a Children's Fete for the Christmas week or thereabouts.

The Mayor of Rosario and the ex-Mayor—I hardly know which is which—have so managed, that the humble Municipal empleado is rather fearful lest he come to ground between the two of them in the matter of his pay. He realises that in this country, and especially in this city, anything may happen, and nothing does happen as it should. Au fond I am inclined to think the ex-Mayor's enthusiasm for moral reform touched too many influential men in the bank balance.

The crew who went down from the Rosario Rowing Club to Buenos Aires to take part in the Tigre Regatta have been highly complimented on their success in winning the F.C.C.A. Cup. The same crew were also successful in the March regatta. The result of their prowess has been a revival of enthusiasm at the Club, and it is probable that the R.R.C. will be more widely represented on the Tigre next March.

Messrs. Wood and Fields, of Estancia "Las Petacas," who left for Europe in August or September last, to offer their services to their country, have just arrived back in Argentina.

Weather.

Up to last week the weather had been on the whole agreeable, although somewhat changeable. Since the end of last week it has become extremely hot, with at times a north wind. At night it is quite warm.

Women's Association.

The following notice has been issued by the Concordia Branch of the "Women's Association": "In Aid of the 'Edith Cavell Memorial Fund,' and to improve the lighting arrangements of St. Thomas Church, Concordia, a Christmas Fete will be held in the Victoria Park on the afternoon and evening of December 18. There will be children's sports, a Christmas tree, games, concert, theatrical entertainment, etc. There will also be a stall for the sale of useful and fancy articles and provisions (such as needlework, eggs, jam, plum pudding, mince meat, turkeys, fowls, fruit, etc.), for which contributions will be received by Mrs. Neville, Honorary Secretary, 145 Calle Uruguay. Donations of its annual meeting on the 30th inst.,—a month late, it is true, but circumstances have been too strong for the Committee. There will be no banquet this year, but the usual business will be transacted, and I understand several schemes will be submitted such as endowing a bed in some hospital, or subscribing again to one of the war funds. The Hon. Treasurer, Mr. A. Watson, will be pleased to acknowledge member's subscriptions and arrears—they should by rights also send interest on the arrears—addressed to him c/o the London and River Plate Bank. Meanwhile the Hon. Secretary is anxious to hear from new candidates for membership: his address, now that the re-numbering of the street has been completed—a plague on that local habit!—is Calle Doce No. 1465. He is also desirous of starting a roll of honour of members who have gone to the Front, and will take it as a favour if anyone knowing particulars of members at the Front will let him know.

An unexpected treat was in store for Scotsmen this last week-end, in the presence in Rosario of Dr. Fleming, who at short notice came up instead of Mr. Nicol. In the afternoon he preached at the Methodist Church, and was moved, on seeing so many children present, to address himself more especially to them. Producing a match he said it had been made for a set purpose: the head and stalk had its own use. He struck it, and then blew it out, showing its purpose and that the purpose had been accomplished. The match could not be re-lighted by striking it on the empty box. In the same way the children had their use; they fulfilled their own purposes, and if they allowed themselves to go out they were no longer of use. In the evening Dr. Fleming was again in the same pulpit, and made a forceful appeal to the young people present. He spent as much time as possible during his brief visit in visiting members of the Scotch Church, who, needless to say, were delighted at seeing him.

Mr. H. E. O. Haxell, of Buenos Aires, paid a business visit to Rosario during last week.

I hear that Mr. Unwin is thinking of going home to England at the end of the month.

The concert at the Methodist Church the other night yielded, I hear, about $200 net towards the Church Expenses Fund.

money to help in dressing the Christmas Tree, etc., will be gratefully acknowledged by the Honorary Treasurer, Mrs. Kellard, 438 Calle Buenos Aires. It is requested that donations of money, needlework, etc., be sent in as early as possible, and poultry and perishable goods should be delivered on Friday, December 17. It is hoped all will do something to make the fete a success, as the objects named are worthy of support.

Tennis.

The sealed handicap tournament was finished on Sunday, and the results declared on the grounds of the Tennis Club. The ladies' prize in the doubles was won by Mrs. Cowper Coles. It was a lovely parasol subscribed for by the gentlemen who entered for the competitions. The Gentlemen's Singles was won by Mr. Henry Bell, who, playing from scratch, had a total of 41 games to his credit. The prize, presented by Mr. R. MacKenzie, was a carriage clock in a red Morocco leather casing. The gentlemen's prize in the doubles was won by Mr. C. H. Todd, who with Mr. G. Roberts as partner, ran up the score of 32 games. Their handicap being minus 2. The prize, presented by Mr. S. W. Roberts, was a silver cigarette case and match-box in a case. Some surprises occurred in the results. Mr. Todd was a dark horse, and his play was far above what he was expected to show. The handicapping was not of the best order, some of the best players being so heavily handicapped that their chances were absolutely nil.

Cricket.

At a meeting held on Nov. 19, in the London and River Plate Bank House, a new cricket club was formed. The name of the Club is "The Victoria Athletic Club," as it is proposed in the winter months to play football. The following were elected on the cricket committee: President, Mr. J. McCloud; Vice-President, Mr. F. Dickinson; Hon. Vice-Presidents, Messrs S. W. Roberts, R. H. F. Stuart, G. F. Sketch, R. MacKenzie, T. B. Morley, E. F. Beasley, E. C. Emley, W. B. Cowper Coles, E. Thomas, and the Rev. C. Meredith Bate; Captain, F. Dickinson; Vice-Captain, A. Willoughby Walton; Hon. Secretary and Treasurer, C. H. Todd; and Messrs. A. Williams, G. Roberts, and G. Neville. The Hon. Auditor is Mr. C. W. Carden. The Secretary's address is 139 Calle Uruguay. On Nov. 28 a team will travel to Monte Caseros to play the first match of the season. It is hoped that on December 19 a visit will be made by a team representing Corrientes Camp. The cricket nets are up every afternoon for practice and the membership promised augurs well for the new Club.

Obituary.

The news has just come to hand of the death of Mr. Thomas Stodart-Milne at the age of 74. The sad news was not altogether unexpected, as he had been ailing for some time. He was a highly respected and well-known Scotchman, and came out to this country years ago when railways were few and far between. Although a number of years in the country he never cared much for speaking the language. He was able to teach a few of his Guardini peons to understand and speak to him in English. He died on his estancia Tari near Yofre in Corrientes, where his son, Mr. Thomas Stodart-Milne, or as he is better known among his friends, Don Tomasito, and his daughter, Mrs. Higg, attended him during his illness. He was buried on his estancia near his wife's grave.

The Inter-Railway Sports.

The annual Inter-Railway sports were held at Maldonado, on the grounds of the Pacific Railway on Thursday, and the competition for the various events was very keen. There were a large number of the members of both railways and other visitors present, although not quite so many as in other years. Amongst the visitors were the Italian Consul (Senor Bernetti), and the French Consul (Baron de la Vaissiere). There were also a large number of ladies present. The day was fine, but very hot, and rather windy at times. The Railway Shield, which is competed for every year, remained in the hands of the Southern Railway, after being won by five points. A start was made at 10.15 a.m., with the 100 Yards Handicap for members of the Pacific Club. This was won by E. Borel; 2 M. Brunel; 3 B. Maggio. Time 11.15 secs.

No. 2. Challenge Cup for Southern Employees, distance 220 yards.—1, Ronald; 2, T. Marshall; 3, B. Maggio. Time 25 secs.

The prizes were then distributed by Mrs. Harding Green to the different winners. The Cup, "Victor Ludorum," which was presented by the Intendente to be given to the winner of the most points in the Inter-Railway events, and to be held for one year, was won by Ernest Borel of the Pacific Railway, with eight points. The prizes, which had been given by a large number of different people and business firms in the district, were useful and costly. The municipal band was in attendance during the afternoon, and several photographs of the different events and winners were taken on the ground.

Municipal Matters.

The Intendente has notified the holders of the different stalls in the market here that by the end of this month several regulations with regard to the sanitary precautions during the coming hot weather are to be made by them. The insides of the stalls are to be properly whitewashed, and the doors and benches painted and cleaned, and proper awnings are to be put up. For some time past very little attention has been given to this market, and the state in which it has been kept, and it is high time some urgent steps were taken in this matter. A proper inspection is also to be made before the end of the year of the coaches that are in the streets for hire, in order to ascertain if they are kept in a clean condition, and that the drivers have their licences, failing which it is proposed to suspend defaulters as well as any of the others who do not dress in a respectable manner.

The San Ramon Estancia.

At the recent show held in Palermo of the four prizes given for Lincoln rams, three of these fell to Señor Lopez Lecube, who was also one of the principal exhibitors at the local show here, and who took several prizes in this and other classes.

The Missions to Seamen Institute.

The erection of this building has now been started at the port, near the foot of the bridge at the west end, and on the side of the old power station, the contractor being Mr. W. Rae. There still remains a fair sum to be collected towards the work, and a Bazaar in aid thereof is to be held in the Port on December 18, for which purpose a meeting of ladies is to be held in the Port on Friday, Nov. 19, at 5 p.m., in the small club room, in order to make the necessary arrangements about the stalls, etc.

Items in Brief.

The question of men for the coming harvest this season, which promises to be a very good one, is being brought up and it is feared that there will be a scarcity of labour.

On Wednesday morning last a sergeant of the battleship Moreno, whilst waiting on the platform of the Southern Station threw himself in front of a cargo train as it was passing through and had both his legs crushed so badly that on being taken to the Municipal Hospital it was found necessary to amputate them. The man's name was Maximo Flores. He only lived a few hours after the tragedy.

Notice has been issued that the municipal taxes corresponding to the last quarter of the year are to be paid before November 30, after which date the corresponding fine will be added.

The circus Frank Brown now performing here is very good indeed and attracting large crowds of people every night.

Prepermission has been asked of the Municipality by Sr. Castanon to reopen the swimming baths at Maldonado for the coming summer.

At the request of the Intendente one hundred tubes of lymph for vaccination against diptheria have been sent here from the provincial health department.

A new club has recently been formed here and is to be known as the Dublin Football Club.

District Notes.

Proper arrangements have now been made for the employment of the prisoners in the gravel pits at Sierra Chica. The number working per day is not to exceed 360, and each day is to consist of eight hours.

A sale of live-stock is to be held in Utracan on December 1 starting at 3 p.m.

At the sales held in Coronel Dorrego last Sunday steers were sold at from $124 to $150 each, young steers $80, three year old heifers $126.50, two year olds $112, and young bulls $155 to $376, fat cows fetched $137 and horses from $100 to $190. Wethers for killing $10.40 to $10.50 and lambs from $8 to $9.50; the total amount sold was $51,000.

The farming expert of this district (Sr. Unanue) has now left for the station of Dionisia in order to give the final lecture of this season there; it will be on the cultivation of potatoes. In all fourteen different lectures have been given at the different stations along the lines in the coach supplied for this purpose by the southern Railway, who have lent great assistance to Sr. Unanue on every occasion.

As the train from Sierra de la Ventana was coming here a few mornings ago it was stopped outside that section by a large log of wood placed on the line into which the engine ran before it could be stopped. On getting down to investigate the incident the guards and several passengers were fired upon by some colonists hidden in the long grass, who on being shot at ran away. The train was delayed an hour. On arriving at the station, the matter was at once put in the hands of the police who immediately went in pursuit of the criminals.

Trafalgar Day.

Owing to a misunderstanding the report of the Children's Entertainment on Trafalgar Day has been omitted. To keep evergreen the children's memory of Nelson—the benefits of whose deeds are now felt more than ever—the Over-Seas Club has instituted this annual treat for all British children in the districts of Bahia Blanca, Ingeniero White and Maldonado. Adult Over-Seas Members were invited to assist in giving the youngsters, who numbered about 150 a real good time. Swings, games and races of all kinds were indulged in after a sumptuous tea. Excellent prizes were awarded to the various winners, and sweets dealt out liberally to all the children. The grounds kindly lent by the Bahia Blanca Golf Club were beset with flags, and code signals of Nelson's motto fluttered in the breeze and the Over-Seas standard brought a special thrill of pride to all British hearts, at these great stirring times. Almost every British family was represented and a few new members were enrolled. The Rev. J. T. Mills (Buenos Aires branch) received a warm welcome and proved a host in himself with the youngsters.

MISS ADELA VERNE

AT THE SALON THEATRE

It was undoubtedly owing to the heat, which was oppressive, that there was not a more considerable number of people present at the Salon Theatre Cangallo, on November 13, for the penultimate number of the series of pianoforte recitals given by Miss Adela Verne in Buenos Aires. In spite of this, there was quite a number present who enjoyed a magnificent exposition of pianoforte playing.

In the first place, the programme was varied in a pleasing manner and consisted of 3 parts, in the first of which, Bach's Italian Concerto, Mozart's Pastorale Variée, two pieces by Schumann the Aria and Caprice d'après Paganini, and Weber's Perpetuum Mobile.

Miss Adela Verne is a remarkable exponent of Schumann, and the latter of the two pieces played was rendered to perfection.

The second half was Chopin's Opus 35. Magnificently as this was played, with a full and vigorous feeling, there were one or two moments when Miss Verne appeared distracted, and without question the oppression in the weather was against an entire application to the music without a recurrence of thought to personal discomfort. The Scherzo, the second movement in the Sonata, brought out all Miss Verne's wonderful power and control over her instrument. She "drew" the melody forth with a compelling force that could be felt by her audience.

The third part consisted of Paderewski's "Legenda," Sgambati's daintily peculiar work "Vecchio Minuet," and "La Campanella," Liszt.

This was the gem of the whole recital. It was magnificent. Few pianists can even play it, very few understand it, and perhaps only one, the exception in the front rank of the world's artists can interpret it. It is a work full of immense technical difficulty, requires remarkable execution, but more than all, it needs a knowledge of rhythm and expression of a very high order, without this the work would be a maze. It was so rendered as to bring forth a storm of applause, the audience realising these points and knowing that none but a true artist and genius could have interpreted a work that many of them had never even understood before.

Paderewski is somewhat of a moody player, and especially in the rendering of his own works, when perhaps a familiarity brings out a certain carelessness. On the one occasion he was heard to play his "Legenda" he did not approach Miss Adela Verne's interpretation and playing of yesterday. These two dainty gems stood head and shoulders above the other items of a programme each one of which was a work of art.

It was unfortunate that the programme could not be concluded. Indisposition ended it after Liszt's work, but this was chiefly due to the heat and that Miss Verne is still not quite restored to perfect health after her long and serious illness.

A TRIUMPH

Tuesday, Nov. 16

The genius of Adela Verne was in the ascendant last night in one or two of the items included in her programme at the Salón Teatro, Cangallo. There was more than one outstanding feature of the evening and amongst these must be included, the appreciative reception accorded, the immense audience and the artist's rendering of Chopin's Scherzo in the first part of the programme, Schumann's Op. 82 in the second and Saint Saens' Dance Macabre (Liszt) in the final part.

A full house such as was the case last evening, is in itself a gratification to any artist and it only remains to claim the enthusiasm of the audience for such a recital to be a success.

In this Miss Adela Verne succeeded and in certain parts of the programme she excelled herself by a wonderful exposition of piano-playing, but still more in her interpretation and the construction with which she expounded the wonders of Chopin, Schumann and Saint Saens.

A very full house appreciated this to the utmost and their appreciation reached enthusiasm when the final item on the programme was played. Hardly a member of the audience made a move that might indicate that the recital was over, and in consequence Miss Verne gave Paderewski's "Legenda" as an extra. Even this was insufficient and after repeated recalls she generously played Grieg's delicate melody "Au Printemps."

It is almost impossible to describe in words the remarkable perfection with which Schumann's "Woodland Scenes" was rendered. Miss Verne has built up for herself a reputation for execution, expression and interpretation which only the most gifted of pianists could aspire to, but in this work, she excelled her own reputation last night. It was wonderful and the audience recognised its marvels.

The extraordinary "Dance Macabre" was the feature of the third part. Miss Verne's own interpretation of this piece was vividly felt when she commenced, with a control over her instrument little short of miraculous, to expound and interpret to her audience a work of great technical difficulty and a work which without a perfectly intelligent rendering would become a jumble of sound or a pain, which could remind one of bones rattled in a sack. Miss Verne's interpretation of this work is uncommon and to conceive it differently will only be to acknowledge the more the pianist's genius.

A delicate and dainty rendering of De Severac's musical box arranged by Miss Verne herself was immensely appreciated and in response to continued applause, part was repeated a second time.

Well played as was the final item Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise" there was just a sensation of fatigue in the rendering, which cannot be wondered at. It was nevertheless a fine exposition.

Bouquets and other gifts were showered upon Miss Verne during the interludes and it is pleasing to announce that one more recital will be given on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 20, at five o'clock previous to a departure for Montevideo and Europe.

These were moments last evening when Miss Verne not only excelled herself, but excelled any other living pianist with an exposition that was wonderful. There were other moments when fatigue were noticeable, but it must be remembered that this gifted artist has not yet completely regained her strength after her long and serious illness, but last night's recital will live long in the memory of the large audience who were fortunate enough to be present.

STATE RAILWAYS

GOVERNMENT ENQUIRY INTO IRREGULARITIES.

The Government have decided to nominate an official accountant to investigate and generally enquire into the affairs of the State Railways and to formulate a statement concerning the failure of the railways, their irregularities and a whole mass of other matter concerning the manner of their management which is stated to have caused a serious difference between the returns of last year and of this year to date. The matter is being gravely treated by the Government and there is some fluttering in the dovecotes.

For some considerable time the State Railways have been in a deplorable condition and the very numerous complaints have at last apparently had the necessary effect.

GARDEN FETE

AT HURLINGHAM CLUB

Saturday, Nov. 13.

BRITISH WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC FUNCTION.

Some weeks of preparation went to the production of the Garden Fete arranged by the Ladies of the British Womens' Patriotic Association at Hurlingham, but it must be acknowledged that the results were altogether worthy of the trouble taken.

All the British flags in the Republic, real genuine Union Jacks and not the parti-coloured impostors sometimes hoisted which bear only a slight resemblance to the "Meteor Flag," may not have been there, but assuredly there was an extraordinary muster. Over the gate flapped a mighty Red Cross bandera but within on the lawns, in the stalls, everywhere the eye fell upon the Banner of St. George, superimposed on St. Andrew's, and with the "fimbriated" Cross of St. Patrick. The very air which, redolent of the sweet scent of crushed grass, blew delightfully in the precinct, seemed to have been temporarily annexed. The vault of Heaven however displayed plenty of blue and white and the afternoon was an ideal one. Shortly after two, the Fete was in full swing; all the special attractions were working at full pressure. The children and those who could for the time pocket their dignity, were enjoying themselves hugely. Ponies, sober pacing steeds some of them, others which might be described as "sprightly palfreys" walked, trotted, or caracolled according to their humour and the abilities of their juvenile riders. One young lady, an expert horsewoman, trotted briskly about with very youthful equestrians held carefully on her saddle bow. Mrs. Willis, Mr. and Mrs. Gebbie, Miss Garrod and Miss Drabble were in charge. Not far away the putters putted within magic rings, of chalk marks not toad stools. There was not, however, that austere gravity with which the golfer and golfress usually performs the final rites of holing out, for a great deal of laughter and merriment could be heard. This was under the management of Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Ehlert, assisted by Mrs. Gregg, Miss Cowan and Miss Cassells.

Distantly from the solitudes on the other side of the cricket pitch, resounded the sharp crack of the rifle as the sharpshooters poured slugs into imaginary Huns at the range (20 yards). A biplane swooping hawklike in the blue contributed to help the warlike thoughts engendered by the whiffs of "villainous saltpetre." Mr. Corry Smith and Mr. Drabble charged the weapons and collected the fees.

Tennis was also going on under the expert eyes of Mrs. Drabble and Mrs. Boadle, and Mrs. Simmons and other ladies called upon the passer-by to turn aside and cast a fly in their fish pond, "for a consideration."

The Dramatic Department suffered an unfortunate eclipse by the indisposition of Mrs. Junius Rugeroni, so "Collaborators" was shelved, but the dancing went merrily, and an Microscopic Señorita attired in the traditional gitana wear, gave several expositions, but whether including La Cachuca, one knoweth not.

Destruction is a delight at times, and the bottle shies and Aunt Sally were natural outlets for the propensity. Mr. and Mrs. Wishaw and Mr. Green were in charge of the former.

Tea was dispersed in the "meat safe" mosquito and fly proof (when the door is shut) verandah, which is so excellent an addition to the Club Comedor, and in that apartment itself also. The refreshment contingent worked nobly under a heavy strain, and demands for immediate supplies by a great invasion. At times the scene was reminiscent (except for the absent fish) of the five thousand in the Wilderness. Tea was good and plentiful, the sandwiches were top hole, and the cake such as one does not expect to obtain "in the Provinces." Among the ladies who immolated themselves upon the altar of the Commissariat Department were Mrs. Withington, Mrs. Cassells, Mrs. P. S. Tudor, Mrs. Colville Jones, Miss Holway, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. and Miss Buckland, Mrs. Macadam, Miss Small, Miss Shaw and Miss Cooper. The blessing of the day and the benediction of the thirsty be upon them!

Such as delight to get where they can dive into the mysteries of Bridge were also accommodated, and Mrs. Darcy Anderson, Mrs. Gwyn and Mrs. B. Guy sat at the receipt of—tickets. In a booth near the Great Provision Stall, Mr., Mrs. and Miss Lacey dispensed lemonade of great merit and excellent quality to the perishing. And the Provision Stall—Ha!—this indeed was a spectacle. When after a brisk trade the major part of the goods had gone, Mr. Lacey proceeded to auction the balance, there were some bargains going. Par example, one gentleman secured a crate with six fine turkeys (alive and feathered) for $40. Two geese went at a good price. A magnificent equipage suitable for traction by goats or very small donkeys, fell to Mr. Mendl in a raffle.

A great part of the charm of the gathering was its absence of formality. No one grumbled, there was little occasion for it, no one but was more than cheerful and everyone appeared full of zeal for the good cause. If this is not a fairly close approximation to the Earthly Paradise, what is to be expected in addition? The Fete is more than justified on this point alone, but it was understood to be, though without giving figures, already an assured Success (with a Capital). With everybody "dispersed most notoriously" over the wide area, there were no speeches and no set pieces. Nevertheless the Garden Fete was a great success as aforesaid, and the results will confirm that statement. The ladies of the British Women's Patriotic Association are to be warmly congratulated. It should be said, that Professor Stark's Minstrels amply vindicated their claim to be an orchestra of musicians and not merely "a Band," which is sometimes merely an aggregation for making noises. They discoursed excellent music during the afternoon.

THE PROPAGANDA COMMISSION

EVIDENCE OF ITS ACTIVITY.

The recently formed Comisión de Propaganda Pro-Aliados is doing splendid work and an example of its activity has been brought to our notice this week in connection with the famous answer by Dr. Samuel Harden Church, President of the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburg, U.S.A., to the manifesto issued by the German Professors.

Dr. Church's letter in reply to Professor Schaper has been accepted as one of the strongest indictments of Germany, and is regarded as setting out very clearly the opinion of many millions of Americans that Germany is responsible for having started the war.

A reader of THE HERALD wrote in suggesting that this pamphlet issued by the "London Times" should be published in Spanish and distributed throughout this country. On inquiry, however, it was found that the Comisión de Propaganda had already recognised the value of Dr. Church's opinion from the point of view of the Allies, and that one of its members had translated the document into Spanish. Already over 45,000 copies of this circular have been distributed through the agency of the Comisión, and there is no doubt that the impression created on the minds of all neutrals who read the pamphlet is distinctly favourable to the claim of the Allies that their cause is just.

BRITISH WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC ASSOCIATION.

The monthly meeting of the British Women's Patriotic Association was held at the Plaza Hotel on Friday, Nov. 12. Mrs. Paton in the chair.

The following letters were read:—"Dear Madam,—We have received to-day 1 case of clothing per s.s. Avon from the British Women's Patriotic Committee, and wish to thank all those who have contributed to this good gift most heartily and gratefully for their generosity. The clothes being so good, will be much appreciated by the Belgian Refugees, of whom we have so many now in England. The clothing question is very urgent, and we shall be most grateful for any further contribution you may be able to send.

"With renewed warm thanks to all,

Yours faithfully,

"WAR REFUGEES COMMITTEE."

"We are so very grateful to the members of the 'British Women's Patriotic Association' for their generosity to the 'Officers' Families' Fund,' in sending a further donation of £250 in aid of the Fund. Will you please convey my thanks to them and to yourself as well.

"Believe me,

"Yours very sincerely,

(Signed) MARY LANSDOWNE.

"I have again to write to you to express the gratitude of my Committee for a donation to this Fund, this time a further amount of £250, from the British Women's Patriotic Association who have already manifested their sympathy with our work in such a generous and practical fashion.

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) CONSTANCE HOPE."

It was reported that the violin presented by "Patriota" to be raffled, had realised the sum of $100 for the Belgian Relief Fund, having been won by the holder of ticket No. 23, who should apply to Mrs. James Dey, of Quilmes, in the event of the violin not yet having been claimed.

It was decided to open a fund for the Blue Cross Society. Amongst items received for this fund were $74, arising from the raffle of chicken donated by Mrs. Withington, which had been won by the holders of tickets Nos. 120 and 37, Mrs. Norton and Mrs. Ehler, respectively. A further $12 had also been received for this fund, being the result of a private sale of poultry.

It was decided to support the movement already initiated for a memorial to Miss Cavell.

It was reported that the golf tournament organised by Mrs. H. C. Thompson and Mrs. Spanton had realised the sum of $210 for the benefit of the Red Cross Fund. Thanks were especially due to the Argentine Golf Club for the use of the course and arranging the handicaps.

Further contributions to this Fund had been raised by Mrs. Dixon ($96 arising from Ladies' Tennis Tournament); Miss Inez Campbell (Cordoba), from a raffle, $126; Mrs. Seward and Mrs. Mackenzie, $92; also from a Tennis Tournament; Mrs. Herbert Dean, from the raffle of a turkey, $50; Mrs. P. R. Boyd, from a dance, $958.50. Half proceeds of a concert organised at San Martín by Mrs. Paton, amounting to $415, had been donated to the Officers' Families' Fund. It was also reported that the sum of £655 7s. 4d., being the equivalent of $7,300 m/l, had been remitted to the Red Cross Fund on Nov. 12, being the result of a bazaar held in the Talleres Church School Rooms, Rosario, on Sept. 10 and 11.

The attention of the committee was drawn to the following appeal from H.M. the Queen:

"London, Oct. 8.

"To the Women of the Empire.

"I desire to express my most grateful thanks for the loyal and untiring support accorded to my guild during the months of stress through which we have been passing.

"The response to my first appeal has exceeded all expectations. But we have not yet arrived at a moment for any relaxation of our efforts in this direction, especially as winter is approaching, and I appeal once more to the loyalty and love shown me by the women of the Empire, with confidence that they will continue in the future the splendid and generous support which I have been accorded in the past.

"If the provision of comforts necessary for the well-being of our gallant sailors and soldiers is to be continued through the coming winter, our efforts from the Queen Mary's Needlework Guild must be redoubled.

"The following articles are urgently needed at Friary Court, St. James's Palace: Flannel night-shirts, flannel pyjamas, flannel bed jackets, bed socks, operation stockings, towels, feather pillows, sheets and pillow cases."

The following statement was then read by the Hon. Treasurer:—

BRITISH WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC ASSOCIATION.

PRINCE OF WALES'S FUND.

The total amount received for this Fund since this Association came into being is $42,884.30.

More than half of this amount, $27,123.00, has been raised by the system of monthly contributions initiated by Mrs. Gamburg, and admirably organised by Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Neville Jackson.

It will be realised that the handling and checking of these monthly contributions has involved a great deal of work and the thanks of the Association are certainly due to the ladies who have so well undertaken this work, as well as to all those who by local collections have contributed to the result.

It is hoped that an equally good result will be attained for the Officers' Families' Fund, to which in future the amounts realised by the monthly contributions will, in accordance with the Resolution taken at last meeting, be devoted.

Subscriptions will, of course, continue to be received for the Prince of Wales's Fund.

Of the total amount mentioned ($42,884.30) there have been remitted to the Prince of Wales one draft of $10,000, one of £600, and four of £500 each, making a total remitted of $39,281.05, or £3473 (exclusive of the amount sent in connection with the Patriotic Dollar Fund) and leaving a balance to be remitted with further amounts that may be received of $3603.25. Further donations amounting to $2000 would thus enable the Association to remit a further £500 to the P. of W. Fund for Xmas, and bring the total up to practically $4000 sterling.

PATRIOTIC DOLLAR FUND.

Now that the Patriotic Dollar Fund, initiated and organised by Mrs. C. H. Pearson, has been closed, it is a suitable opportunity to remind the members of the Association of the excellent results achieved, and to record the warm vote of thanks which Mrs. Pearson has more than earned.

The total amount collected has been $18,988.12, all of which has been remitted, divided as follows:—

St. John's Ambulance Fund	$3,270.77
Officers' Families' Fund	7,481.75
Red Cross Fund	1,324.60
Prince of Wales's Fund	530.00
Belgian Refugees	381.00

THE BRITISH WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC ASSOCIATION IN THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The other Funds for which subscriptions have been received, and to which remittances have been made, are:—

Belgian Relief Fund.
Pipe and Tobacco Fund.
Officers' Families' Fund.
British Red Cross.

For the Belgian Relief Fund $2954.65 have been received, and £239 7s. 11d. ($2722.86) have been remitted, leaving a balance in hand of $231.79.

Pipe and Tobacco Fund.
Total amount received . . . $1,131.20
Total amount remitted . . . $942.29

Balance in hand . . . $189.00

Officers' Families' Fund.
Received $8,109.90
Remitted 8,594.59

Balance over-remitted . . . $484.69

This adverse balance has been reduced by sums received since last meeting, so that actually, without taking into account the subscriptions received for this meeting, this Fund is in debit to the extent of $69.69, and against this there is the amount of $233.20 standing to credit in respect of Bank Interest to 30th September, 1915.

Finally the Red Cross Fund. Direct relations with this Fund began only in June of this year; during these six months up to last meeting the total amount received had been $5198.40, of which there had been remitted $5612.11, again an adverse balance of $413.71. In this case subscriptions since received and banked have transformed this debit balance into a credit balance of $850.79.

When the amounts received to-day are added to this balance, the Association will be in a position to send a further remittance of £100.

The following amounts will, therefore, be sent forward by next mail to the various Funds named:

Officers' Families' Fund . £100
British Red Cross . . . £100
Prince of Wales's Fund . £350

The following articles have been received for the soldiers:

Mrs. Campbell Getty and Miss Foster, 9 prs. socks.

SECOND AEROPLANE FUND

To be Closed

FINAL $1,500 REQUIRED

The Committee of the British Society now feel that this fund has been before the public sufficiently long and are desirous of bringing it to a close. There are two kinds of aeroplanes used in the British Army, costing $1500 and £2250, respectively. Owing to the immediate magnificent response when the scheme was first started the larger amount was oversubscribed in the short space of a month and consequently the more expensive machine was selected for the "River Plate No. 1." but the Committee consider it advisable to confine their efforts to raising the sum necessary to purchase the cheaper machine as the community's second donation to the aerial fleet. As per subtended statement, only about $1500 are required to bring the total subscribed to $17,000, the approximate cost, with expenses, of the £1500 aeroplane. It is, therefore, confidently expected that this amount will be forthcoming in the next three or four days, when the corresponding remittance can be cabled home. All those who have not already subscribed are therefore advised to send in their donations at once to the Hon. Treasurer, W. Watson, Calle Cangallo No. 536. Club Secretaries and friends who have collecting lists are also requested to return same with their collections as soon as possible.

AT THE DARDENELLES

ARGENTINE VOLUNTEER WOUNDED.

Trooper Joseph J. Dunne, of the Royal Bucks Hussars, was wounded in the heavy fighting at the Dardanelles on August 21. Mr. Dunne is well known in Buenos Aires, where he resided prior to leaving for England in September of last year in order to volunteer for active service.

TROOPER JOSEPH J. DUNNE

The son of a Dublin solicitor, it was his original intention to enlist in the South Irish Horse; subsequently, however, he entered the Bucks Hussars, with whom he was despatched to the Gallipoli Peninsula. His many friends in the Capital will wish him a speedy recovery.

TOBACCO FOR THE TROOPS

THE BRITISH SOLDIER'S GRATITUDE FOR SMOKES.

The following letters have been received by Uruguayan subscribers to the funds for furnishing tobacco and cigarettes to the men on active service:—

13/10/15.

Mrs. Halstead, Peñarol,

Montevideo.

Dear Madam,

It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you this postcard to thank you on behalf of my Section (8 men) for the tobacco and cigarettes you so kindly helped to send us ever so much as this is the first time we have had such luck. I must say it came as a great comfort to us as a good smoke is worth its weight in gold.

We are having a very trying time but we hope to finish the job soon. Thanking you once again,

Yours sincerely,

SEAMEN'S TOBACCO FUND

FINE TOTAL OF GENEROUS EFFORT.

Another meeting of the Seamen's Tobacco Fund, Mr. A. G. Pruden in the chair, was held on Nov. 12 at the Seamen's Mission for the soldiers on the various fronts. Since August 6, including this week's contribution of $356.4, the large total of $4,119.37 has been raised, which speaks well for the generosity of the seafarers towards their combatant brothers. Last week's total was composed of $180 from s.s. Hoskins, $162.40 from a neutral ship, and $9 from s.s. Goodwood. It has been decided to send $50 to the Gallipoli Expedition.

Further large cards have been printed, bearing the legend,

"Sailors and Soldiers. Buenos Aires British steamers. Tobacco for Tommy."

The co-operation of shipmasters is particularly solicited. Permission has been kindly granted to place these in various offices much restored to by gentlemen following the sea, including Captain McCauley's and that of Mr. Wilfred Deacon.

The fund has been supplied by entirely voluntary effort, and is very creditable to all concerned. The men in the trenches will rise up and call them blessed.

REAL FAME

FROM "PUNCH" (LONDON)

"The Germans declared that submarine captains had been ordered not to sink passenger vessels and undertook to adopt the greatest precautions to have the lives of passengers."

The Standard, (Buenos Aires). Truth will out, even in a misprint.

RED CROSS FUNDS

DANCE AT LA PLATA.

In aid of the British Red Cross Fund, a grand dance was held recently in the La Gauloise Hall, La Plata. The function was a magnificent success, both financially and socially.

In La Plata they can do things just as well as in Buenos Aires. The hall was beautifully decorated with palms, flowers and bunting, not forgetting a fine arrangement of Japanese lanterns.

All the prominent people of the district were there, to help the great cause of humanity. Included amongst many others, whose names could not be obtained, were representatives of the following families:—Puleston, Lindop, Gordon, Wilson, Osborn, Robinson, Fletcher, Birkell, Armour, Gonzalez, Pugh, Parkins, Batholomew, Bufaur, Purdall, Woolfe, Figueria, Sarmiento, Camwell, Owen, Neave, Brooks, Sanchez, Viamonte, Ortiz de Rozas, Brown, Loeffler, Walker, Roche, Smith, Libby, Yeomans, Quirk, Maxwell, Hughes, Seligmann, Walbeben, Griffiths, Morrison, Wakefield, McCleod, Lewis, Thornton, Graham, Churchouse, etc.

The net proceeds amounted to $1334.50, made up by the following items:

Dance Tickets Sold	$789.00
Donation by Mr. Pryor	25.00
Raffle for Cake	306.00
Auction for Cake	115.00
Sale of Poems	20.00
Sale of Refreshments, etc.	189.50
	1444.50
Less Expenses	110.00
	$1,334.50

The cake was presented by Capt. Corbold, and officers of the R.M.S. Deseado, and shows what can be done on board a Royal Mail liner. It weighed between 30 and 40 lbs. The icing was a work of art, and the chief baker, who made it is a master of his craft. Firstly, this was raffled for and won by Miss McCloud. Miss McCloud not caring to carry home such a large piece of pastry, decided to have it sold by auction. Mr. Jack Graham at once came forward to act as auctioneer, it eventually being knocked down to Mr. Sidney Puleston for $115.00, realising in all $421.

Mr. G. de St. Ouen donated some very fine poetry, of which he is the author, and this sold for $20.

After a most enjoyable evening everyone left entirely satisfied at the way in which the arrangements were carried out.

SMALLPOX IN RIO GRANDE

A SERIOUS OUTBREAK.

Considerable uneasiness is being felt on account of a serious outbreak of small-pox in Rio Grande, Brazil.

Some cases occurred a few months ago, and owing to the complete lack of proper medical attention and treatment, the disease has spread to somewhat alarming proportions. During the past three months over 1,000 cases have been notified, and the proportion of fatal ones is inordinately high.

In certain rural districts something like panic is obtaining, which is tending to increase the spread of the disease.

It is being called to the attention of the Argentine Government that several families have already left the stricken area and gone across the borders into Entre Rios, Corrientes and Misiones.

Great precautions are being taken on the frontier by the Uruguayan Government, and that of this Republic should do likewise and protect the interests of its people.

The matter is considered a grave one, and the National Council of Hygiene has drawn the attention of the Government to it.

A LONDON LETTER

TO THE BRITISH PATRIOTIC COMMITTEE IN URUGUAY

(Exclusively Communicated)

London, October 12, 1915.

Bulgarian Treachery.

As was to be expected from the past relations of the two countries, the defection of Bulgaria from the cause to which England has pledged her fortunes has fallen on Gladstone's fellow countrymen with a sense of bitter disappointment. Next to the treacherous invasion of Belgium at the outset of hostilities, nothing in the war has caused a greater shock to public sentiment. Of the military and political significance of the event much is being written and said by professional students of strategy, mostly of a cheerful character. All are agreed, for instance, that the new arrangement of forces in the Balkans combined with the invasion of Serbia by German-led troops involves the end of German hopes of a separate peace with Russia. While Austria alone was challenging Russia's place in Slavdom—and incidentally suffering defeat and humiliation in the process—Berlin might fondly imagine that there was still some chance of a purely German settlement with Petrograd. No such day-dreams are possible now. In a sense it is fortunate that the awakening should have come just at this moment—that is to say, at a period of the war when the Allies are reaching the zenith of their power and when Russia is again gathering up her inexhaustible might and preparing to repeat the resounding blow which gave her so much renown in the earlier stages of the war.

Political Ingratitude.

Meanwhile, it is the ethical aspect of the new development that has chiefly stirred feeling here. In the House of Lords, the other day, Lord Cromer, one of the most sagacious and discreet of modern constructive statesmen, referred to the reported defection of Bulgaria in terms of incredulous horror. How was it possible, he asked, that Bulgar and Turk—the persecuted and the persecutor—could join in an attack on Russia, the father and liberator of Slavdom, and on England, the historic champion of the rights of small nationalities? According to Lord Cromer, such a conjunction on the part of Bulgaria would be the blackest and basest act of political ingratitude that the world had ever known. Yet it is precisely this terrible crime which is now attributed to the Bulgarian Government—for even still England hesitates to put the responsibility on the Bulgarian people. To men not yet old, it seems only a few years since Russia launched her war of liberation against Turkey, and since Gladstone warned the latter Power to depart for ever from the blood-stained theatre of her anti-Christian tyrannies. Yet to-day the tyrannies and the wholesale slaughter of Christians are again in unrestrained activity, and the Bulgarian martyr of forty years ago is seen complacently clasping the hand of the unchanging oppressor!

The Balkans Problem.

For the difficulties of Bulgaria's neighbours under the new condition of things the fullest sympathy is entertained. Criticism of the uncertainties of Greek diplomacy is restrained, and, on the whole, well informed. It is generally felt that the relative war positions of the Central Powers and the Quadruple Entente are not yet clearly understood in neutral countries. Naturally, the Russian reverses in Poland and the slow progress made by the Anglo-French troops in the Dardanelles have monopolised the attention of neighbouring onlookers, and have led to conclusions which, although erroneous, are apt in themselves to prejudice the Allied cause. Little is said even in England, and consequently not much more can be known abroad, of the vital and universal influence exercised on the war by British naval power, which in truth is shaping and commanding the fortunes of battle on every sea in the world and on great territories of dry land as well. Moreover, every day that passes is adding to the resources of the Allies in men, munitions, ships and money, and is bringing nearer the time when on every front their numbers and supplies must be greatly superior to those of their adversaries. Recent incidents, both in Russia and Flanders, have doubtless tended to correct some unfavourable and too hasty impressions of the military position in those countries, although, unfortunately, not enough has yet been done to convince Bulgaria that she is flying to the succour of the wrong "victor." Before long there will be still more energetic efforts in the same and other fields of action, when neutrals who have hitherto firmly refused to be misled by transitory appearances may be expected to receive abundant cause for self-congratulation.

Needless to say, one of those fields of action will be the area of the new Balkan war. No regrets due to Bulgaria's cynical repudiation of old ties and traditions of friendship will be permitted to interfere with the discharge of Sir Edward Grey's recent pledge on behalf of the Entente Powers.

Landing at Salonica.

Popular sympathy in this country has become more strongly enlisted than ever on the side of Serbia and in the cause of Balkan freedom, as may be seen from the significant fact that almost the only comment passed on the despatch of British troops via Salonica takes the form of a general and vigorous exhortation to the Government to send more and yet more such reinforcements. It will be interesting to see what Greece says to the characteristic German suggestion that the British landing at Salonica is certain to be followed by a British annexation of the port. History, it seems, teaches that "where England has once planted her foot she generally stays." This may be true of those lost German colonies on which England has lately planted her foot, but the Greeks know too full well the part played by England in the drama of modern Greece to suspect of her good faith. If Germany has forgotten how England withdrew from the Ionian Islands in favour of their rightful rulers, Greece may be credited with a more retentive memory of that historic and happy incident.

The Armenian Atrocities.

With the widening of the area of war, the need for fresh enrolments in the armies raised by Lord Kitchener is becoming more pressing. Voluntary effort is still expected to produce the men required, but there appears to be a general understanding that if sufficient volunteer recruits fail to come forward, the country should be asked to impose some form of compulsory service. In either event, the men will be forthcoming just as they have been in the past in response to each successive call. According to one of the Labour spokesmen, we ought to be recruiting about 30,000 men a week for some time to come. Whether this is an authorised estimate is uncertain, but the numbers specified should be easily within the compass of a voluntary rally. From the figures recently disclosed by the Prime Minister, it is known that in some months during the past year twice or three times the number of recruits now required within each week must have flocked voluntarily to the flag. Indeed, there has never been a time, except at the bidding of the War Office (and then only for a breathing space), when the fountain of military ardour has shown any sign of running dry. Reports from abroad show that feeling in neutral countries has been deeply stirred by Lord Bryce's revelations in the House of Lords of the fate of unhappy Armenia. Not since the time of Tamerlane, we are told, has there been such a cold-blooded extermination of humanity as in this latest Turkish holocaust, the victims of which are stated to number no less than 800,000. NEW PORT WORKS

Government's Decision and Threat

MESSRS WALKERS' ATTITUDE

The Government decision in respect to the New Port Works has at last been given. At a meeting held on Monday between the Minister of Public Works and Home Affairs, which was reported in the columns of this paper, but the result of which was somewhat indefinite, it was decided to recommend the President of the Republic to sign the necessary demand, that the firm of Messrs. C. H. Walker and Sons should continue the construction of the work as per contract, and with the statement that the Government could not see their way to consider as acceptable the reasons of the contracting firm to discontinue the work.

This document has been prepared with the consent of the President, and in case the firm cannot see their way to accept these terms the Government will charge them with all the obligations which they claim the contract originally established.

THE HERALD is in a position to state that the firm of Messrs. C. H. Walker and Sons will allow the Government to do, in this respect, as it pleases. The work will not be continued by them.

MADMAN DETAINED IN CALLE FLORIDA

EXTRAORDINARY BEHAVIOUR EXCITES CURIOSITY.

Extraordinary behaviour on the part of an Argentine, Leon C. Fernandez by name, at the corner of Corrientes and Florida attracted the attention of the policeman on duty there last evening. Fernandez commenced making a series of most mysterious signs while gazing into space with a vacant expression on his face. Every now and again he would gesticulate wildly and then once more relapse into his former mystic performance.

After watching him for some time the policeman approached and ask him what he was doing. The question was repeated many times without an answer being forthcoming. At last in a deep voice he replied, that he had just arrived at Constitución Station from the unknown world and declared himself to be the representative of Christ sent to alleviate to misery of the world.

The policeman conducted him to the Comisaria, where he is detained.

Cromer, who is certainly not a Turcophobe, joins with Lord Bryce and Lord Crewe in appealing to civilisation throughout the world to demand retribution for the massacre, or at least to call on Germany to use her influence with Turkey to stop them. Apparently, it is still possible to do some good in this way; a remnant of the race survives and may yet be rescued from the sword and bludgeon. Whether Germany can be persuaded to interfere seems doubtful. One of her writers speaks of the Armenians in contemptuous and callous terms as a riotous and bloodthirsty people, and expressed warm approval of Turkey's method of dealing with them. Can such outrageous sentiments represent the official German attitude? From the friendly yet vigorous remonstrances formulated by the United States, it would seem that the greatest of neutral Powers is not yet convinced of German sympathy with the massacre, while, on the other hand, it almost looks as if Germany were ashamed to commit herself on the subject. Consequently, one is encouraged to hope, albeit very faintly, that neutral pressure may yet enjoy one of its few successes in this tragic field.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

GERMAN INFLUENCE IN ASIA MINOR

THE "ERROR" ? OF THE DARDANELLES

(By a Correspondent).

Following the war as one must do in Buenos Aires solely through the Press, eked out by a few private letters from friends at the front, letters that, though interesting to a degree, are utterly valueless when endeavouring to gain some conclusion as to how things are really going, it would seem at first sight hopeless to try and trace the course of the war, much less to arrive at any intelligent idea of the probable course of future events. Yet, given the cosmopolitan nature of this city, its constant communication with all parts of Europe—and many parts of Asia and Africa—its polyglot press supplementing wealthy and powerful native journals, it is not too much to say that in all likelihood one can get a better general impression of the war in Buenos Aires, than in many countries very much nearer to the danger zone.

Germany in the Near East.

It is always easy to be wise after the event, and now that Germany has shown her hand so completely in the Levant, anyone, without being in the least a student of history, can turn round and say that her action in the Balkans, Turkey, and Asia Minor, was just what everyone expected. As a matter of fact it is not what everyone expected. Among all Englishmen who have mixed with Mohammedan races there exists the feeling that Turkey has been gulled by Germany, and that the Moslemic forces of the world are actually on the side of the Allies. This is probably true; if it were not so, then the repeated attempts of German agents to stir up trouble in India and Egypt would have been successful. But it is not enough to rely on past prestige in the Mohammedan world; Islam is pre-eminently the religion of the sword, and the advance of the Germano-Turkish forces in the Balkans is bound to wake fresh fervour in the Turkish nation. It is in the highest degree significant that little or nothing has been done by the Allies towards carrying the war into Asia Minor. Nothing further has been heard of the attacks on Smyrna or Beirut, whilst reports from various sources all tend to show that the Turkish troops in Palestine and Syria are far better equipped and ready for service than they were at the outset of the war. In fact it is reasonable to suppose that Germany's marvellous productivity has been especially devoted to supplying her allies with weapons and ammunition in view of future developments.

The "Error"? of the Dardanelles.

Does this intense German activity in the Near East give the real clue to the reason for the stern and apparently fruitless attack on the Narrows? Was it known in high quarters that success at the best was highly problematical, and that apparent failure was almost a certainty? No-one can give any categorical reply to this question, but it is reasonable to surmise that at the eleventh hour Great Britain and France realised that something more than mere bombast lay behind the German boast that Asia Minor was hers for the taking. Her marvellous railway system had already been introduced, the whole country had been surveyed, explored, and exploited, the while Great Britain had refused to take any interest in a part of the world whose day, she considered, was over and done with. The story of the Baghdad line is too long to be told here. Germany nearly finished it; she did lay all the lines that are of any importance in Asia Minor; last, but not least, she did impress the Bedouin and the outlying Kurdish tribes with the knowledge that England was not the only progressive industrial power interested in the East. Is it not therefore reasonable to suppose that the attack on the Dardanelles was primarily calculated to draw troops from Asia Minor and the Mesopotamian region, at the same time diminishing the fear of an attack on Egypt? If this was the case, then the objective aimed at has been partially achieved. The Persian Gulf expedition has been but little heard of, but it will be found to have done most important work in consolidating British influence and upholding the prestige of British arms at a point where such prestige is of immediate importance. The attack on Egypt appears to have been a German mistake, or else it was but in the nature of a reconnaissance in force. And if there is any truth in the statement that the Canal is to be closed for military reasons, the while defensive works are carried out, it may be that a new expedition to Egypt is being planned by the enemy.

Counteracting Past Errors.

Whether the price paid for this diversion has not been too heavy is still matter for discussion. Mr. Demetrius C. Boulger, the well-known publicist, writing in the Graphic of Oct. 16, is of opinion that it has been. He remarks that "everyone who thinks a moment must realise the enormous advantage Germany has gained in this world-shaking struggle by her ascendancy in Turkey, due solely to the foolishness of British policy. . . . when the full story of the German diplomatic triumph at Constantinople comes to be set forth in history, tears will be shed over the recital of our foolishness in Turkey, and of the bitter loss it entailed. Let the final victory be what it may." These are strong words from a man who is no alarmist, published by one of the staidest journals in the Empire, but they contain the truth. Mistakes are however never entirely irremediable, and the present trend of the war seems to show that the errors of our policy in the Near East are being corrected, and that the entrance of Bulgaria into the war may not prove all beneficial to the Teuton cause. Kitchener's journey to the Near East may mean the Balkans; it is far more probable that Egypt is his real objective, and that from Cairo he will control the course of the Eastern war far more effectively than ever it could be followed from Whitehall. Remembering that Kitchener has shown himself to be one of the great master minds of the Orient, a being with a curious affinity to her ancient ways; at once administrator, legislator, and dictator, it is reasonable to suppose that Germany's great move to the East will be checked, and her plots be anticipated almost ere they are hatched, by a man whose record of subtlety and finesse in the mazes of Eastern politics has almost been overaid and forgotten by his subsequent achievements under Western skies.

MURDER IN THE FRENCH BANK

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR AT CHIVILCOY.

On November 13 an affair occurred at Chivilcoy in the Province of Buenos Aires, which has caused a considerable sensation on account of the principal actors in the drama, being persons very well known in the locality.

Sr. Vicente P. Roldan held a position in the French Bank in Chivilcoy and Sr. Juan Antonio Musso was also engaged there in the treasury department.

At 10.20 yesterday morning the latter shot Sr. Roldan, killing him instantly. Sr. Musso immediately walked to the police station and gave himself up.

No motive has yet been ascribed to the deed which remains shrouded in mystery and as no witnesses were present it is possible that the real truth will never be known.

AN ALLIED WAR COUNCIL

FAMOUS SUFFRAGIST'S VIEWS

CONFIRMED BY GOVERNMENT ACTION

The Suffragette, the famous journal of the most militant suffrage party in England, has been changed to Britannia, under the editorship of Miss Christabel Pankhurst.

In the first issue of October 15 there are several articles of striking interest, not dealing with suffrage, but covering questions of vital importance regarding the conduct of the war. One article in particular entitled "The Nation in Danger," is written by Miss Pankhurst, and the accuracy of the views expressed is incontestable, now that Mr. Asquith himself has just announced the intention to form what Miss Pankhurst advocates—an allied war council. Portion of the article referred to is given as follows:—

The candid Bernhardt, the Kaiser's chief scribe, whose book published before the war gave so accurate a warning to the world of the war that was to come, has now given us a new warning which it is life and death to us to heed.

Writing of "The Mistakes of the Allies," he makes it clear that in his opinion Germany's cause would be lost if the various Allied Nations knew how to co-ordinate their efforts. He points out that if Great Britain had prepared for the war instead of trusting to the military efforts that other countries would make; if Italy had entered the war at the beginning; if Russia had been fully equipped and furnished with munitions, then much would have been changed. "Belgium," he says, "was conquered before the French and the English were able to come to her aid."

The Bernhardt criticism is summed up in these words: "THE POWERS OF THE QUADRUPLE ENTENTE HAVE COMMITTED THE STRATEGIC FAULT OF NOT CO-ORDINATING THEIR ACTION."

Bernhardt is right in this!

The Allies have everything on their side. They have first and foremost a just cause. They have numbers. They have wealth. They have resources of all kinds. They have by far the greater store of ability and enthusiasm at their service. Then why cannot better results be shown at the present hour?

Bernhardt has given us the reason: Want of co-ordination in policy and action!

To this reason we would add at least two others. These are, firstly, non-realisation in Great Britain of the meaning of the war, especially non-realisation at our Foreign Office! The second reason is German influence in our midst, weakening us financially and especially weakening us diplomatically! German influence in its most dangerous form consists in the presence of men of German origin as officials in Government offices and even in the Foreign Office itself.

The lack of due co-ordination is being repaired in a partial way. There is at long last some concerted action with regard to obtaining supplies. Concerted action is being arranged in the matter of munition making, at least as between France and Britain. The lay observer hopes that military co-operation and co-ordination will become more and more perfect.

But first and foremost and above all comes the need of diplomatic co-ordination. There our weakness is greatest! There is the real danger of a defeat of the Allies! Under present conditions the Allies by means of German intrigue might even be played off one against another. Their counsels can by German intrigue be befogged and divided. Necessary action can be delayed or diminished in its intensity.

Two things are needed. First the resignations from the Foreign Office demanded on the previous page. (Those of Sir Edward Grey and Sir

NON-COMBATANTS ABROAD

THEIR DUTY TO THE EMPIRE

GERMAN EFFORTS IN ARGENTINA

The longer the war lasts, the clearer does one see that new forces must be brought into play if the cause of the Allies is to triumph. And as those of us who belong to the Allies are firmly convinced that the fight is not only material but also spiritual, it naturally follows that we must endeavour to checkmate the faults to which we ourselves are subject, in order that these faults may not prejudice the final issue. Those of us who are not in the fighting line can do their share of the work here—but not by going about their ordinary work and pleasure in the firm belief that their duty has been complied with in the shape of a few subscriptions and regular attendance at the various agreeable fetes whose proceeds are dedicated to the war funds.

We still rate the Teuton spirit too low. The German too has been transfigured by this war. We may think, but he knows that its result is a matter of life and death to his race. Hence every German, and the son of every German, is an ardent missionary for the cause. Sometimes one feels that as a race we have been stricken with blindness in this matter of the Teutonic advance. Even to-day one meets British people who will tell you that so and so is really quite a decent fellow, though a German. "Of course we do not talk about the war, but I'm sure he doesn't approve of what has gone on in Belgium." And so on and so forth. In every walk of life it is the same story. The Teuton is hanging on desperately to his trade entrenchments. Naturalisation, marriage, outward and apparent betrayal of his country, all are weapons to be used to the same end. Fifteen months ago such a remark would read like foolish raving, but let any sentient person think for a little, and then say whether it is beside the mark. The battle is raging in South America far more fiercely than the majority of the British community have any idea—and the advantage is not all on our side. It is to be presumed that the representatives of the British Government are watching the strife, and that London is informed of the course of events. But it is only reasonable to suppose that our home authorities, desperately overworked as they must be, count on wealthy and influential British communities abroad in neutral lands to keep up the honour of the flag without express direction or indication from headquarters. The laws of neutrality must be observed, that goes without saying, but do we, as a community, go as far within those laws as does the enemy?

The time-server and the little man, with no thought beyond his immediate and petty interests will not thank you for criticism. Officialdom, though at home gradually escaping from the centuries of red tape wherein it has been swaddled, has still to regain the use of its limbs. The caste principle still reigns supreme, and nowhere is it stronger than in British communities that have for many years been out of direct touch with home affairs. There are however evident signs that a great reaction is coming, here as elsewhere. We shall win. Yes. But only by realising that the duty is individual and present. There is a time to keep silent; there is also a time to speak and to act. That time is now in so far as the British community in Argentina is concerned.

Mainly for Women

Conducted by "Egeria"

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

In England a Society has been formed, I understand, to establish a claim for the people—citizens and women—(alas for the distinction!) to have a voice, when the war is finished, in the peace settlements.

Although the "people" are supposed to have much control in the settlements of big questions, through their Parliaments, they really have to trust to the leaders, who very often fail, either from incompetence or lack of courage or some other reason, which does not tend to satisfy; and the result is often disaster. For instance, it would be much more economic if two emperors, or kings, or chiefs, whatever they may be called, who cannot agree upon some national matter, should settle the question between themselves—if they haven't the mental ability to arrange things, and if they must shed blood, like savages, let them both go to it, and let the best man win. What a saving it would mean of money as well as of people.

Of course, the national machinery is not run this way, it is much too simple, too primitive; there must be the spending of millions of money, the suffering of millions of people when a ruler of to-day gets swollen head and wants the moon!

There are many who discuss the peace settlements from a purely personal point of view. They suggest that so many men being killed and maimed, and so many more women than can be mated being on hand, the possibility of polygamy becoming a national institution is by no means remote. There are many men to whom the system might appeal—wives being cheaper, as a rule, than mistresses; but the women, I am sure, will have none of it. For one thing, it is a fallacy to suppose such a thing to be an economic necessity; and for another the women will not put themselves into further bondage by admitting such inequality. Again Hagar and Sarah must ever stand apart, until the Sarahs change from that attitude adopted by Abraham's spouse, which they have not done up to date! And wife No. II would always be the Hagar to every Sarah in existence; and the latter, who have changed their attitude considerably since the driving forth into the wilderness, would not meekly submit to be sent forth with her man-child to perish. She would have as her war-cry, "Equal rights with women" instead of "Equal right for women." There are many amendments which may be made to the present marriage system, and which will thereby ensure an increased birth-rate, instead of adopting polygamy as an institution. Was it not Mahomet who granted his followers permission to have four wives, and was it not Christ who advocated monogamy? And are we Christians or Mahometans? There might, for instance, be some effort to decrease the death rate of children, as well as to increase the birth-rate. Infant welfare might indeed become a national institution in England before the "polygamous" question gets a turn—and all to England's benefit.

Mother-craft would be a good profession for women; but the nation must take up the burden of the instruction. The British Overseas Dominions are alive to the importance of this question. In New Zealand, where the laws are made by women as well as by men, infant mortality is becoming a thing of the past; also Australia is following suit. Life is the wealth of a nation, a fact well known to Germany, whose population is her chief national asset; and if the British nation will set about instructing women in mother-craft, its national importance will increase, and it will also ease off its worry about the birth-rate. Why not conserve and preserve the lives they have, instead of trying to raise hostages for future ones?

THE SWANS OF BRUGES

A pretty little story is told by Mr. Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium in the New York "Sun."

He says that he passed through Bruges in June of 1914, and between trains idled about the time-blackened canals. Like other travellers familiar with the city, he missed the chief feature to the beauty of the waterways—the swans. In former years scores of these birds had manoeuvred in white fleets over the chief canals.

When he asked what had become of them another traveller informed him that he had read something in a Bruges newspaper about a young woman of the city, who had attempted to take up the matter of the swans with the city officials. Her efforts toward restocking the canals had of late been so persistent that they had led to editorial comments.

In June there was little of the unusual to occupy the minds of the people of Bruges, and the swan girl, as they called her, held public attention. Her story as told in the papers was to the effect that not for centuries had the number of swans run so low; that there was an ancient papal mandate which required the municipality to preserve not less than forty swans on the canals; that disobedience of the mandate entailed danger to the city. The girl called upon Bruges to restore the required number of swans for the sake of the city's welfare. There were many smiles at her efforts.

This was a story to attract the attention of the American Minister. He investigated it, and found that there was indeed a document, dated in the fifteenth century, which recorded the fact that a man whose Flemish name corresponded to Longneck in English had been drawn and quartered; that after his death unequivocal evidence had demonstrated his innocence of the crime for which he had suffered, and that the penitent city had prevailed upon its burgo-master to send to the Pope to ascertain what might be done in the way of penance.

The answer of the Pope was that forty swans should be cared for by the city of Bruges for a period of five centuries. Forty birds was possibly suggested by the reported age of the executed man, and his name Longneck doubtless suggested the swans. The penalty for any lapse on the part of the municipality was forfeiture of freedom, government and language.

The swan girl believed this legend. The American Minister was not surprised, however, to find the city fathers of the twentieth century proof against the arguments.

Brand Whitlock was tremendously occupied a few weeks afterward saving cities and gathering his own countrymen and other people in places of safety. It was not until the grey German hosts were advancing upon Bruges that he recalled the swan girl and the legend. After the city had changed hands he learned that the execution of Longneck had actually occurred in 1414. The penalty named in the legend had therefore been inflicted within the time limit of five centuries.

A NEW MISTRESS FOR WHITE HOUSE

The marriage of President Wilson and Mrs. Galt is to take place next month, and already the American Press is full of details of the "Presidential Romance," as it is called. "Leslie's Weekly" describes in the following terms the story of the meeting and engagement which are to give the White House a new mistress:—

The presidential romance began when Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt was introduced to the President's daughters, shortly after the death of their mother, August 6, 1914. She at once became a favourite at the White House and by the end of last winter the President was paying her marked attention: Mrs. Galt was born at Wytheville, Va., the daughter of William H. Bolling, of the branch of that family which traces its ancestry back to Pocahontas. She has three sisters and four brothers, all of whom are expected to attend the wedding. Mrs. Galt was educated at the Powell School for Girls in Richmond. She was married in 1896 to Norman Galt, of the well-known firm of Jewellers in Washington. He died eight years ago leaving her rich, beautiful and childless. She is a brunette, 38 years old and an Episcopalian, while the President is 50, fair and a Presbyterian. Since her husband's death Mrs. Galt has become the sole owner of the firm of which he was a member, and which is managed by her brothers. She is fond of horses, dogs and outdoor recreations, including baseball. She has never been ambitious of social distinction, is domestic in her tastes, and not an active suffragist. After the announcement of her engagement, she declined to be interviewed, saying: "I am very happy, but I am of no importance, and the less the newspapers print about me the more I shall appreciate it." The wedding will probably take place from Mrs. Galt's beautiful home at 1308 New Hampshire Avenue, Washington, or from St. Thomas' Church. Two Presidents have married while in office, Tyler at New York, and Cleveland in the White House. There have been fifteen White House brides, but Mrs. Galt, it is said, declined to be the sixteenth because she wanted her wedding to be quiet and informal. Washington, however, is anticipating a gay social season, following the close of the mourning period for the late Mrs. Wilson and the advent of a new mistress of the White House.

CHINESE WOMEN PHYSICIANS

"Women in China have an aversion to a male physician, and so we are training women practitioners in our school in Tientsin. We have done much in curing the diseases of women and children, and our work is really just commencing." In the purest English and with the mannerism and accent of an up-to-date college-bred American woman, Dr. Yamei Kin, Chinese woman and head of the Women's Government Hospital at Tientsin, told of the important work she is doing in North China to a paper representative in San Francisco.

Eight years ago, Dr. Yamei Kin, graduate of the old New York Infirmary for Women and Children, and holder of a record of three years' post-graduate work in New York hospitals, really founded the institution in North China, which has had an eventful career since that time. The money for the institution was furnished by the Chinese Government, and the Government takes a deep interest in the work.

There are two other Chinese women, graduate physicians, with Dr. Yamei Kin, in the hospital, besides a staff of twenty nurses. In addition to the work of caring for sick Chinese women and children, who come many miles to the hospital, training is given nurses, and many of these have afterwards gone to America to study medicine.

"I am on leave for a year," said Dr. Yamei. "I am going to spend some time in California, but the greater part of my leave will be spent in the East, where I shall visit hospitals. I shall also lecture in many places on the work we are doing in our hospital."

SOME WOMEN AND MANY THINGS

Not in the least of the social changes that the war has effected has been the rapid disappearance of the foreign waiter from the hotels, boarding-houses, and restaurants (says the "Daily Telegraph"). His place is being taken more and more by the trim, neat English waitress, and the transformation has many features of interest. Of course, the waiter of foreign extraction has not altogether ceased. Both Switzerland and Italy contribute largely to this class of worker, and those pertinacious people who have asked to see passports and birth certificates before sitting down to a meal have only given themselves in most cases some unnecessary trouble to satisfy their conscience. Moreover, those exceptionally competent to speak on such a matter expect to see in the next few weeks a considerable influx of waiters from these neutral and friendly countries. So far, however, they have not arrived, and the English waitress is establishing herself in quarters which three months ago would have none of her. She is to be found not only in London, but also in the residential hotels of the favourite coast resorts, which will be increasingly patronised as fog and gloom drive people out of the metropolises. Hotel employment agencies are advertising for her, and her entry into this class of work on the present wide scale must bring about changes and new adjustments in the market of feminine labour. What these may ultimately result in it is still too early to predict.

Mrs. Alfred Deakin, of Sydney, gave much time to the baby clinic section in the educational palace at the San Francisco Exhibition. Dr. Anna Bradley, a notable American woman doctor, was in charge. All her work was done in a glass-walled room, standing some feet away from a circular railway. Her patients ranged from infants of a few days to children of twelve.

A cheer for Denmark's new franchise law broke forth from the strangers' gallery on the historic April 23, when the Bill was passed in the Danish Folkething. The culprit who broke the traditional silence of the Chamber was the seventy-nine years old Fru Jutta Bojsen-Moller. She was the veteran champion for the women's franchise movement in Denmark.

A married pair are at present in a military hospital in Moscow, both suffering from wounds received in battle. The husband was a university student when was broke out, says "Jus Suffragii," and the wife held an ambulance certificate. When he was called out she enlisted as his brother in the same company. They went through the utmost danger and hardship together without flinching, and were wounded together in a frontal attack. The wife has received the St. George's Cross.

Serbia is said to be the one country in the civilised world in which there are no women over twenty years of age unmarried. This is given as the reason why there is such a lack of nurses for the Red Cross work of the Serbian Army. Not only are the women all married and engaged in caring for their families, but the large majority of them live on small farms and are busy producing food for the nation as well as for the army.

A remarkable war-time example of adaptation to environment is provided (says the "Globe") by the girls who have replaced the boys and young men at so many railway bookstalls. They have not only learned their duties in a surprising short time, but have even picked up the peculiar intonation which is de rigueur for crying newspapers. To hear a very young girl, with hair prematurely done up, intoning at the top of her voice in the correct professional manner, is one of the amusements of London just now.

Land of Lilliput.

Conducted by Egeria

My dear Lilliputians,

Last week I told you something about the coins of Belgium, and this week I will write something about the collecting of postage stamps.

Of course collecting anything except coin of the realm which we all want to collect more or less is a hobby; but there are hobbies which may prove otherwise than expensive ones. And collecting postage stamps is one; and many people have made a lot of money at it. For instance the old stamps of Mauritius, Cape of Good Hope, and the Australian States are worth small fortunes. I knew a bank manager in one of the latter, who having many facilities for "getting hold of" old Western Australian stamps sold his collections from time to time for several hundreds of pounds each time—and the stamps cost him practically nothing. Government officials, too, have made good use of their opportunities in seeing that the stamps of high values were not carted away in the waste paper baskets.

Besides the monetary value of the hobby of stamp collecting, there are others. It is an easy and interesting method of learning geography and history. I knew a Lilliputian who absolutely could not "learn" geography, he had no memory for names; but following the example of a schoolmate he started to collect stamps, and having an album given to him for a birthday present, he spent hours in arranging and classifying his stamps, and so he became so interested that finally he knew more about geography and history than any of his classmates. Because his memory had become stimulated through interest; and instead of trying to commit a lot of names of towns and rivers, mountains and lakes to memory, he stored it with interesting stories about the towns which were on the rivers and near the mountains through his postage stamps.

The war is having a very great influence over the postage stamps business, naturally, and there will be quite a trade after the war in the stamps issued by countries during this period. There have been many Charity postal stamps of the past year; but neither Great Britain nor Germany has issued one. There have been 99 Charity stamps issued, 48 by the Allies, 44 by the enemy, and 7 by the neutral countries. France, her colonies and dependencies have issued 32 stamps which, in addition to serving as postage stamps, represent a contribution of a "sou" per stamp to the French Red Cross organisation. Belgium has issued nine (11, counting the scarce perforation varieties), and Russia five. Of the enemy issues in this class the total of 44 is divided as follows:—Hungary 34, Austria 7, Bosnia 2, Turkey 1. The solitary Turkish stamp was for the benefit of the Sultan's navy. The neutral issues are those of Dutch Indies (three) and Rumania (four), the latter being in the nature of a surtax on letters, etc., obligatory on letters originating in Rumania, the extra sum going to the "Soldiers Families' Aid Society" for the assistance of the dependents of soldiers called to the service of their country. Canada's war tax stamps are not in the same class as they are purely for the purpose of a tax to help to meet the costs of the war.

The total of 237 war stamps in 12 months of fighting seems large, but this is a minimum figure, to which later information may yet add (says an English paper). It may be that recent provisional stamps of the Dominican Republic may be due to the war, as the country, adjoining the much-disturbed Haytian Republic, has its stamps printed in Germany. A letter to hand this week is prepaid with a variety of new provisionals, and later information will probably show that these ought to be added to the total of war issues for the year ended August 4, 1915.

This prolific output of new stamps may be exceeded during the second year of the war. Printers who have eked out their stocks of colour bases for one year after the closing of Germany's oversea trade may not be able to eke out the supplies for much longer. Turkey, Siam, the Dominican Republic, Liberia, and possibly other States will require entirely new stamps. Bulgaria is planning a charity tax issue on the same lines as the "Timbru de ajutor" series of Rumania, and other neutrals are likely to issue stamps for tax or philanthropic purposes before another year is out. There are still many French colonial Red Cross stamps expected, and Russia is planning some changes in her patriotic fund stamps. The experience of the first and second Balkan wars also holds out a promise of an excessive output of new stamps in the likely event of the entry of the presently neutral Balkan States into the conflict.

The story for this week is:—

WHEN JACKIE GOT IN MISCHIEF

Betty was left alone in the big farm kitchen with her big sister Nellie's baby boy. They all still called him a baby, although he was just over three, and took quite a look of looking after, as Betty knew only too well.

Though usually a very good-tempered, willing little girl, nine-year-old Betty gets quite cross that she had to spend the afternoon indoors looking after small Jackie, who was supposed to have shown signs of starting with measles. Betty had planned to go into the wood with her new prize book won in a composition in the paper that came to the farm every Friday afternoon.

It was market day, and Nellie herself a farmer's wife, had had to go to the market with the butter and eggs; and Lizzie, the big, strong girl, who looked after the farm for Betty's invalid mother, had also gone off to market.
